Civil Revn. Appln. No. 64 of 1928, Decided on 5th October 1928, from order of Dist. Judge., Wardha, D/- 4th January 1928, in Misc. Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1927.

* (a) Court-fees Act, S. 7, Cl. (9)—Redemption suit—Surplus profits claimed—Value of suit for jurisdiction and Court-fee is principal sum secured—Suits valuation Act, S. 8.

The value of a suit for redemption, even when surplus profits are also claimed, is for jurisdiction and Court-fee, the amount of principal expressed in the instrument of mortgage. 14 *C.P.L. * (b) Civil P. C., O. 34, Rr. 7, 8 and 9—Power of Court to grant decree for surplus—Relief being outcome of the statutory provisions—No Court-fee is payable—Court-fees.

The Civil P. C. gives a statutory jurisdiction to the Court to pass a decree for the surplus ; and ordinarily, for a relief which is an outcome of a statutory provision, no Court-fee is payable. For instance, where interest is decreed during the pendency of a suit, no Court-fee is charged, and as the surplus is the result of accounting directed by the Court under R. 7, O. 34, it cannot be separately charged for the purposes of Court-fees.

S. A. Ghadgay—for Non-Applicants.

Order.—This order also governs Civil Revn. No. 63 of 1928. The question submitted for our decision is as follows :

"What is the value of a suit for redemption, when surplus profits are also claimed, for (1) jurisdiction and (2) Court-fees ?

That is, whether merely the mortgage amount expressed in the mortgage or that amount and the amount of surplus claimed ?"

We have been referred to the case-law on the subject. In Deosthan of Sonegaon v. Mukunda (1),Ismay, J. C. held that in a suit for redemption the subject-matter of the suit is the charge created by the mortgage and the value of such subject-matter for the purposes of jurisdiction is the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument. In that case the plaintiff contended that the mortgage had been fully satisfied whereas the defendants claimed that a sum of nearly Rs. 8000 was still due to them. The learned Judge writes :

" The amount of fee payable under the Court-fees Act in a suit for redemption is computed according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage, and it seems to me that the same value may without any impropriety be adopted for the purposes of jurisdiction. "

In Ghulaji Teli v. Fakir Shah (2) Stanyon, A. J. C., observed inter alia :

" It seems to me that if the dictum contained in the case of Deosthan of Sonegaon v. Mukunda (1) is to be regarded as a hard and fast rule applicable to every redemption case, then difficulties are likely to arise. With great respect to the learned Judicial Commissioner who decided that case, I am unable to understand why a plaintiff in a redemption case who alleges that a larger sum than the principal sum remains due should not be obliged to seek a jurisdiction competent to try suits of the value of that sum. No doubt there is an anomaly in the jurisdiction valuation being placed below the Court-fee valuation and I agree that the minimum valuation for purposes of jurisdiction in a redemption suit should be the Court-fee valuation, since that would be the valuation in a case where the plaintiff alleged that nothing remained payable on the mortgage "

But the case is not really applicable to the one before us, for the Judge further states :

" But I do not think I am called on to discuss in the present case questions as to the mode of arriving at the correct jurisdiction value either in foreclosure or in redemption cases. "

The case of Kothiram v Ganpati (3) has been quoted, but it is hardly applicable In the well-known case of Huseni Khanam v Husain Khan (4) a suit which was one for redemption, but the plaintiffs in the plaint alleged that a large surplus was due to them and asked that this surplus should be paid to them—their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court held that no additional fee was payable on the surplus profits claimed , and that ruling has been followed by Sir Henry Drake Brockman, J C in Gopikisan v Sarabji (5) Baker, J C in Daulatram v Gulab Chand (6) held that in a redemption suit where a definite amount is claimed as surplus profits, the Court-fee payable is on the amount of principal due under the deed only and not also on the amount of surplus profits claimed ; and the same view was held by the Allahabad High Court in Chiddu Singh v Jhanjhan Rai (7), where it was held that when a suit is brought for redemption and a certain amount is claimed as surplus mesne profits, the plaintiff is not bound to pay Court-fees upon the surplus amount claimed in addition to the Court-fee on the principal amount secured by the mortgage

The only dissenting case that we can find is Civil Revn.No 275 of 1916, disposed of on 23-12-18 by Batten, A J. C But the learned Judge's attention does not seem to have been directed to O 34, Rr. 7, 8 and 9, Civil P. C. The last rule, which is a new one, provides for cases where nothing is found due or where the mortgagee has been overpaid as may well happen where he is in possession. The rule authorizes the Court to pass a decree, in a case where the defendant has been overpaid, directing the defendant to retransfer the property and to pay to the plaintiff the amount which may be found due to him Thus, the Civil Procedure Code gives a statutory jurisdiction to the Court to pass a decree for the surplus , and ordinarily, for a relief which is an outcome of a statutory provision, no Court-fee is payable For instance, where interest is decreed during the pendency of a suit, no Court-fee is charged, and as the surplus is the result of accounting directed by the Court under R 7, O 34, we think it cannot be separately charged for the purposes of Court-fee As observed in Husceni Khanam v Husain Khan (4), where the mortgagee is in possession, the suit is substantially one for accounts, and it would not cease to be so merely because the accounting shows a balance in favour of the plaintiff instead of that of the mortgagee In a case where the account discloses that money is due on the mortgage to the mortgagee and this sum is decreed in his favour, the decree is not made conditional on payment of Court-fee calculated on that amount We can see no reason why, if the account results in a surplus, as contemplated by R 9, O 34, being payable to the mortgagor, he should pay Court-fee for the same S 17, Court-fees Act does not conflict with this view as it contemplates separate Court-fees being payable on distinct subjects or distinct kinds of reliefs embraced in the same suit ; while here the cause of action is one, namely, the mortgage, and the surplus claimed is merely ancillary to the main relief of redemption We have no hesitation in holding that the value of the suit for redemption, when surplus profits are also claimed is for jurisdiction and Court-fee the same, namely, the principal expressed in the instrument of mortgage

Let the record be returned,

First Appeal No. 122 of 1926, Decided on 14th July 1928, from decree of Additional Dist. J, Bilaspur, D/- 30-9-1926.

* Hindu Law—Succession—Mitakshara —Preference of whole blood to half-blood is restricted to cases of brothers and their sons only.

Under the Mitakshara the preference of the whole blood to half-blood in inheritance is restricted to the cases of brothers and their sons only . 24 Bom. 317, Foll. . A.I R. 1926 Nag. 218 Diss. from, A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 81, Expl. [P 4 C 2]

H S. Gour and G P. Dick—for Respondents

Judgment —The relationship of the parties to the suit of which this appeal by the plaintiff Laldas and another by defendant 2, Bajrangdas (F' A No. 131 of 1926) arises is shown in the genealogical table (see p 5) attached to this judgment. In addition to the persons mentioned in that table two other members of the family survived Mahant Lakhmidas, a daughter Askuar Bai and a third widow Sonkuar Bai, both childless The dispute is over a part of an estate of 103 villages in the Bilaspur District known as Lormi Wasudeodas was the eldest son of Lakhmidas with Ramkrishnadas second and Bajrangdas third

Whether the sons of Lakhmidas ceased to form a joint Hindu family before the year 1901, as alleged by the plaintiff, or not is immaterial, as they certainly did cease to do so in that year, though the partition then made indicates that they had not separated before the death of Wasudeodas in 1899 as only two villages were allotted to his widow which she was to hold for her life only Early in 1901 Ramkrishnadas, the eldest surviving son of Lakmidas filed a suit against his three brothers and the widow of Wasudeodas claiming possession of all the 103 villages on the ground that they were an impartible estate passing to a single heir The case was compromised, and on 16th October 1901 a decree was passed in accordance with the agreement of the parties

The number of villages allotted to each person was as follows :

Ramkrishnadas 28, Bajrangdas 24, Garuddas 24, Laldas 23, Krishnapriya Bai 2, Sonkuar Bai 1 and Askuar Bai 1=103.

The numbers of the villages are of course not an exact measure of the relative values of the shares, but it appears that the portions of the three younger brothers were approximately equal while Ramkrishnadas as the eldest got a slightly larger share. The villages allotted to the ladies were to be held by them for life only.

The 28 villages allotted to Ramkrishnadas are the subject-matter of this suit. On his death on 1st September 1912 they passed to his son Bhagwatdas who died three months later They then passed to his widow Rajkuar Bai and on her death in 1914 to his grandmother Phulkuar Bai, after a suit against Dharmin Bai who claimed to be his second wife When Phulkuar Bai died on 23rd October 1922 Garuddas took possession of the whole 28 villages and on 16th September 1924 Laldas filed the present suit in which he claimed his one-third share in them from Garuddas. His claim rests on the ordinary rule of succession of Hindu law, though the plaint contains unnecessary reference to the agreement of 1901 and, by way of anticipating the defence, to a local custom. Bajrangdas was joined as defendant 2 because he denied the title of both the others, maintaining that he was entitled to the whole of the villages as the eldest surviving son of Lakhmidas or at least to the extra four villages given to Ramkrishnadas as the eldest

The defence of Garuddas, anticipated in the plaint, was that he was the full brother of the father of Bhagwatdas, the last male owner of the property, and would therefore inherit to the exclusion of the other two, who were the half-brothers of Ramkrishnadas. The contention of Laldas was that the rule of exclusion of the half-blood by the whole blood applied only in the case of brothers and their sons and even to that extent had been overridden by local custom Of any such local custom there is no evidence worthy of the name, and it certainly has not been proved.

It was also asserted for Laldas that at the time of the compromise in 1901 there was a contemporaneous oral agreement that in the case of the failure of heirs in any one line the property of that branch was to be divided equally among the other branches. That seems to mean little, but perhaps was intended to mean that there was an agreement to disregard the rule of the half-blood and the whole blood. Whatever it might be, it is, however, clear that no evidence could be given of this alleged oral addition to the terms of the document, which was very formal and solemn. Such evidence as the plaintiff could adduce was, however, rightly put on the record, and it goes no way at all towards proving his allegation even if it is considered.

The only issue in which the plaintiff and defendant 1 are concerned is therefore whether the rule of Hindu law whereby heirs of the half-blood are excluded by those of the whole blood extends only to the brothers of the deceased and their sons, as the plaintiff asserts, or extends indefinitely as the defendant Garuddas maintains On this question the learned Judge followed the officially published judgment of a Single Judge of this Court in Narain v. Homraji (1), as he was bound to do, and held that the rule covers all sapinda relations and not only brothers and their sons The ruling in the case mentioned is based on that of the Privy Council in Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2), in which their Lordships are regarded as having given an indication of their approval of this principle though it was outside the case before them It is impossible to find any such approval in the judgment mentioned, even by the most distant implication. What their Lordships decided was that even if the preference of the whole blood to the half-blood does extend beyond brothers and their sons, on which no opinion was expressed, it is confined to sapinda relations of the same degree of descent from the common ancestor.

The question is discussed at great length in the judgment of Ranade, J , in Vithalrao v Ramrao (3) and we respectfully concur in his conclusion that the exclusion of the half-blood by the whole blood is confined to the cases of brothers and their sons The distinction made in the Mitakshara is between sons of the same mother and those of another mother, and this is ordinarily expressed in English in the terms whole blood and half-blood. But neither expression applies correctly to any but the brothers, not even to brothers' sons Neither the son of a man's full brother nor his father's half-brother is of the same womb as he is, and the blood common to him and either his nephew or his father's stepbrother is only a quarter, not a half

The Mitakshara first lays down the fundamental rule that

" to the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs. "

Two exceptions are then stated to this rule The first is that " if there are no uterine brothers, those by a different mother inherit the estate, " that is to say, that if there are uterine brothers the half-brothers are excluded, though equal to the full brothers in sapinda relationship The second exception is an application of the same rule to the brothers' sons It says that

" on the failure of brothers also, their sons inherit in the order of their fathers, " that is to say that if there are not even half-brothers, the sons of the full brothers inherit first and in their absence the sons of the half-brothers

These are two very precisely stated exceptions to the rule of equal inheritance by all those equal in sapinda relationship, and it would be difficult if not impossible to extend them further even if there were a principle apparently underlying them that would seem to point to the probability of such an extension having been intended. The principle underlying the exceptions is probably the matter of propinquity in blood, as Ranade, J , pointed out in the case already mentioned, and that would not extend them, but anyhow it seems impossible to imagine any principle or theory on which they are based that would extend them

Another apparently insuperable objection to any widening of the scope of the exceptions is the question of the limit of that widening If we are to go beyond the persons specifically mentioned where are we to stop? If we include what may be called step-uncles, there can be no reason for not including the last sapinda and no reason for stopping at him, we would have to go on to the end and include all the gentiles and the most distant kindred, which is manifestly absurd, if only because it would be impossible in practice. We hold that in the Hindu law under the Mitakshara the preference of the whole blood to the half-blood in inheritance is restricted to the cases of brothers and their sons only. The plaintiff Laldas is therefore equally entitled with his half-brother Garuddas and his full brother Bajrangdas to get one-third of the property left by their nephew Bhagwatdas.

We turn now to the case of defendant 2 Bajrangdas. It is apparent though it seems to have escaped observation, that the only possible result of the success of his main plea is the dismissal of the suit He has paid no Court-fees and cannot therefore be given a decree even for the one-third share to which, so far, he appears entitled He claims the whole of the property left by Bhagwatdas on the ground that the agreement and the decree of 1901 laid down that it was to be impartible and was to pass to the eldest member of the eldest branch of the family. Such an agreement offends against the law in respect of perpetuities, though it might possibly be held that Garuddas and Laldas, being parties to it, would be bound to make it good so far as they could by giving up each his one-third share in the property to Bajrangdas

(2) A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 81=37 All. 545=42 I.A. 177 (P.C.).

But there was no such agreement The relevant portion of the petition of compromise (Ex P-4), which was reproduced in the decree, is as follows :

" The villages held by Ramkrishnadas, the eldest brother, shall be impartible The villages held by the defendants shall be partible. The villages held by Ram Krishnadas shall not be divided from generation to generation. The eldest son of Ramakrishnadas shall alone be the owner of his villages. "

Not a word is said of what is to happen to the villages on the extinction of the line of Ramkrishnadas, and even if the agreement were enforceable it is impossible to import into it, as Bajrangdas suggests, a further stipulation that on the failure of heirs in the senior branch of the family the property should pass to the next senior branch

The alternative plea taken by Bajrangdas was that as the present head of the family he was entitled to get the four villages that were given to Ramkrishnadas in that capacity as Jethasi. It is mentioned in the agreement of 1901 that four extra villages were given to Ramkrishnadas as Jethasi, but they are not specified. Indeed the statement that the excess was four villages is not correct as he got five more than Laldas and, as has been said, the values of two groups of villages are not in the ratio of their numbers But there is no evidence whatever of any custom, or any agreement whereby the extra portion allotted to the eldest brother in a family should always pass to the eldest branch of the family for the time being, and such a rule would obviously be impossible to enforce after a very few generations

For all these reasons the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit will be set aside and in its place a decree will issue ordering the defendant Garuddas to hand over to the plaintiff Laldas one-third of all the property that came to him from Bhagwatdas through Phulkuar Bai and to pay all the costs incurred by the plaintiff in both Courts Bajrangdas will pay his own costs in the suit and in this appeal, in which the pleader's fee will be Rs 500, and his own appeal will be dismissed.

Order of Reference

Prideaux, A J C—A question of considerable public importance arises in this appeal It is

" Whether an absolute occupancy holding originally granted for aricultural purposes but which for long has been utilized for building upon is still a holding within the meaning of R. 1, Sch. 2, Tenancy Act of 1920."

I would ask for a Bench to decide this question.

Opinion.—We have no hesitation in finding the question sent to us for decision in the affirmative It seems to us that once a field is recorded as absolute occupancy, Sch. 2, Tenancy Act of 1920 would apply It is here argued that the entry cannot be treated as conclusive and that it is open to the plaintiff in the present case to show that the entry is erroneous We think that as there was no dispute at the time of making the entry it can only be presumed to be correct until the contrary is shown The plaintiff has himself admitted in the plaint that the land is absolute occupancy and that he is such tenant, and he nowhere challenges in the present suit the correctness of the entry Under these circumstances we must hold that the land in suit is agricultural land and governed as such by Art 1, Sch 2, Tenancy Act It has to be remembered that an absolute occupancy tenant could not be ejected for building on his holding unlike the occupancy tenant Thus there is no forfeiture of the tenancy right for the diversion of the land to non-agricultural purposes and the definition of a holding is land let for an agricultural purpose

Both sides agree that the field in suit is recorded as agricultural land, and it seems to us that until the character of the land is changed it is subject to the provisions of the Tenancy Act.

Inadvertent inclusion of an occupancy field amongst fields, other than occupancy, in a mortgage-deed, in a case of genuine and bona fide mistake on the part of the parties to a mortgage, where the mortgage deed does not purport to transfer any rights in occupancy land, does not vitiate the registration of the deed and does not strike at the root of the whole transaction. Judgment.—It is unnecessary to repeat the facts of this case, which are sufficiently clear from the lower Court's judgments. The defendant has now come up on second appeal to this Court The first point raised is with regard to the inclusion of field 9 in the mortgage. That field is admittedly occupancy and the finding of the District Judge is that it was by mistake, described as khudkasht in the mortgage-deed. I am not here, therefore, concerned with any question of fraud and the decision in Vyankatesh v Annasa (1) is not, therefore, to the point. The question for decision in this connexion is whether when a field like the one we are concerned with was, by mistake of the parties, shown as, and believed to be, khudkasht and was included in a mortgage in spite of its actually being an occupancy one, the registration of the mortgage was invalid under S. 46, sub-S. (5), Tenancy Act of 1898 The corresponding point was considered by Hallifax and Mitchell, A J. Cs , in First Appeal No 95 of 1924, decided on the 23rd September 1926, as well as as by Kotval, A J C., in his judgment in Misc Appeal No 5 of 1923 dated 4th February 1924, and I am so far in agreement with these decisions. Drake Brockman, J C , in Second Appeal No 481 of 1918, dated 7th April 1919, decided that the language of S 46, sub-S (5), indicates that the Registration Officer is not expected by the legislature to decide as to the soundness of the recitals in a deed presented for registration From this point of view, therefore, the present defendant would have no case in this connexion, for the mortgage-deed in suit does not purport to transfer any rights in occupancy land The case of genuine and bona fide mistake on the part of both parties to a mortgage like the present is, however, in my opinion, radically different from that of a case where fraud exists, or where an attempt is made deliberately to mortgage occupancy land Here, very obviously a mistake occurred and the inclusion, by inadvertence, of what was in reality an occupancy field seems to me a matter to be treated merely as a surplusage. The plaintiff-respondents do not claim any rights with reference to the field in question and, in those circumstances, I am wholly unable to accept the defendant-appellant's contention that the inadvertent inclusion of an occupancy number amongst the field mortgaged vitiates the registration of the deed and strikes at the root of the whole transaction

An analogous question has been raised with reference to the trees in suit It has been urged on behalf of the appellant, on the strength of the decision in Fakira v. Ramkisan (2), that the trees are an integral portion of the holding and that, therefore, as the sir land on which these stood could not be mortgaged, these trees fell under the same bar, and the whole deed was again invalid for this reason as a mortgage It seems to me, however, that, in the circumstances of the present case, there is clear evidence on record that the ownership and possession on the trees had been divorced from the sir land in question. I do not, for one moment, accept the dictum of the learned District Judge that any proprietor is as a matter of course, entitled to mortgage the trees standing on his occupancy holding, but, in the present instance, we have the following facts The mortgage-deed expressly states that sir rights are excluded, the sir land, on which the trees in question stood, admittedly does not belong to the mortgagor, and the entries in Exs like D-2 and D-3 go to suggest that, owing to special circumstances, the property in the trees was separate from that in the field in which they stood The case is one, in my opinion, in which undoubtedly existed the exceptional incident of the ownership of the trees having been separated from that land on which they stood Very clearly in the present case the cultivating and other rights in sir were expressly excluded from the security and, in those circumstances, I am wholly unable to see that there was anything illegal in these trees having been included in the mortgage-deed

An attempt has been made to urge on behalf of the appellant that the mortgagee in this case made no sufficient enquiry as to the legal necessity and as to the real existence of antecedent debt I confess I have been unable to understand how, in the circumstances, such a contention can be offered with the slightest hope of success It is true that by far the major part of the consideration was due on a previous bond of 1915, the balance being made up of money due for rent and a small amount of Rs. 17-1-6 paid in cash for registration expenses and the like. The bond (P-2) was, however, executed by the defendant's father and, in the circumstances of the present case, I see no reason for doubting that the mortgagee was not satisfied, on reasonable ground that the mortgagor was entitled, in the interests of his family, to incur the debt in question The evidence of Baliram P. W. 1 and Atmaram (P. W. 6) sufficiently establishes this point Very clearly, practically the entire consideration of the present mortgage was on account of antecedent debt and, in those circumstances, I am unable to hold that there was any reason for the mortgagee having to make further enquiry as to existence of legal necessity. In any event, as I have already pointed out, the previous, bond (P-2) is on the record, and that debt had not been satisfied until it was wiped out by the mortgage-deed in suit

It has also been suggested that there has been no sufficient proof of attestation in the present case The plaintiffs examined not only the scribe of the bond, Sheikh Ibrahim (P W 4), but also one of the attesting witnesses, Kisan (P W 5). The evidence of these witnesses goes to show that the bond was duly attested by another man Ramkrishna and clearly, in the circumstances, there is prima facie evidence on record of a perfectly satisfactory nature as to the due execution and attestation of the mortgage-deed in suit The burden of proving the opposite clearly had shifted to the defendant and he made no attempt to discharge that burden

It has lastly been urged that interest at the rate of Rs 1-8-per cent, (compound) should not have been allowed, at any rate pendente lite The rate of interest is not, in any way, excessive and there are no grounds wnatever on which I could interfere in this connexion in the way of diminishing the interest stipulated for in the mortgage-deed in suit.

The appeal fails on all points and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondent's costs Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Secretary of State—Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 73-B of 1927, Decided on 30th August 1928, from decree of 1st Addl Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 31st January 1927, in Civil Appeal No 254 of 1926.

Limitation Act, S. 5 — Ordinarily High Court does not interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower appellate Court—But if discretion is judicially unsound, High Court will interfere — Memo. of appeal accepted by appellate Court, though filed after limitation — Delay condoned without sufficient cause—Appeal accepted on merits and judgment of lower Court set aside — High Court set aside the appellate Court's judgment and restored that of the lower Court—Practice—Discretion.

In matters of discretion a Court of second appeal ought not and ordinarily does not interfere with the exercise of discretion on the part of the subordinate Courts, but that non-interference must necessarily be limited to cases where there is sufficient material on record to justify the exercise of discretion in any particular way. Where, however, it appears that the lower appellate Court has exercised its discretion in a judicially unsound manner without proper legal materials to support its decision, the High Court will surely interfere. [P 10 C 1, 2]

A memo. of appeal was accepted by the appellate Court after the period of limitation had expired, without enquiring into sufficient cause for condoning the delay in the presentation of the memo The appeal was accepted on merits setting aside the decree of the lower Court.

Held : that the appellate Court acted wrongly in entertaining appeal as it had no jurisdiction to touch the decree, and decide the case on merits on the basis of time-barred memo . A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 179 and A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 399, Ref. : 25 Mad. 166, Foll. [P 10 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff, whose suit filed against the Secretary of State for India-in-Council, which was decreed by the first Court, has been dismissed by the lower appellate Court The first point for consideration is whether the defendant's appeal to the lower appellate Court was rightly admitted being within time though filed seven days beyond time

The judgment of the first Court was delivered on 24th August 1926 The copies of the judgment and decree to be appealed from were applied for on 28th August 1926, i e , when 27 days out of the period of 30 days prescribed for filing the appeal to the Court of the District Judge were still to the credit of the defendant. The copies were ready on 4th September 1926 and delivered the same day. Thus time spent.in obtaining the copies was eight days. The appeal had, therefore, to be filed before the expiry of the 38th day which fell on 1st October 1926, but as a matter of fact it was instituted on 8th October 1926.

Along with the memo of appeal, which purports to bear date 6th October 1926, a draft of the proposed grounds of appeal prepared on 7th September 1926, a covering letter addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, Akola, under the same date, and a true copy of a letter dated 21st September 1926 from the Assistant Secretary to Government, Legal Department, to the Commissioner, Berar, were produced apparently to explain away the delay which took place in the filing of the appeal. This true copy was transmitted by the Commissioner to the Deputy Commissioner by endorsement dated 29th September 1926, and presumably, it reached the latter in due course before 4th October 1926 The Deputy Commissioner's Office forwarded the papers to the Public Prosecutor, Akola, on 5th October 1926, and they reached him that very day at 5-30 p m , that is, after the usual Court hours The 6th and 7th October were holidays, and hence the appeal was filed on the 8th The Additional District Judge held the necessary enquiry and called upon the plaintiff to appear in that enquiry to oppose that application for extension of time under S. 5, Lim Act As a result of that enquiry the learned Judge was satisfied as to the diligence of the Government Pleader in the performance of his duty, and came to the conclusion that the delay was occasioned when the papers were in the course of transmission from the Legal Department to the Government Pleader through the usual media of the offices of the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner. This delay remained unexplained. I think that if efforts had been made to find out the cause of this delay, some relevant information could have been secured on the point.

The Commissioner's office had despatched the papers before the expiry of the period of limitation, that is, when there were two days still to the credit of the party appealing, if we go by the date given in the forwarding endorsement. Under ordinary circumstances a letter despatched from Amraoti ought not to take two days to reach Akola, and if these papers did as a matter of fact reach Akola on or before 1st October 1926, I see no reason why the same could not have been handed over immediately to the Government Pleader to enable him to file the appeal at once within limitation. The ascertainment of the date of receipt of the papers in the Deputy Commissioner's office was absolutely necessary, before the Additional District Judge could exercise his discretion in the matter of condoning the delay. The Government Pleader had in the last line of his forwarding letter to the Deputy Commissioner, Akola, distinctly mentioned that the appeal will have to be filed the latest on 29th September 1926 I have not got before me anything to show whether any note of this warning was taken by the Deputy Commissioner when he forwarded the papers through the Commissioner to the Legal Remembrancer's Office, and whether he pointed out to the Commissioner the absolute necessity of securing from the Legal Department a prompt decision whether the appeal should, or should not, be filed and of returning the papers in sufficiently good time to enable him to instruct the Government Pleader, to institute the appeal (if sanctioned by the Legal Department) before the expiry of the period of limitation In the absence of any such material on record it is difficult to say that there was reasonable cause for the delay. I cannot understand what the Government Pleader means by urging that the agents of the Secretary of State in all departments had to do other important duties along with this duty, and so the time taken up in obtaining the sanction by the Deputy Commissioner, the Commissioner and the Legal Remembrancer as mentioned in the letters filed in the Court was unavoidable and that there was no negligence on the part of the appellant or his agents. Really speaking the sanction was given early enough.

The Additional District Judge instead of drawing an inference adverse to the appellant before him, from the absence of all explanation and proof of facts accounting for each day's delay, considered that there was a "presumption" which arose :

"in the course of office work of a Government,"

"may just be that there was reason why the matter should have not deserved the first attention."

In the absence of any detailed affidavit, or other evidence on record, it was no proper for the Additional District Judge to presume that there was no negligence, and at the same time go the length of observing that :

"no serious attempt was made to gain time over the ordinary procedure," in spite of the fact that the appellant

"has to conduct business through a long series of hierarchy of servants."

On 26th November 1926, statements of the parties were recorded, but as the Government Pleader was not ready with facts necessary to explain the delay he took time to ascertain them from the different offices The hearing was, therefore, adjourned to 8th December 1926 His statement dated 8th December 1926 however throws no light on the question of the apportionment of the responsibility for the delay between the several offices, and why, with exercise of due diligence, the same could not have been avoided. An issue was struck on that date, and all that the Government Pleader perhaps desired to do in the case was to ask for a date for arguments, and for that purpose time was granted till 14th December 1926. The arguments were heard, and, straight off, without any evidence, or other sufficient date before him, the Additional District Judge condoned the delay and granting extension of time under S 5, Lim Act, admitted the appeal though barred by seven days The Additional District Judge thus deprived the successful party of a very valuable right, namely, the finality of the decision of the lower Court in his favour which had accrued to him by reason of the period of limitation filing the appeal having elapsed · cf Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) and Nagindas v. Nilaji Moroba (2).

I am fully aware that in matters of discretion a Court of second appeal ought not and ordinarily does not interfere with the exercise of discretion on the part of the subordinate Courts, but that non-interference must necessarily be limited to cases where there is sufficient material on record to justify the exercise of discretion in any particular way. The test as laid down in Kichilappa Naickar v Ramanujam Pillai (3), is, has the discretion been exercised after appreciation and consideration of all the facts which were material for the purpose of enabling the Judge to exercise a judicial discretion and after the application of the right principle to those facts ? If the discretion is exercised under these conditions and a certain conclusion is arrived at, that conclusion will be an exercise of discretion judicially sound Where, however, it appears that the lower appellate Court has exercised its discretion in a judicially unsound manner without proper legal materials to support its decision, the High Court will surely interfere

In the present case, there being no such proper material on record I am constrained to interfere with the lower appellate Court's exercise of discretion For these reasons I hold that the defendant had failed to show sufficient cause for condoning the delay in the presentation of the memo of appeal to the lower appellate Court and that the said Court acted wrongly in entertaining the appeal though instituted beyond time In my opinion the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to touch the decree passed by the Court of first instance and decide the case on the merits on the basis of a time-barred memo. of appeal. The decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit passed in appeal is, therefore, set aside, and that of the first Court decreeing the claim restored. The present appeal is allowed with costs The costs of the first appeal shall be paid by the defendant and those of the suit will be paid as already ordered by the first Court.

Civil Revn. No. 186 of 1927, Decided on 10th October 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 23rd March 1927, in Misc Appeal No. 32 of 1926

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 89—Provisions should be strictly complied with.

The provisions of R. 89, O. 21, are to be strictly complied with, being of the nature of an exceptional concession allowed to the judgment-debtor. [P 11 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 115, and O. 21, Rr. 89 and 92—Total amount liable not deposited within 30 days—No unequivocal acceptance of it by decree-holder—Sale should be confirmed.

Where, when applying to set aside a Court sale, the total amount liable to be deposited was not deposited within 30 days of the sale, and there was no unequivocal acceptance by the decree-holder of the deposit so made, but, on the contrary, the judgment-debtor was only allowed to deposit the amount at his own risk, and the money, so to speak, was only provisionally received.

Held, that the decree cannot be said to have been satisfied and so the case was one in which the Court was bound to confirm the sale. The lower Court in supposing that it had no authority to do so and in accepting the deposit made by the judgment-debtor, exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in it-and it is the duty of the High Court to interfere A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 248, not Foll. *A. Order—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the lower Courts' orders. I do not think the learned District Judge was correct in applying the decision in Nilkanth v Yeshwant (1) to the facts of the present case. In the first place, it is perfectly clear that the total amount liable to be deposited under R 89, O 21, Civil P. C., was not deposited within 30 days of the sale. I do not think there is any ground for supposing that in this connexion the judgment-debtor, non-applicant 1, was misled by the mistake in the proclamation of the sale The provisions of R. 89, O 21 are to be strictly complied with, being of the nature of an exceptional concession allowed to the judgment-debtor Here, there was no strict compliance with the rule in question Still further, there was no unequivocal acceptance by the decree-holder of the deposit so made On the contrary, the order-sheets of 26th April 1926 and 26th July 1926 show that the judgment-debtor was only allowed to deposit the amount at his own risk, and the money, so to speak, was only provisionally received I cannot, therefore, regard the decree as having been satisfied and even were one to adopt the somewhat wide principle laid down by Kotwal, A J C, in Nilkanth v. Yeshwant (1), above quoted, I do not think it can be predicated of the present case that the Court's power to execute the decree had ceased Mac Nair, A J C, in his judgment in Kabiruddin v. Krishnarao (2), has seen cause to differ from the decision of Kotwal, A. J. C, which is an officially reported case, but I do not think it necessary in the present case to go into the further questions involved for the simple reason that, in my opinion, R 89 must be strictly construed, and in this case there was no complete compliance with the provisions contained therein.

I do not further think that the case was one in which the Court could rightly have had recourse to the provisions contained in S 151, Civil P. C, nor did, in my opinion, the equities of the case call for any such resort to the provisions mentioned, even were this course permissible. In my opinion, therefore, the case was one in which the Court was bound to confirm the sale In supposing that it had authority not to do so and instead, to accept the deposit made by the judgment-debtor, it exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in it and it is, in my opinion, the duty of this Court to interfere The facts of the decision in Yad Ram v. Sundar Singh (3), which has been quoted on behalf of the non-applicant 1, were highly peculiar and I am unable to accept the contention offered by the latter that the present application for revision does not lie.

In my opinion, therefore, the present revision application must succeed The order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the order of the first Court, dated 30th October 1926, confirming the sale is restored The non-applicant 1 (judgment-debtor) must bear the applicant's costs both in this Court and in the lower appellate Court I fix Rs. 20 as pleader's fees

Judgment — This appeal has been filed on behalf of Umed Hussein who with his three sons Amir Ali, Jawahir Ali alias Bulaki and Wazir Ali, and six others, Santokh, Lalkhan, Bilam, Annoop, Ghasi, Latti, has been convicted under S 148 and S. 302 read with S 149, I P C, and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years, and to transportation for life respectively, the sentences to run concurrently The other nine accused have been similarly convicted and their appeals in this Court are appeals Nos 118 to 126 of 1928. The judgment in this appeal will govern the other appeals also

The facts of this case have been mentioned in sufficient detail in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and therefore I do not consider it necessary to repeat them here It is an admitted fact that a marpit took place in the village Sarwani on 7th December 1927 when the possession of the share belonging to Umed Hussain was to be delivered to the decree-holder The prosecution case is that all the appellants armed with lathis came to the place, in front of the house of Thandaram, and assaulted Thandaram, Bandaram and Raghunandan Prasad. The accused Umed Hussain and Jawahir Ali allege that Thandaram and Bandaram accompanied with 10 or 15 persons came to their house, and after some altercation, Thandaram gave a blow to Umed Hussain and ordered his men to beat, that they took the sticks of Bandaram and Sheo Prasad and defended themselves, that many persons who had gone there hearing about the marpit intervened, and as there was a big crowed in the angan, in the Melee, Bandaram's head came into contact with the door-frame and got hurt.

Amir Ali and Wazir Ali pleaded alibi and alleged that they had gone to Khamaria Santokh stated that he was ill on that day and did not take part in the riot Lalkhan alleged that he had not taken part in the marpit but was beaten by Thandaram and his son that day at 5 p m. Bilam stated that Kashiram and Parsoo beat him, when Thandaram, Bandaram and others were returning from the Gaontia's house Annoop, Fhasia and Latti stated that they were not present at the marpit

A careful perusal of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses Mahabir Prasad (P. W 11), Raghunandan Prasad (P W 12) and Thandaram (P W 13) makes it clear that besides the two mazkuris, at least 10 or 12 other persons had accompanied the process-server Raghunandan Prasad when he went to Sarwani on 7th December 1927, and about 20 or 25 men of Mohwadeh were being taken out of that village by Mahadeo (P W 18) to go to Sarwani to help the process server in handing over possession to the decree-holder. Mahadeo has stated that when Raghunandan Prasad asked him to arrange for men to go with him, he sent for his mukhtiar Thandaram and called the tenants of Lakhourri and Mohwadeh to be ready to go for taking possession of Sarwani and Parsapailli According to Mahabir Prasad (P W 11) some of the men who had accompanied him, had sticks It is thus clear that the mazkuris were accompanied by at least a dozen persons, some of whom had lathis, when they went to the village Sarwani, to deliver possession Regarding the place of marpit, both the parties have mentioned two different places, the lane in front of Thandaram's house and the angan of Umed Hussain, as the places where the marpit took place (The judgment here discussed evidence and concluded that the marpit took place near the house of Thandaram and not at the house of Umed Hussain It then proceeded ) The nature of the injuries found on the persons of the members of the two parties will give some idea of the marpit as it took place The prosecution witnesses do not explain as to how the following persons had injuries on their persons.

1. Umed Hussain.
2. Bulaki alias Jawahir Ali.
3. Bilam.
4. Butru Sadhu (alias Lalkhan).
5. Latti.

The abovenamed appellants were examined by Assistant Surgeon B. R Kashyan, who on examination found that Umed Hussain had two injuries, Bulaki one injury, Bilam two injuries, Butru Sadhu one injury and Latti one wound. On the other side Bandaram received injuries, which resulted in his death. Thandaram had a contused wound and an inflammation, and the process-server one contused wound. It is thus fairly obvious that the party of the appellants had received more injuries in the marpit, before Bandaram arrived on the scene, who, according to the prosecution case, was the last one to arrive there, while the marpit was going on

In the report made by Balmukund, it was stated Sadhram Dhimar, Ratan Dhobi and Tehari Chamar had accompanied the mazkuri, but out of these only Sadhram Dhimar has been examined on behalf of the prosecution The other two have not been examined, and if they were eye-witnesses they ought to have been examined by the prosecution Having held that the marpit took place in the lane near Thandaram's house, between Umed Hussain and his party and Thandaram's party, the evidence adduced by the defence about the marpit has to be discarded, and reliance can only be placed on the prosecution evidence From a careful perusal of that evidence and taking into consideration the defence evidence about alibi, I find that all the ten accused were present at the scene of occurrence and took part in the riot (Judgment then discussed evidence and concluding that only an offence under S 147, and not one under S 146 was committed proceeded.) The next point which requires consideration is as to whether all the appellants are constructively liable for the death of Bandaram and their conviction under S 302 read with S 149 is correct The charge in this case is defective, and does not state clearly as to how the appellants are constructively liable for the murder of Bandaram It was stated in the charge that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to resist the process-server, by force from delivering possession of the property, and to cause hurt to the persons of the process-server and agents of the decree-holder. There is no reliable evidence on record to show as to what took place before Umed Hussain and his companions arrived on the scene, and even according to the prosecution evidence, they did not all come together, but came from different sides. I have already held that the possession of deadly weapons has not been satisfactorily proved and it may safely be presumed that the appellants had lathis or sticks, similar to the ones which the companions of Thandaram were carrying. The appellants were not in greater numbers than the party of Thandaram, and when they came with the common object which has been stated in the charge, they could not be said to have known that the offence of murder was likely to be committed The nature and the number of the injuries inflicted on the injured persons except Bandaram is a clear indication that the appellants' party was faring badly and had received more injuries Bandaram's sudden appearance with a stick changed the whole thing, as he started giving blows to Lalkhan and Latti as soon as he came out, and according to Thandaram (P W. 13), aimed his stick at Amir, which did not hit him, after which Amir with great force, aimed his lathi on the head of Bandaram and hit him on the head This case seems to be similar to the one, Queen v Sabed Ali (1), in which the following was held :

" Where a certain number of persons, members of an unlawful assembly (party A) attacked another party B who were in occupation of land, with the view to drive them off the land by force, and one of the members in party A fired a gun at and killed one of the persons in party B, in consequence of a sudden and unexpected resistance which was offered by a party B, it was held (Ainsli, J , dissenting) on a consideration of the evidence that the persons composing party A other than the person who fired the gun could not be convicted of murder under S. 149, Penal Code. The conviction was altered under the circumstances to one of rioting armed with a deadly weapon under S. 148, Penal Code."

It has not been made out by the evidence satisfactorily that the appellants knew it to be likely that the offence of murder would be committed in the prosecution of the common object and, therefore, all the appellants cannot be made liable for the act of the individual who caused the fatal injury, the contused wound, above the left eye-brow of Bandaram. The appellants are not guilty for the offence of murder on account of their constructive liability under S. 149, I. P C. (The judgment then discussed evidence about Amir Ali and continued.) The evidence of these witnesses makes it clear that Bandaram had inflicted a lathi blow on the head of Amir Ali and immediately after that blow, Amir Ali hit Bandaram. Under these circumstances, the offence committed by Amir Ali is not one under S. 302, I. P C., but is culpable homicide not amounting to murder, punishable under S 304, I P C. As he inflicted a blow with a stick on the head and as the blow must have been inflicted with sufficient force, because it resulted in the death of Bandaram, he must have known that such act of his would be likely to cause death. Considering the age of the appellant Amir Ali and the other facts of the case, a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for five years will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice in this case.

Raghunandan Prasad was beaten by Santokh and Jawahir Ali, Thandaram was beaten by Wazir Ali, Anoop Bilan and Ghasia and Bandaram by Umed Hussain, Bulaki and Amir Ali, Santokh, Jawahir Ali, Wazir Ali, Anoop, Ghasia, Bilam and Umed Hussain, are, therefore, convicted under S 323, I P C , and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year each, the sentence to run concurrently along with that passed under S 147, I. P C.

The result of this appeal is that the appellant's conviction under S. 148 and S 302, read with S. 149, I P C,, is set aside and he is convicted under S 147, and S 323, I P. C He is sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year for each of the offences, the sentences to run concurrently This order also applies to Bulaki alias Jawahir Ali, Wazir Ali, Santokh, Bilan, Anoop and Ghasia.

Amir Ali is convicted under Ss. 304 and 147, I P C , and is sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years and one year respectively, the sentences to run concurrently

Lalkhan and Latti are convicted under S. 147, I P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year

Second Appeal No 427 of 1926, Decided on 18th June 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Raipur, D/- 12th April 1926, in Civil Appeal No 16 of 1926.

C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 220—Suit for possession of abadi.

A suit for possession of an abadi site, by a cosharer to whose share it has fallen, against persons who own another patti in the same village can be entertained by civil Courts [P 17 C 2]

G. R Deo—for Appellants.

V. R Dhoke—for Respondents.

Judgment—The plaintiffs have filed this suit for possession of an abadi site used as bari against the defendants who own another patti in the same village. The defendant stated that they have been in possession of the plot for the last 40 years, and that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by time The trial Court found that 1st April 1925 was the date from which the partition order was to take effect and that the plot in suit was allotted to the plaintiffs, and, therefore decreed plaintiffs' claim The defendants filed an appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge, which was dismissed

The first point which is urged on behalf of the appellants is that the lower appellate Court has not properly construed Ex. P-2, the order of the partitioning officer, in holding that the previous possession of the respective cosharers over abadi was disturbed. It is clear from the order that the abadi land was divided and it is admitted by the defendants that the land in suit fell into plaintiffs' patti. The interpretation which has been put by the lower appellate Court on the order as contained in Ex. P-2 that the possession of the abadi land will be given to the cosharer in whose patti it falls, seems to be correct.

The next point which was urged was about the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain this suit. It was argued that the revenue Court could have delivered possession under S. 31, Land Revenue Act, and the civil Court cannot do so. Matters excepted from the jurisdiction of the civil Court are mentioned in S. 220, Land Revenue Act, and the said Act contains no provision that the civil Court is precluded from trying a suit of the nature of this suit. The suit could be entertained in the civil Courts and they have jurisdiction to try such such suits.

The last ground is about the inquiry which was not made about the period of the appellants' possession. The cause of action in favour of the plaintiffs accrued after the passing of the order by the partitioning officer and, therefore, an inquiry about the period of appellants' possession was not necessary.

The appeal thus fails and is dismissed with costs

Criminal Appeal No. 205 of 1927, Decided on 17th July 1928, from judgment of Sess Judge, Saugor, D/- 15th October 1927.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes — General later law does not abrogate special one by mere implication.

A general Act is to be so construed as not to repeal a particular one, that is one directed towards a special object. A general later law does not abrogate a special one by mere implication: Mary Seward v. Vera Cruz, (1884) 10 A. C. 59, Rel. on. [P 21 C 1]

 * (b) Criminal P. C., S. 162—S. 162 as amended by Act 18 of 1923 does not repeal or affect Evidence Act, S. 27.

The provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act are quite independent of those of S. 162, Criminal P. C., and the amended S. 162 does not repeal or in any way affect S. 27 : *A. I. (d) Evidence Act, S. 27—S. 27 relates to statement of accused while in police custody and not prior to his arrest or detention.

Section 27 relates to a statement made by an accused person while in police custody, and not to a statement made by him prior to his arrest and detention in such custody.

(e) Criminal P. C., Ss. 160, 161 and 162—Meaning of "any person" explained.

The expression "any person" used in Ss. 160, 161 and 162 has one and the same meaning and denotes one and the same class of persons. That class is described with sufficient accurancy in S. 160, in which the expression is for the first time used. Every person belonging to that class must be a person who is within the limits of the station of the police officer making the investigation, or in an adjoining station, who from the information given or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, and who is bound to attend on an order in writing being issued to him by the said officer. An accused person who is in police custody cannot fall under this class of persons, for the simple reason that the question of a summons being issued to him and of the obligation to attend cannot possibly arise in his case, he being in police custody.

(f) Evidence Act, S. 27—S. 27 refers to statement by accused in police custody while S. 162, Criminal P. C., refers to statement during the course of investigation—Criminal P. C., S. 162.

Section 27 is confined in its operation to an incriminating statement by an accused person while in police custody, while S. 162 contains a general provision embracing all statements made by persons examined in the course of an investigation. [P 21 C 1]

Order of Reference

Kolhatkar, A. J. C—The appellant, Gola and one Ramdas—appellant in appeal No. 204 of 1927—were convicted of the offence of murder under S 302, I P.C by the Sessions Judge of Saugor, for having killed one Gouri Shankar and his wife Mt. Sukhrani, and both were sentenced to death on 15th October 1927. These two appeals were heard together by a Bench of this Court consisting of Hallifax and K B Mohiuddin, A. J. Cs. Both of them agreed about the correctness of Gola's conviction under S 302, I.P C, but differed in regard to the guilt of Ramdas, Hallifax, A. J. C., being of opinion that the guilt of Ramdas was clearly established, and that the case against him was stronger than that against Gola, and K. B. Mohiuddin, A. J. C, being of opinion that the evidence against Ramdas was not sufficient for his conviction. The appeal of Ramdas was thereupon referred, under S. 429, Criminal P C., to Prideaux, A. J. C., who held that the evidence against Ramdas was not sufficient. Ramdas was consequently acquitted. After his acquittal Hallifax, A. J. C., reconsidered his judgment in view of the opinion already expressed by him to the effect that the case against Ramdas was stronger than that against Gola and arrived at the conclusion that, if the statement made by the appellant Gola Khangar to the police officer was excluded from the evidence, as it must be, there was not sufficient evidence on record to justify Gola's conviction, and that therefore he should be acquitted. As regards the admissibility of the aforesaid statement of Gola, he was of opinion that it was inadmissible in evidence on the ground that S. 27, Evidence Act, had been repealed by S. 162, Criminal P. C., as amended by the amending Acts of 1923; while K. B. Mohiuddin, A. J. C., expressing his agreement with Hallifax, A J. C., in the view taken by the latter in regard to the effect of the amended S 162, Criminal P C., on the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, was of opinion that apart from the aforesaid estatement of the appellant Gola made to a police officer, there was sufficient evidence on record to establish his complicity in the murder of Gouri Shankar. The two Judges being thus divided in opinion in regard to Gola's guilt, the case has been referred to me under S 429, Criminal P. C, for recording my opinion on the said point.

In view of the conflicting decisions of the Judges of this Court in regard to the applicability of S. 27, Evidence Act, the learned Government Advocate requests that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench. His request is opposed by the appellant's learned counsel. I have been referred by the former to the decision of a Bench of this Court consisting of Findlay, J.C., and Macnair, A. J. C., in Sheobalakprasad v. Emperor (1), in which it was held that S. 27, Evidence Act was not repealed by the amended S 162, Criminal P. C., The same view was expressed by Mitchell, A J. C., in Rama v Emperor (2), decided by a Bench consisting of Hallifax, A J C., and Mitchell, A. J. C., while on the other hand the contrary view has been expressed by Hallifax, A. J. C., in the latter case, as well as in the present case, and it has been adopted by K. B. Mohiuddin, A.J.C. As at present inclined my personal view is that S. 162, Criminal P. C, has no reference to a statement made by an accused while in police custody, and that it does not repeal nor in any way affect the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, Gola's statement made to the police at Gunjora, in consequence of which a blood stained axe was found concealed in bhusa, constitutes an important piece of incriminating evidence against him. Its admissibility or otherwise rests solely on the legal question whether S. 27, Evidence Act, has been repealed by the amended S. 162, Criminal P. C Although Hallifax, A. J C., has not expressed in clear terms that there would be sufficient evidence to sustain Gola's conviction under S 302, I. P. C , if his statement made to a police officer at Gunjora were admitted in evidence, the conclusion reached by him, referred to above, however, involves the necessary implication of the sufficiency of the evidence against Gola, if it be held to include the aforesaid statement made by him to a police officer Having regard to these facts and the divergence of judicial opinion expressed by the Judges of this Court, it seems to me to be necessary, in order to ensure uniformity in the administration of criminal justice, to refer the following question to a Full Bench :

" Does the amended S. 162, Criminal P C , repeal or in any way affect S. 27, Evidence Act ?"

As the present appeal out of which this question arises was heard by a Bench of two Judges, the question will have, in view of S. 9, Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, to be referred to a Full Bench I would therefore request that if the Judicial Commissioner thinks that the aforesaid question is a fit one for being referred to a Full Bench, it may be so referred, and the said Bench may be constituted.

Opinions

Kolhatkar, A J. C—The question referred to the Full Bench is :

" Does the amended S. 162, Criminal P. C., repeal or in any way affect S. 27, Evidence Act ?"

The question involves a construction of S 162, Criminal P C., and especially the expression "any person" used therein. Although words are to be interpreted according to their ordinary and natural meaning :

" general words admit of indefinite extension or restriction, according to the subject to which they relate, and the scope and object in contemplation. They may convey faithfully enough all that was intended, and yet comprise also much that was not ; or, be so restricted in meaning as not to reach all the cases which fall within the real intention" vide Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, sixth edition, p. 38."

Further it is an elementary rule of construction vide p 36 of the same book :

" that a thing which is within the letter of a statute will generally be construed as not within the statute unless it be also within the real intention of the legislature, and the words, if sufficiently flexible, must be construed in the sense which, if less correct grammatically, is more in harmony with that intention."

It follows therefore that :

" every clause of a statute should be construed with reference to the context and the other clauses of the Act, so as, so far as possible, to make a consistent enactment of the whole statute or series of statutes relating to the subject-matter " : vide p. 40 of the same book "

Thus the intention of the legislature is to be gathered from the ordinary meaning of the clause used in the statute, as well as from the context in which that clause appears in the statute. In other words, words used in a section of the Act are to be read and construed in the light of the context. Now Ss 160, 161 and 162, Criminal P.C , form a group by themselves dealing with investigation, the summoning and examination of the persons to be examined in the course of the investigation, and the extent to which the statements of such persons are to be used in an enquiry or trial held by a Magistrate or a Judge after the completion of the investigation. The next thing to be noted is that the expression "any person" is used in all the three sections On a perusal of the three sections it seems to me that the expression "any person" used therein has one and the same meaning and denotes one and the same class of persons. That class is described with sufficient accuracy in S. 160, in which the expression is for the first time used. Every person belonging to that class must be a person who is within the limits of the station of the police officer making the investigation, or in an adjoining station, who from the information given or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, and who is bound to attend on an order in writing being issued to him by the said officer Now an accused person who is in police custody cannot fall under this class of persons, for the simple reason that the question of a summons being issued to him and of the obligation to attend, cannot possibly arise in his case, he being in police custody. It has accordingly been held in Queen-Empress v. Saminatha (3) and in Emperor v. Ratan (4), that S. 160, Criminal P. C., does not empower the investigating officer to require the attendance of an accused person to answer the complaint made against him. It is observed in the former case that :

" The intention of the legislature seems to have been only to provide a facility for obtaining evidence, and not for procuring the attendance of the accused, who may be arrested at any time, if necessary, without a warrant."

The construction of S 160, Criminal P. C., adopted in these cases has my full concurrence This section aims at securing the attendance of persons who would supply the necessary information in regard to the commission of the offence, and who would be examined as witnesses in the enquiry or trial to be held in regard to the said offence It admits of no reasonable doubt therefore that S. 160 has reference to the persons to be examined as witnesses in the trial or enquiry to be held after the completion of the investigation. As an accused cannot be examined as a witness either for or against himself, he cannot be included in the class of persons referred to in the section. The next S 161 provides for the examination of persons who are to be summoned under S. 160, and whose attendance before the investigating officer is made obligatory thereunder. It thus refers to the same class of persons which is referred to in the preceding section. As regards the marginal notes, although they are not ordinarily referred to for the purposes of construing an Act, the rule regarding their rejection for the purposes of interpretation is now of imperfect obligation : vide Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, p. 76. Collins, M. R observes in the case Bushell v. Hammond (5) :

" The side note, although it forms no part of the section, is of some assistance, inasmuch as it shows the drift of the section."

The marginal note of S. 161, Criminal P. C. runs as follows:

" Examination of witnesses by police."

Similarly the marginal note of S. 160 refers to the police officer's power to require attendance of witnesses. Both the notes make mention of witnesses as the persons referred to in the two sections. Although a marginal note does not form part of the section, it is of some assistance in properly construing a section. It has been held in Queen Empress v. Jadab Das (6), that it is not permissible for the investigating officer to examine an accused person under S. 161. Criminal P. C. The next S. 162 deals with the very limited extent to which statements made by persons examined under S. 161 in the course of the investigation can be used in the course of enquiry or trial held by a Magistrate or a Judge. Although the expression " any person " used in S. 162 is a very general one and admits, according to its ordinary meaning, of including an accused person, the context leaves no doubt that it denotes the class of persons who are bound under S. 160 to attend on a summons being issued by the investigating officer, who are examined under S. 161, and who are intended to be examined as witnesses in the enquiry or trial following the investigation, and that it cannot consequently have any reference to an accused person.

There are several other considerations which warrant the construction adopted by me. There are no explicit words in S. 162, Criminal P C , indicating that the legislature intended to repeal the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act As observed in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes at p. 296:

" Repeal by implication is not favoured . . . . . It is a reasonable presumption that the legislature did not intend to keep really contradictory enactments on the statute-book, or on the other hand, to effect so important a measure as the repeal of a law without expressing an intention to do so. Such an interpretation, therefore, is not to be adopted, unless it be inevitable. Any reasonable construction which affords an escape from it is more likely to be in consonance with the real intention."

Maxwell further observes at p. 149:

"It is in the least degree improbable that the legislature would overthrow fundamental principles, infringe rights, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness; and to give any such effect to general words, simply because they have that meaning when used either in their widest or usual or their natural sense, would be to give them a meaning other than that which was actually intended. General words and phrases, therefore, however wide and comprehensive they may be in their literal sense, must, usually, be construed as being limited to the actual objects of the Act, and as not altering the law beyond."

All these observations hold good in the present case. I find it hard to believe that the legislature intended to repeal the substantive law embodied in S. 27, Evidence Act, by mere implication by enacting S. 162, Criminal P. C., which is an adjective law dealing with procedure. The desirability of avoiding, as far as possible, a conflict between the provisions of two different Acts has been emphasized in Ranga Charya v Dasacharya (7) and in Jogendra Chandra Roy v Shyam Das (8). Again the question under consideration admits of being looked at and considered from another standpoint. A general Act is to be so construed as not to repeal a particular one, that is one directed towards a special object. A general later law does not abrogate a special one by mere implication. It is remarked by Lord Selborne in the case of Mary Seward v. The Vera Cruz (9):

" Where general words in a later Act are capable of reasonable and sensible application without extending them to subjects specially dealt with by earlier legislation you are not to hold that earlier and special legislation indirectly repealed, altered or derogated from merely by force of general words, without any indication of a particular intention to do so."

Now S. 27, Evidence Act, is confined in its operation to an incriminating statement by an accused person while in police custody; while S. 162, Criminal P C., contains a general provision embracing all statements made by persons examined in the course of an investigation. It is clear, therefore, in view of the rule of interpretation underlying the above remarks of Lord Selborne that as a general statute is to be so construed as not to repeal a particular one directed towards a special object, the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, must be held to be not overridden nor in any way affected by those of S. 162, Criminal P. C.

It is no doubt true that prior to his arrest and detention in police custody, an accused person will answer the description of the class of persons referred to in S. 160, Criminal P. C., and will consequently be liable to be examined by the investigation officer under S. 161, Criminal P. C. But S. 27, Evidence Act, relates to a statement made by an accused person while in police custody, and not to a statement made by him prior to his arrest and detention is such custody. The question whether a statement made by an accused person prior to his arrest in the course of the police investigation is governed by S. 162 does not therefore properly arise in the present case, being beyond the scope of this reference.

Having dealt so far with the question of the construction of S. 162, Criminal P. C. in the light of the context, I shall now proceed to consider the views expressed by the several High Courts on the point under consideration The view taken by me in regard to the construction of S. 162 is affirmed by the High Courts of Rangoon, Calcutta, Patna, Lahore and Madras, as well as by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind It has been held in Emperor v. Maung Tha Din (10), by a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court (Heald, J., dissenting) that S, 27, Evidence Act, is neither repealed nor affected by the amended S 162, Criminal P C., because a person accused of an offence is not "any person being within the limits of" the station of the police officer making the investigation under Ch. 44, or any adjoining station,

" who from the information given, or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case," and that consequently

" information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a police officer " is not a statement within the meaning of S. 162, Cl (1), Criminal P. C The dissenting Judge admitted that the interpretation of the majority of Judges was in accordance with what was in fact the intention of the legislature. He seems to have attached more weight to the ordinary meaning of the words used in S. 162 than to the context in which the section appears and the bearing it has on the interpretation of the section. A Bench of the Calcutta High Court has affirmed in Azimuddy v. Emperor (11), that S. 162, Criminal P. C. applies to witnesses and not to accused persons under trial, and that it does not repeal S. 27, Evidence Act, or render inadmissible statements relevant under the latter section; while it is observed by a Bench of the Patna High Court in Jagwa

Dhanuk v Emperor (12), that the main object of the amendment of S. 162, Criminal P C is to prevent the use of the statement of prosecution witnesses as corroboration under S. 157, Evidence Act, and that the section does not override the general provisions of the law with regard to the admissibility of the statements made by accused persons, as laid down in S. 27, Evidence Act Similarly a Bench of the Lahore High Court has ruled in Rannun v Emperor (13), that S 162, Criminal P C, applies to statements of persons examined as witnesses in the course of a police investigation, and not to the statement of an accused person, and that it does not override or modify the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act. In the course of his judgment, Sir Shadilal, C. J, referred to the observations appearing at p 149 in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, which have been already quoted The same view has been taken by the Madras High Court in In re, Semalai Goundan, A I R. 1925 Mad 574, while it has been affirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in Umer Duraz Munshi v. Emperor (14), that the words "statement of any person" in S 162, Criminal P C, refer to the statement of any witness in the course of a police investigation, and not to the statement of an accused person in respect of whom such investigation is held

So far as I am aware there is only one case of the Rangoon High Court, Bau a Kouther v Emperor (15), decided by a single Judge in September 1924 affirming the opposite view The effect of that decision is however, nullified by the decision in the recent Full Bench case, Emperor v Maung Tha Din (10), in which the former case was referred to There are also some observations made by the Judges constituting the Bench, who decided the case Venkata Subbiah v Emperor (16), favouring the view that S 162, Criminal P. C, applies to statements of witnesses, as well as to those of accused persons It would, however, appear from the remarks of Madhavan Nair, J., at p 651, that he adhered to the view that S 27, Evidence Act, was not affected by the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P C, and that the legislature did not contemplate to repeal the former when it amended the latter section This view, however, is founded on the narrow basis resting on the assumption that S 162 is limited to the use of written statements only, whether of witnesses or of accused persons, and that consequently it would in no way affect S. 27, Evidence Act. In this Court opinion is divided. Both the Judges who decided the unreported case, Sheobalakprasad v. Emperor (1), are in favour of the view that S 27, Evidence Act, is unaffected by the amended S 162, Criminal P C,, while on the other hand the opposite view is maintained by the two Judges who decided the case Dadi Lodhi v Emperor, A. I. R. 1926 Nag 368, and heard the case giving rise to the present reference. As for the unreported case Rama v. Emperor (2), there was a difference of opinion between the two Judges who decided it.

For all the reasons set forth above I feel no hesitation in concluding that the provisions of S 27, Evidence Act are quite independent of those of S. 162, Criminal P C, and that when the latter section was amended in 1923, the legislature did not intend that it should repeal or in any way affect S. 27, Evidence Act I would, therefore, answer in the negative the question referred to the Full Bench.

Prideaux, A. J. C.—I concur

Kinkhede, A J C.—The whole of the reasoning adopted and all the deductions drawn by Kolhatkar, A J C, have my complete concurrence Since I was a party to the decision in Dadi Lodhi v Emperor, A I. R 1926 Nag. 368, in which the following observations occur, I think, a word of explanation is due from me:

"Some inadmissible evidence of what the appellant told the police about the "balua" concealed in his house has been let in. The terms of S. 162, Criminal P. C. are perfectly clear, and no statement made to the police by "any person," whether accused or witness, during an investigation can be even mentioned in evidence except to the extent and under the circumstances and conditions stated in that section. The fact that the balua was found concealed in Dadi's house can be taken into consideration, but the fact that he or anybody else said so to the police must be entirely excluded."

Without meaning any disrespect to the learned colleague with whom I then sat, (16) A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 579=48 Mad. 640.

I must frankly admit that on that occasion the matter was not so fully thrashed out; and in the absence of any satisfactory arguments to the contrary I fell in with the view of my senior colleague on the point as expressed above. But whereas, I have since had some fresh opportunities of considering the question, independently for myself, in the light of the reported decisions of the other High Courts as also the unreported decision of another Bench of this Court in Sheobalakprasad v Emperor (1), and had the opportunity of perusing the well reasoned opinion of my colleague Kolhatkar, A.J C. I have no hesitation in endorsing the view so ably expressed. My reply, therefore, to the reference is in the same terms in which it is given by Kolhatkar, A J.C

(At this stage Kolhatkar, A J. C. proceeded on leave, and the appeal was transferred to Prideaux, A. J. C., who recorded the following opinion.)

Prideaux, A. J C —The present appellant Gola and one Ramdas, appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 204 of 1927, were convicted by the Sessions Judge, Saugor, of offences under S. 302, I P.C., they being found guilty of having killed one Gourishankar and his wife Mt Sukhrani, and both were sentenced to death on 15th October 1927. The two appeals were heard together by a Bench consisting of Hallifax and Khan Bahadur G. Mohiuddin, A J. Cs Both Judges agreed in the conviction of Gola under S. 302, I P C, but as they differed as to the guilt of Ramdas the case came to this Court by a reference under S. 429, Criminal P C, and I held, agreeing with K. B.G Mohiuddin, A. J. C, that the evidence against Ramdas was insufficient to warrant his conviction, and on the return of the case to the Bench Ramdas was acquitted After this acquittal, Hallifax, A. J. C, reconsidered his judgment as regards Gola, and he has come to the conclusion that, if the statement made by the appellant Gola Khangar to the police officer, which led to the discovery of the blood-stained axe under some bhusa where the double murder was committed, was excluded from evidence, there was not sufficient evidence on record to justify Gola's conviction Khan Bahadur G. Mohiuddin, A. J. C, agreed with Hallifax, A J C, that Gola's statement to the police could not be taken into account, but was of opinion that excluding this statement the evidence was sufficient to convict Gola of murder. The case was therefore referred to Kolhatkar, A. J C He asked for a Full Bench to decide the question:

"Does the amended S. 162, Criminal P. C. repeal or in any way affect S. 27, Evidence Act."

A Full Bench consisting of myself, Kinkhede and Kolhatkar, A. J Cs, have unanimously held that the provisions of S 27, Evidence Act, are quite independent of those of S. 162, Criminal P. C., and the question referred to the Full Bench was answered in the negative This finding permits Gola's statement to the police, which led to the discovery of the blood-stained axe in Gourishankar's house being proved against him.

There is no doubt that the axe was used to commit the murders. Its handle was broken and the broken piece was found in the morning near the murdered bodies Besides this evidence against Gola there is the fact that he absconded from Patmohna directly after the murder and that clothes stained with human blood were found with him. It is argued here that the evidence regarding the finding of these clothes is not conclusive, but it seems to me that the evidence of P Ws 13, 14 and 15 conclusively proves that these articles were found with the appellant Gola There is the evidence of the Sub-Inspector to show that a dhoti (Art. Z) found in Gola's house forms part of the blood-stained dhoti (Art. H) found in his bundle. Further, there is no doubt that after absconding Gola attempted to conceal himself in his brother's house at Ganjora where he was actually found This evidence seems to me to conclusively prove the guilt of Gola I find accordingly that he is guilty of the offence of murder

I return the case to the Bench for the passing of the sentence.

First Appeal No 75 of 1927, Decided on 28th February 1928, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Bhandara, D/- 19th February 1927, in Civil Suit No 13 of 1926.

(a) Lease — Construction — Lease "for hamesha" — No right of re-entry but no words indicating that heritable estate was created — Lease cannot be interpreted to mean lease "for the lifetime of lessee."

The operation of a perpetual lease cannot be limited to the lifetime of the lessees. Where there is absolutely no reservation of any right of re-entry in favour of the lessor, in a lease for ever (hamesha karita) even in the absence of words indicating that a heritable estate was intended to be created in favour of the lessees, the words "hamesha karita" (for ever) cannot be interpreted to mean "Tumche jeewman pavsto" (for your lifetime): (Case Law discussed.) [P 25 C 1]

Judgment.—This appeal by the plaintiff arises out of a suit for ejectment filed by him against the defendant under the following circumstances: In Taluka Purada of which plaintiff is the superior proprietor is included the village of Bijepar alias Bijai Kutumb which comprises 3 mahals. The present suit relates to mahal 2. At the 30th year Settlement the plaintiff's ancestor was recorded as the superior proprietor and the defendants' lessors' predecessor-in-interest as the inferior proprietor of the mouza. The inferior proprietary rights were conferred on Holu son of Balsakhu Gond, as admitted by plaintiff. On his death the right devolved on his son Pandu and after his death on his son Pusa. Pusa died on 17th October 1920. Thereupon mutation was effected in favour of plaintiff on the ground that he died without heirs and the malik adna (or inferior proprietary) right became merged in the malik ala (or superior proprietary) right of the plaintiff. It is, therefore, contended by the plaintiff that the inferior proprietary right having thus lapsed, the lease granted by Pandu to Balkisan Patel and Hira Patel as per terms of the lease-deed, dated 25th January 1886, could not operate, after the death of Pusa or at any rate enure beyond the lifetime of the lessees (both of them having died respectively in 1924 and 1897) and that the sub-lease granted by the said lessees to defendant must, therefore, determine with the determination of the lease on which it was granted. The present suit was, therefore, filed on 27th April 1926, and an alternative claim for arrears of thekajama has been joined with it.

The defence was that the decision in the former Suit No 30 of 1914 debarred the plaintiff from suing the defendant and that though plaintiff was offered the thekajama he improperly declined to accept it, in respect of the years 1332-1334 Faslis

It was also contended that the inferior proprietor Pusa left heirs to his inferior proprietary right. The defendant pleaded that the transaction of the so-called lease to Balkisan and Hira and that of the subleases by them to him on 1st April 1897, was really an out-and-out transfer in perpetuity. In the oral pleadings the plaintiff amitted that the lessees Balkisan and Hira have left heirs but contended that despite the existence of the heirs plaintiff is entitled to possession of the mahal 2 as on the death of the lessees the possession of the defendant became that of a trespasser.

The lower Court held that the lease of 1886 was a lease in perpetuity and under that lease all the interest of the inferior proprietor Pandu was conveyed by him to the lessees Balkisen and Hira. In short that the lease amounted to an out-and-out sale of the inferior proprietary right. In this view of the case the plaintiff's claim was dismmissed. Hence he has come up in appeal.

I think the plaintiff's contention that the former suit affirmed his right of re-entry on the expiry of the term of the lease is bound to fail. The decision of this Court in second appeal in the former litigation is just the other way. It negatived the plaintiff's right to present possession of the village on the ground that when a person gets a property by escheat he takes it subject to the liability to which that property is subject. It was held in that case that the term of that lease (meaning the lease of 1886) had not expired. We all know that the said lease created no definite term of years but was a lease for hamesha, i. e., in perpetuity. The term if at all was, therefore, one which entitled the lessees to hold on in perpetuity and if the plaintiff took the estate by escheat he took it subject to that right of the lessees. This practically meant that plaintiff got nothing by the escheat. But the plaintiff contends that on the proper construction of that judgment as also of the terms of the lease of 1886, it should be held that Batten, A. J. C., meant to decide that plaintiff shall have a right of re-entry after the lifetime of the lessees Balkisan and Hira and that the former suit was, therefore, premature. I am not prepared to put such a construction on either the judgment in second appeal, or the terms of the lease-deed of 1886

The learned advocate for the appellant contends that despite the use of the expression hamesha karita (for ever) the lease must in the absence of words of inheritance be construed as enuring for the lifetime of the lessees only. By no stretch of the rules of interpretation, could the operation of the perpetual term of lease be limited to the lifetime of the lessees There is absolutely no reservation of any right of re-entry in favour of the lessor, in the document creating the lease in perpetuity. I cannot read in place of "hamesha karita" (for ever) the words " tumche jeewman paveto " (for your life) in the deed, as contended for by the appellant's advocate. It is wholly unnecessary to further amplify the meaning of the word " hamesha " by inserting the words "from generation to generation" in a deed of perpetual lease which, as interpreted in Secretary of State v. Natabar Mangraj (1), was held to be virtually a sale though in the garb of a lease.

It is, however, urged that the cases of Lekhraj Roy v Kunhya Singh (2), Tulshi Pershad Singh v. Ramnarain Singh (3) and Agin Bindh Upadhya v. Mohan Bikram Shah (4) are authorities for the proposition that the lease in perpetuity even, is determined by the death of the grantee in the absence of words showing that a heritable estate was intended to be created. A careful perusal of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lekhraj Roy v. Kunhya Singh (2) shows that the points for decision in that case were whether the grant by way of lease by a patta by Chunnilal to Nirputsingh was to enure for the life of the grantee only or whether it was to enure so long as the interest of Chunnilal existed. Their Lordships observe at p. 211 (of 3 Cal.) that to ascertain what is the term granted by this patta, we must see in the first place what is the interest which the grantor Chunnilal had. He calls it a mukarrari interest, but whether it be a true mukarrari interest or not, it was evidently the intention of the parties that the grant should enure during term of his interest. If it can be ascertained definitely what that term is, the rule of construction that a grant of an indefinite nature enures only for the life of the grantee would not apply If a grant be made to a man for an indefinite period, it enures generally speaking for his lifetime and passes no interest to his heirs, unless there are some words showing an intention to grant an hereditary interest. That rule of construction does not apply if the term for which the grant is made is fixed or can be definitely ascertained further on. It was held that the interest of Chunnilal although perhaps not properly a mukarrari must be regarded, as long as it goes on, as an hereditary lease, a mourusi patta, and that the grant by him to Niruputsingh must enure, therefore, during the continuince of that interest and as there was no reason why it should be held to be limited to the life of Niruputsingh, their Lordships upheld the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit on the view that the duration of the term is capable of being definitely ascertained by reference to the interest which the grantor himself has in the property.

Applying the test laid down in this case to the facts of the present case, the British Government in 1860, or thereabout made a settlement with Pandu's father in respect of the village in inferior proprietary rights and thus made him the proprietor. To this right as a proprietor were attached the incidents of alienablility and heritability as was held in Nilkanth Rao Udhoji v. Sambhoo Mali (5) by this Court. Consequently Pundu's grant to Balkisan and Hira Patel must enure during the continuance of his interest. Then again, the term having been fixed in perpetuity is capable of being definitely ascertained and consequently the lease created in 1886 could not be treated as liable to be determined by the death of either the lessor or the lessee. Thus the Privy Council case is authority for the principle, that in the absence of the words to the contrary a lease for a fixed term of years does not terminate before the expiry of the stipulated term by the mere fact of the death of either the lessor or the lessee. Cf Badrinath v Bhajan Lal (6)

That such is the right scope and interpretation of their aforesaid decision was expressly recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gobind Lal Roy v Hemendra Narain Roy (7) In Kishori Lal Roy v Krishna Kamini (8) it was pointed out by Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ , that

"the true test to apply is, as stated by Wood, J., in Alsup v. Banks (9) to determine from the terms of the grant, or from the nature of the tenancy whether the parties intended that the execution of the contract was to be contingent upon the continued existence of both or either of them."

Applying this test also to the case before us, the use of the words that the lessee shall have the right to enjoy in perpetuity all the rights which the lessor has as regards the hakka milkiyat of the village in its entirety, clearly points to the intention of the parties that personal considerations were not the foundation of the contract as in cases of principal and agent, master and servant, the zamindar and the dependant junior members or the father-in-law and son-in-law or husband and his wife in an impartible zamindar or Raj The cases of Tulshi Pershad Singh v Ramnarain Singh (3) and Agin Bindh Upadhya v. Mohan Bikram Shah (4) are easily distinguishable on this ground the first being the case of a grant to a son-in-law of a Raja family and the second of a grant to wife who according to the usages of the Raj Estate were entitled to a provision for maintenance I may, however, remark here that even in Tulshi Pershad Singh v Ramnarain Singh (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council do not lay down the proposition contended for in unqualified terms After a review of the previous decisions they say that "it is established that the words "estemrari mokarrari" in a patta do not per se convey an estate of inheritance, but they do not accept the decisions as esablishing that such an estate cannot be created without the addition of the other words that are mentioned (such as, ba farzandan or naslan or similar words which would signify perpetual tenure to be enjoyed by heirs), as the other terms of the instrument, the circumstances under which it was made, or the subsequent conduct of the parties, might show the intention with sufficient certainty to enable the Courts to pronounce that the grant was perpetual."

So construing the deed of lease in this suit in the light of these observations the only conclusion possible, even in the absence of express words of inheritance, is that the grant of 1886 was to enure for ever and was to clothe the lessees and their transferees with the whole of the interest of the lessor in perpetuity and that there was no intention to restrict it to any shorter term terminable with the death either of the grantor or the grantee

In the case of Bai Sona v. Bai Hiragavri (10) it was held that even in the case of a lease which stipulated that so long as the tenant goes on paying rent to the landlord, the landlord will not be entitled to get the demised premises vacated, a permanent lease is created and that such a lease is not put an end to by the death of the lessee If this is so in the case of a lease for no definite term, much more should it be so in the case of a permanent lease like the one before me

On the whole the plaintiff did not get any additional right or cause of action merely because the original surviving lessee Balkisan died in 1924 That death did not add any new link to his cause of action. In fact no cause of action had or could have arisen either when the inferior proprietary was said to have lapsed or when the co-lessee Hira Patel died on which facts the former suit was based much less did it arise on the death of Balkisan, because the perpetual term of the lease is not liable to any termination by reason of the death of either the lessor of the lessee The plaintiff's suit for ejectment of the defendant was bound, therefore, to fail and the same has been rightly dismissed as not maintainable.

Now as regards the alternative claim for thekajama and interest for 3 years, I think the plaintiff's claim ought to have been decreed by the Court below. The respondents' learned advocate does not object to the same being decreed but contends that the costs of the suit in regard to that relief should not be saddled on him as the arrears were offered but improperly declined by the plaintiff. I think, this attitude of the plaintiff is very likely in view of his claim of the year 1914 and the present claim and the presistency with which he has chosen to fight his cases. I, therefore, decree the alternative claim for thekajama for 3 years This claim for Rs. 537-12-0, is. therefore, decreed.

I do not allow anything on account of interest prior to the suit. But as the defendant who should have deposited the amount of arrears into Court failed to do so, I direct that these arrears of Rs. 537-12-0 should carry interest at eight annas per cent. per mensem from date of suit until liquidation The plaintiff's claim for ejectment will thus stand dismissed with costs but the alternative claim for Rs 537-12-0 with its interest from date of suit, 27th April 1926, will be decreed against the defendant but without proportionate costs.

The appeal thus substantially fails, but is successful only as regards a minor relief I, therefore, direct that the plaintiff-appellant shall get his costs of this appeal only as regards the sum of Rs 537-12-0 from the defendant who will bear his own so far as this amount is concerned. The appellant shall bear all costs of both sides in this Court so far as they were occasioned by his claiming the relief of ejectment

Second Appeal No. 68-B of 1927, Decided on 19th April 1928, from a decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 9th December 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 168 of 1926.

(a) Hindu law—Will—Legatee to get property after death of testator and his wife—Legatee and his heirs have vested interest after testator's death and are entitled to redeem the mortgage by testator—Transfer of Property Act, S. 91.

A legatee who has to get the devised property after the deaths of the testator and his wife, and who survives the testator, has after the testator's death a vested interest in the property which is transmissible to his son. The legatee and his heirs are persons falling under S. 91 and are entitled to redeem the mortgage by testator under S. 91, Cl. (b) Hindu law—Widow's estate—Testator not limiting nature of estate—Widow has widow's estate only—Decree on mortgage by testator against widow in absence of fraud or collusion is binding on reversioners.

In the absence of any words or any expression limiting the nature or extent of the interest of the testator's wife it should be presumed that she has a Hindu widow's estate during her lifetime. In absence of fraud or collusion, therefore, a decree in respect to a mortgage executed by testator on a claim binding on the inheritance obtained against the widow in possession is binding on all the succeeding heirs, and other persons entitled to possession of the property after widow's death. 9 *M. (c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 91—Person need not have immediate right to possession — Reversioner can redeem during widow's lifetime mortgage by her husband.

Possessing an immediate right to possession and enjoyment is not essential for claiming a right of redemption. As such a reversionary heir is entitled during the lifetime of the widow to redeem a mortgage made by her husband: 30 All. 497, Diss. from. [P 29 C 1]

K K Gandhe—for Appellant

Judgment.—The material facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal are not disputed One Bapuji Kunbi owned sub-division No 3 of the field S. No 666 situated in Mauza Mangruli, Tahsil Morsi in the Amraoti District On 10th May 1915, he executed a mortgage (vide Ex P. 4 its copy) by conditional sale for Rs. 200 in respect of the said land, in favour of Krishnaji deceased father of defendants 1 and 2 Balya and Rajaram On the same date he executed a will in favour of the plaintiff's father Piraji his nephew. By the said will he bequeathed the aforesaid land to the latter, who was to be its owner after the deaths of the testator and his wife. Bapuji died in September 1915 while Piraji died in 1919. In 1921, defendant 2 one of the two sons and heirs of the mortgagee Krishnaji (who died in the year 1916) brought a suit upon the aforesaid mortgage against Bapuji's widow Mt. Bhiwari, obtained a foreclosure decree against her and took possession of the mortgaged property about 20th January.

1922 The plaintiff Mahadeo son of the deceased legatee Piraji was not impleaded as a defendant in the mortgage suit He has now instituted the suit leading to this appeal for redemption of the aforesaid mortgage. The Sub-Judge who tried this suit dismissed it on the strength of the finding that neither Piraji, nor the plaintiff acquired any interest in the land in suit, by virtue of the will, as Piragi died before Mt. Bhiwari, and that Mt Bhiwari fully represented the estate in the previous mortgage suit. On an appeal being preferred by the plaintiff, the Additional District Judge who heard it, confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance, holding that Mt. Bhiwari fully represented the estate in the mortgage suit, and that the plaintiff had absolutely no right to redeem the mortgage, his interest in the property being similar to that of a reversionary heir under Hindu Law.

The plaintiff has now preferred this second appeal, and both the adverse findings recorded by the lower appellate Court are assailed by him in this Court. It is contended on the appellant's behalf, that the plaintiff, who claims in the present suit as the son of the legatee under Bapuji's will, and not as a reversionary heir under Hindu Law, has a vested interest in the property in suit, and that consequeutly he is entitled to redeem the mortgage in question, as a person falling under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b), S. 91, T. P. Act ; while, on the other hand, it is argued for the respondents that the position of the plaintiff's father, Piraji under the will is not better than that of a reversionary heir under Hindu Law, that, as a person having a mere chance of succession, he cannot claim to possess the interest contemplated by either of the two Cls. (a) and (b), S 91, of the aforesaid Act, and that the plaintiff has consequently no right to redeem the property in question On giving due consideration to the arguments addressed by the learned counsel of the contending parties, it seems to me that the interest claimed by the plaintiff on the strength of the will stands on a much higher footing than that of a reversionary heir, that his case falls under either Cl. (a) or Cl. (b), S. 91, T. P. Act, and that, therefore, he would be entitled to claim the right to redeem the property in suit, provided his claim is not otherwise barred. It is an undisputed fact that the legatee Piraji survived the testator Bapuji. It follows from this fact that on the latter's death the former got a vested interest in the property bequeathed to him and that such an interest was transmissible to his heirs and assignees. It did not lack in certainty and cannot consequently be called a contingent or uncertain interest which may or may not have any legal operation. Looked at from this standpoint, the legatee's interest which the plaintiff inherited from his father Piragi stands on a much higher footing than the uncertain and contingent interest of a reversionary heir having a mere chance of succession, and which is in view of Cl. (a), S. 6, T. P. Act not a fit subject of legal transfer. The very fact of the character of the former as a vested interest differentiates it from the latter. It has been affirmed in Bilaso v. Munni Lal (1) that a legatee who has to get the devised property after the deaths of the testator, and his wife, and who survives the testato. has after the testator's death a vested interest in the property which is transmissible to his son

The same principle has been given effect to in Rhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (2) in which on the death of the testator's mother and wife the property was to pass to his sister's sons. It was held that the sister's sons who were living at the testator's death had a vested interest, though their possession and enjoyment of the property was postponed till the deaths of the testator's mother and widow. The cases of Ram Chandar v Kallu (3), Narayana Kutti Goundan v. Pechiammal (4), Narayanasami Naicker v. Periasamy Odayar (5) and Kandaswami Nayakkar v. Venkata Reddiar, A. I. R. 1925 Mad 1219 at p. 1221. relied on by the respondent's learned counsel do not help him in any way, as they are all cases of reversioners. On the other hand, there are some observations in the judgments of Sundara Aiyar, J. in Narayana Kutti Goundan v. Pechiammal (4) and of Ramesam, J., in Narayanasami Naicker v. Periasamy Odayar (5) in support of the proposition that under certain circumstances even a reversioner may be entitled to redeem, during the lifetime of the widow. There is no condition in the will in question, that Piraji would get the property in suit if he survived the testator's widow. In the absence of such a condition he would have a vested interest in the property immediately on the testator's death and such interest being transmissible legally passed to his son and heir, namely, the plaintiff. For the foregoing reasons such an interest would entitle the plaintiff to claim the right of redemption as a person falling under either Cl. (a) or Cl (b), S 91, T. P. Act. It is not necessary for the assertion of such a right that he should have a present right to possession and enjoyment. Even though the present right to possession and enjoyment cannot be claimed by persons falling under Cls. (c), (f) and (g), S 91, all of them have the right to institute a suit for redemption under the said section It is quite plain, therefore, that possessing a present right to possession and enjoyment is not essential for claiming a right of redemption.

I am, therefore, unable to accept the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges who decided the case of Ram Chandar v. Kallu (3) for holding that a reversionary heir is not entitled during the lifetime of the widow to redeem a mortgage made by the husband. Irrespective of the question of owning a present right to possession the person falling under any of the seven clauses of S. 91 is entitled to institute a suit for redemption, and it has been already observed that the plaintiff is a person falling under either Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of the said section, and is as such entitled to redeem a mortgage made by the testator. As an abstract proposition of law, this conclusion is quite correct, but it cannot for reasons to be stated hereafter, be availed of by the appellant under the peculiar circumstances of the present case.

This brings me to the second question involved in this appeal. It is whether the interest possessed by the testator's widow is a mere life-estate or a Hindu widow's estate. If the former, the testator's widow would not be able to represent the full estate left by her husband, in an action brought by the mortgagee upon a mortgage executed by the testator, while, if the latter, she would represent the full estate in such an action, and the decree passed against her would bind the whole estate including the vested interest of the plaintiff. On a careful scrutiny of the will (vide Ex. P-3) I find that there are no words restricting or circumscribing the scope or extent of the interest, which the testator's widow would ordinarily own during her lifetime under Hindu law. The testator has mentioned himself and his wife in one and the same sentence as persons entitled to full enjoyment of the property during their lifetime. In the absence of any words or any expression limiting the nature or extent of the interest of the testator's wife, it would be presumed that Mt. Bhiwari had a Hindu widow's estate during her lifetime in respect of the property left by her husband. Now it is an established proposition of law that in absence of fraud or collusion a decree on a claim binding on the inheritance, obtained against the widow in possession, is binding on all the succeeding heirs and other persons entitled to possession of the property after the widow's death: vide, Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (6) and Ganpatrao v. Laxmi Bai (7) and that in such a suit the widow represents the full estate inclusive of the interests of the said persons vide Subbammal v. Avudiyammal (8), Gur Nanak Prashad v. Jai Narain Lal (9), Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (10), Risal Singh v Balwant Singh (11) and Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (12).

I hold, therefore, that the testator's widow has a Hindu widow's estate during her lifetime in respect of the property left by her husband, that in the previous mortgage suit she fully represented the whole estate including the plaintiff's vested interest in the field in suit, and that in absence of any suggestion of fraud or collusion in respect of the decree passed in that suit, the foreclosure decree obtained therein is binding on the plaintiff and this fact bars the plaintiff's suit for redemption.

C. P. Tenancy Act (1920), S. 6—S. 6 does not validate mortgage which is voidable under Tenancy Act (1898), S. 41 (7).

Section 6 applies only to mortgages effected after the date of its coming into force. It does not do away with the voidability under Cl. (7), S. 41 (Tenancy Act of 1898), attached to mortgages executed in contravention of that section. [P 30 C 2]

N. G. Bose—for Respondent.

Judgment —The plaintiffs, who are mortgagees of an absolute occupancy holding and other property, sued the tenant and the landlord for foreclosure of the mortgage The landlord was not a necessary party to the suit on the mortgage as he claimed to be in possession by a paramount title and pleaded that he was not bound by the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs appellants. However, the plaintiffs chose to proceed against him and sought and obtained a decision in the trial Court as to their mutual rights. Under these circumstances it would be too late to urge that the landlord should have been discharged from the suit, and the plaintiffs and the landlord here express their willingness to accept adjudication of their mutual rights in this suit

The lower appellate Court has refused to pass a decree for foreclosure of the absolute occupancy holding and has dismissed the suit against the landlord. A decree has been passed against the tenant for foreclosure of property other than the holding included in the mortgage. The position as between the plaintiffs appellants who are the mortgagees and defendant respondent 1, the landlord, is this. The plaintiffs hold a mortgage of an absolute occupancy holding executed by the tenant in 1919 before the new Tenancy Act came into force. The landlord is in possession under a surrender deed executed in 1924 after that Act came into force. The plaintiffs contend that the landlord is bound by the mortgage and unless he redeems the mortgage that holding should be foreclosed. The plaintiffs have therefore to prove that their mortgage is enforceable against the landlord. The mortgage to which S. 41, Tenancy Act of 1898 applied, was effected without notice under Cl (4) of that section, and was admittedly, voidable at his instance. It is difficult to see how the plaintiffs can seek to enforce such a mortgage against the landlord in possession under a bona fide surrender

The contention that S. 6, Tenancy Act of 1920, renders the mortgage binding on the landlord is untenable The section obviously applies only to mortgages effected after the date of its coming into force It does not do away with the voidability under Cl (7), S 41, Tenancy Act of 1898, attached to mortgages executed in contravention of that section It is not shown that the landlord's right or option to avoid the mortgage had ceased to exist or to be exercisable at the date of the suit

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Order of Reference

Findlay, J. C —The plaintiffs' suit for damages in respect of non-performance of a contract of sale has been dismissed by the Judge of the lower Court There was admittedly an agreement by the defendant's mother and natural guardian, Mt. Tulsabai, to sell the house in suit for Rs, 4,500 to the present applicants. Admittedly also Rs 500 was paid as earnest money.

The first question for decision is who is responsible for the breach of the contract. This question depends on whether the plaintiffs' allegation that a condition precedent to the forfeiture of the contract was that the defendant's mother should apply to the Court to be formally appointed as guardian of the minor, is true or not. On this point, after considering the evidence, I find myself in full agreement with the finding of fact arrived at by the Judge of the Small Cause Court. It is true that the plaintiffs have produced several witnesses who alleged the contrary, but their evidence strikes me as interested and unreliable when they were taken into details, e. g , regarding the presence or not of Mt. Tulsabai's mukhtyar, or regarding there having been any talk about a receipt being wanted or not, the witnesses are discrepant. To my mind, it seems grossly unlikely that, in a contract of sale of this sort where an amount of Rs. 4,500 was in question and where Rs. 500 was paid, a receipt would not have been insisted on, particularly in view of the fact that the contract was not to be completed until two months later. There seems every reason to suppose that the defendant's allegation in this connexion is correct and that the plaintiffs have refrained from producing the receipt as it would be unfavourable to themselves Over and beyond this, if there had been a definite agreement between the parties that Tulsabai had to get herself appointed formally as guardian by the Court, I am strongly of opinion that the plaintiffs would have insisted on this condition having been reduced to writing.

There are other circumstances which go to show that the plaintiffs have not played a straight game in the present case. The agreement took place on 17th October 1925 and the documentary evidence on the plaintiffs' part showing that they insisted on Mt. Tulsabai being appointed by the Court as the guardian of the minor occurs in Ex. P-2, dated 20th December 1926, in reply to the defendant's notice (P-1), dated the 14th idem. It seems to me that the plaintiffs, for reasons best known to themselves, failed to complete the contract and seized the opportunity of the defendant having effected a sale to another party to claim back their earnest money on the pretext mentioned I am, therefore, so far in agreement with the lower Court's judgment

It has, however, been urged before me that, in any event, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover their earnest money, and the decision of Hallifax, A. J. C., in Lachhmi Narayan v. Damodardas (1), has been relied on in this connexion. That decision, although one by a Single Judge, dissented from the decision of Drake-Brockman, J. C , in Mangal Lal v. Mt. Nanni (2), and this breach of rule No. 3 of the Rules of Practice of this Court was apparently justified in the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner's opinion by the fact that Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Manga Lal v. Mt Nanni (2), overlooked the Bench decision in Ballabhdas v. Paikaji (3). I may point out, however, that, in the last quoted case, the assumption was that there was a stipulation in the contract that the part payment or earnest money should be forfeited if the purchaser made default. In the present case, there has been no proof that there was any express agreement as regards the forfeiture of the earnest money, and the question which remains for consideration may be stated as follows. If A agrees to sell a property to B and earnest money or an advance payment of part of the purchase-money is paid to A and if B subsequently commits a breach of the contract, is B entitled to recover from A the advance payment or earnest money in question? As I have pointed out, the decisions in Mangal Lal v. Mt. Nanni (2) and Lachhmi Narayan v. Damodardas (1), quoted above, are conflicting on the point. Moreover, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in a case, so far not, to my knowledge, officially reported, viz., Privy Council Appeal No. 80 of 1923, from Allahabad Appeal No. 44 of 1921, it would appear that their Lordships held that earnest money is liable to be forfeited when a transaction falls through by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee. This decision, in turn, gives rise to some doubt as to whether the old Bench decision of this Court in Ballabhdas v. Paikaji (3), quoted above, requires re-consideration.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 103=20 N. L. R. 192.
(3) [1916] 12 N. L. R. 177=38 I. C. 915.

I accordingly refer the above question to a Full Bench consisting of Judicial Commissioner, 2nd Additional Judicial Commissioner and 3rd Additional Judicial Commissioner.

Opinion

Findlay, J. C.—The question referred for the consideration of this Full Bench is as follows :

"If A agrees to sell a property to B and earnest money or an advance payment of part of the purchase-money is paid to A, and if B subsequently commits a breach of the contract is B entitled to recover from A, the advance payment or earnest money in question?"

It will be convenient to consider first the question of earnest money simpliciter, leaving out of account the item of an advance payment of part of the purchase-money, regarding which it is possible that different legal incidents might arise.

This particular matter was considered at great length by Batten and Stanyon, A. J. Cs., in Ballabhdas v. Paikaji (3). It is unnecessary to repeat at length the reasoning of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners in that judgment. It will suffice to say that the Additional Judicial Commissioners were of opinion that such earnest money or a part payment in advance of the purchase-money made under a stipulation that it shall be forfeited if the purchaser makes default is governed by S. 74, Contract Act, and gives the Courts discretion to deal with the forfeiture on equitable principles. In coming to this decision they did, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners accepted the opinion of Sankaran Nair, J., in Natesa Iyer v. Appavu Padayachi (4), as opposed to that of Wallis, J. The matter next came before a Judge of this Court in Mangal Lal v. Mt Nanni (2). In that case, Drake-Brockman, J.C., dealt with the matter somewhat cursorily and came to the conclusion that a deposit or earnest money of the kind under consideration can be retained by the vendor where a contract goes off owing to a default of the purchaser. Hallifax, A.J.C., in Lachhmi Narayan v. Damodardas (1), again considered the question and accepted the view of the Bench decision in Ballabhdas v. Paikaji (3) Meanwhile, however, their Lordships of the Privy Council have had the same question before them in Chiranjit Singh v. Har Swarap (5). from a decision of the Allahabad High Court Their Lordships, it is true, have not dealt with the matter at any great length, but this appears to be, in my opinion, because they considered the point at issue a perfectly clear one which required no detailed discussion. The appeal was decided practically on the following statement of the law applicable in the opinion of their Lordships :

"Earnest money is part of the purchase price when the transaction goes forward it is forfeited when the transaction falls through, by reason of the fault or failure of the vendee."

The application of this principle to the question before us settles the case in my opinion. It need hardly be said incidentally that, in the question we have before us, we assume that it is immovable property which has been agreed to be sold It has been urged by the pleader for the applicants that their Lordships' decision on this question must be regarded as a mere obiter dictum. I am wholly unable to see any ground whatever for this suggestion. Very obviously, the matter in question formed the crux of the appeal and the mere brevity of their Lordship's judgment on the question at issue cannot, in any way, justify the assumption that their Lordships had not given full consideration to the question involved. It would be utterly unreasonable to assume that, when their Lordships issued the dictum in question, they had not in mind the fact of the existence of the Indian Contract Act and the fact that provisions like Ss. 63, 64, 73 and 74 thereof are on the Statute Book. I find it impossible to assume that their Lordships were not laying down a general proposition of law on the point involved It has even been suggested that their Lordships, in deciding the question. were, at the time, dealing with a decision of the Allahabad High Court, which has been in the habit of taking the view followed by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Mangal Lal v. Mt. Nanhi (2), quoted above, and that their decision might have been different had they been dealing with a case from certain other High Courts which have taken, in the past, the contrary view. I find it utterly impossible to make any such assumption which would involve the absurdity that their Lordships assumed that the incidents of the law of contract would differ on a matter like this as between different High Courts. In the circumstances, it seems to me clear that this Court, in view of the decision of their Lordships, is bound to answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the negative ; in other words, my answer to the said question would be as follows :

"If A agrees to sell a property to B and earnest money is paid to A, and if B subsequently commits a breach of the contract, B is not entitled to recover from A the said earnest money."

I desire, however, to add that, with all respect, I am unable to accept the view enunciated by Batten and Stanyon, A. J. Cs.. and by Hallifax, A. J. C., in the Nagpur Law Report cases quoted above. I am unable to accept the position that the Contract Act is exhaustive as regards the law of contract. As the very preamble to the said Act shows, the said piece of legislation only proposes to codify a certain part of the law referring to contracts, and the second part of S. 1 of the Act expressly exempts usages of customs of trade from being affected by the provisions of the Act. That payment of earnest money is a custom or usage of trade in India as well as in England cannot be denied and it, normally, is paid under an implied agreement with the vendee that if the contract is broken, the vendor is entitled to retain the said amount, whereas, if the contract is fulfilled, the earnest money is credited as part payment of the price : cf. Muhammad Habib-Ullah v. Muhammad Shafi (5), Natesa Aiyer v. Appavu Padayachi (6), Atul Chandra Kundu v. Sarat Chandra Lala (7) and Nadiar Chand v. Satis Chandra (8).

For my own part, it seems to me that ex natura rei earnest money, which is not, in essentials, a penalty but is a mere security for the due fulfilment of an agreement, is excluded from the operation of provisions like Ss. 63 and 64, Contract Act. Similarly, it seems to me that, as regards S. 74, earnest money as such cannot be, by any stretch of reasoning, regarded as a sum named in the contract to be paid in case of breach, nor can it equally be properly described as a stipulation by way of penalty. The reasoning of White, C. J , and of Miller, J., in Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (6), quoted above, has my respectful concurrence in this connexion.

The present case is thus not, in my opinion, one as has been argued by the pleader for the applicants, in which the Contract Act lays down a rule specifically applicable to the case we have considered. Had that been so, I should have agreed that the law applicable would have been the specific provision of the Contract Act in question on the general principle that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, but, as I have already indicated, the Contract Act is confessedly not exhaustive on the incidents of the law of contract applicable in this country.

It has been suggested that one of the objects of the Contract Act was to exclude from Indian law the intricacies thereof with reference to penalties, liquidated damages and the like, but had the intention of the legislature been to include, in sections like 63 and 64 of the said Act, the item of earnest money, I should certainly have expected specific mention of the same to have been made. I would, therefore, answer the question as regards earnest money as stated above and that, as a matter of fact. suffices for the purposes of the decision of Civil Revision No. 15 of 1928.

When I turn to the question of whether the same reply should be given on the reference as regards an advance payment of part of the purchase-money, I find it impossible to frame, in categorical terms, a specific answer in the affirmative or in the negative for the simple reason that, even under English Law, forfeiture of the entire advance payment is not invariable when such payment is considerable in amount. My answer to this part of the reference would also be in the negative, if such part payment was of such proportion of the purchase-money and of such a nature generally as would enable the Court to regard it as akin or analogous to earnest money, i. e, if the part payment had been made mainly as a security for the due fulfilment of the contract.

It has been suggested in the present case that the proportion of earnest money was unduly high. This is a matter which hardly arises on the reference, but as it has been argued before the Full Bench, I desire to record my opinion that the amount of Rs. 500, coming only to 1/9th of the total price agreed upon, is not so high as to justify any assumption that the payment in question was not both nominally and in reality one of earnest money pure and simple. I accordingly would answer the reference as stated above.

Kinkhede, A J C—I concur with the learned Judicial Commissioner in the opinion recorded by him I have nothing to add.

Mohiuddin, A. J. C.—I concur.

First Appeal No. 97 of 1927, Decided on 14th July 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 30th April 1927. in Execution Case No. 23 of 1919.

Civil P. C., S. 152—Suit for partnership accounts compromised deciding S entitled to three annas share, but agreeing to another member to manage business—Decree ordering in terms of compromise, S to be entitled to that share—S not appealing against decree, nor applying for its review—S seeking execution of decree and praying alternately to amend decree if it be not in terms of compromise—Decree was in terms of compromise, merely declaratory and incapable of execution—Even if it were not in terms of compromise, it could not be amended, so as to make it capable of execution, as time for same had passed by—Decree—Executability.

Under a compromise terminating a suit for partnership accounts, a person, S, was held to be entitled to a three annas share in the partnership and it was further agreed that another sharer should transact all the business of the firm, balance the accounts and render them when asked. In the decree that followed it was ordered and declared in terms of compromise that S was entitled to three annas share in the property belonging to the firm. S sought to execute the decree praying that he should be put in joint possession of his share and if the decree were considered as not embodying terms of contract it should be amended under S. 152. No appeal against the decree was filed, nor any application for review made within time.

Held: that the decree was only declaratory and was also in accordance with the terms of the compromise. It could not, therefore, be executed as sought for. [P 35 C 2]

V. V. Bose—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In Civil Suit No. 23 of 1919 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, the appellant Mt Dhannabai sued the respondent Keshrichand and one Manmal, now represented by his widow Manabai, for partnership accounts and for the recovery of certain profits as well for division, by metes and bounds, and possession of the plaintiff's alleged share in the immovable property concerned, as well as for the recovery of ornaments specified in Sch G. After the case had reached the evidence stage, a compromise was arrived at; the terms of the compromise are on record. Under it, the present appellant was held to be entitled to a three annas share, defendant 1 to a seven anna share and defendant 2 to six anna share. It was further agreed, that defendant 1 should transact all the business of the firm, balance the accounts and render them when asked, other terms as to the amount of money, the plaintiff and defendant 2 might spend for the construction of a temple and of a bungalow, were also included, as well as various miscellaneous matters which it is unnecessary to specify here. The decree passed in the case by the Additional District Judge cannot be described as a peculiarly clear or lucid one. It is in these terms :

"It is ordered and declared in terms of compromise that the plaintiff is entitled to three annas share only in the moveable and immovable property belonging to the firm of Ramkaran Hiralal noted on reverse and her claim for ornaments is dismissed as fully satisfied out of Court."

Further, orders were passed in the decree as to costs in accordance with the terms of the compromise.

The present appellant attempted to execute this decree in the lower Court, and the Additional District Judge, who was not the same officer as the one who had passed the decree in the suit, held that the application for execution did not lie. The main prayer in the execution was that the decree-holder should be put in joint possession of her share, that the profits should be ascertained and her share thereof credited to her in respect of the period ending in Dewali 1925, and that these profits and other items should be paid to her. The application for execution was opposed on the ground that merely a declaratory decree had been passed which was incapable of execution, and the Additional District Judge upheld this contention and dismissed the execution application.

The appellant has now come up to this Court on appeal, and in this connexion our attention has been drawn to the fact that the appellant prayed in the lower Court that, if the decree were considered as not embodying the terms of the compromise, it should be amended under S. 152, Civil P C. We may at once say that the terms of the compromise were not overlucid and that it remains a matter of some difficulty as to whether the intention of the parties was that the appellant should be put in formal joint possession of the share she was held to be entitled to. As we, however, read the compromise, particularly in connexion with the pleadings of the respective parties in the suit, it seems to us clear that the defendants did not dispute the plaintiff's right to a 3 anna share. Their main and reasonable objection was that it was desirable that defendant 1 should remain in sole charge of the business, and it seems to us that, rightly or wrongly, this was also the intention of the Additional District Judge in the form of the decree he drew up. It has been argued before us that the words "in terms of compromise," which occur in the decree, necessarily mean that the present appellant is entitled to claim in execution the various items of profits and the like, which were specifically referred to in the compromise, as well as the formal joint possession of the 3 anna share. We are, however, unable to accept this proposition. To our mind, it is clear that only a declaratory decree was passed affirming the fact that the appellant was entitled to a 3 anna share only in the estate and business and to the incidents that followed therefrom From this point of view, therefore, we agree with the Additional District Judge that the decree is not one capable of execution in the way in which the appellant now seems to enforce it.

We have been referred, in this connexion, to the decision in Jayanuddin Khan v. Jamiruddin Sarkar (1) and we are in full accord with the proposition laid down in that ruling. The proposition was to the effect that, in the case of a compromise decree, in order to properly understand and give effect to it, the Court is entitled to look behind the decree, so to speak, and consider the terms of the compromise. That case, however, was of a very different nature from the present one There the decree contained the amounts to be repaid by the respective defendants in instalments, but it omitted to include another condition relating to the whole amount becoming due in default of a single kist. The decision of Prideaux and Kinkhede, A J. Cs., in Naraindas Bhagwanji & Co. v Kalyanji Mawaji & Co (2) merely laid down that the terms of an award of a private arbitrator, or, of an adjustment, if susceptible, in every detail, to an effective order in the nature of specific performance, can be given effect to in the Court's decree, even if the original suit was merely declaratory in nature.

Our attention has also been drawn to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Medhi Ali Khan v. Ghanshiam Singh (3) and it has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the case in question was closely analogous to the present one. The decision of their Lordships was that where a compromise completely disposes of a suit and the terms agreed upon are such as to be susceptible of specific performance being granted, no party to such compromise can refuse to be bound by its terms and to escape from his obligations thereunder.

Their Lordships further held that, under O. 23, R. 2, Civil P C the Court was competent to record the compromise and to pass a decree in accordance therewith If the terms of the compromise in the case quoted be, however, examined it will be seen that they were peculiarly specific and of a kind which could at once be effectively enforced under a decree. We have been referred to a very similar decision of Lyle, A J C of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court in Bisheshar Singh v. Mohammad Yasin (4). We do not, however, think that the circumstances of the present case bring it within the purview of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted above As we read the compromise, it was intended to be merely one declaring the rights and shares of the different parties to the suit in the property, and there are various items in the compromise which, on the face of them, would be incapable of execution owing to the somewhat vague and general terms which are used in the deed in question Even however, if the position were otherwise and if we were to grant for the time being that the decree was a wrong or imperfect one and did not give effect to the intention of the parties, we are of opinion that the appellant has already lost her remedy If she were not satisfied with the terms of the decree as passed, she had a remedy by appeal under O 43, R 1 (m), Civil P C. and it is possible that the appellate Court might have been able to extract, from the compromise, certain of its specific terms capable of execution. No such appeal was filed and similarly an application for review under O. 47, R 2, Civil P C, no longer lies. Equally so, it seems to us impossible to hold that, assuming, for the time being, the decree to be a faulty one, it can now be corrected under S. 152, Civil P C. It is impossible, by any stretch of reasoning to hold that the Additional District Judge, in the terms of the decree merely made a clerical or arithmetical mistake, or an accidential slip or omission. It is perfectly obvious, on the contrary, that he deliberately drew up a declaratory decree stating what the plaintiff's rights were under the compromise, and, as we have already said, we do not see any reason to suppose that the Additional District Judge was wrong in so interpreting the compromise in question. Indeed we are prepared to go further and to affirm that the attempt of the present appellant to execute the decree in the way she desires to, would, in reality, amount to an effort to go behind the compromise and to give her a right to meddle directly in the management of the estate, a right which was expressly denied her by the terms of Cl. (b) of the compromise Even, however, had this not been so, the time for amendment of the decree in the manner in which the appellant desires it to be amended, so as to make it capable of execution, has clearly long since passed by and we are of opinion that the executing Court had no alternative but to dismiss the application for execution For these reasons, the appeal fails and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs. We fix Rs. 50 as pleader's fees Only one set of costs will be allowed to respondents.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 129 of 1928, Decided on 16th July 1928, from order of Sess-Judge, Nagpur, D/- 20th March 1928, in Sessions Trial No 21 of 1927.

(a) Penal Code, S. 147 — Members of crowd charged with rioting — Prosecution need only establish that they were voluntarily members of the crowd.

Where persons are charged with rioting in a case of confused riot, all that the prosecution needs to establish is that the accused were voluntarily members of the crowd of rioters who committed the offence alleged. [P 37 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 307 — High Court will not interfere with verdict of jury unless it is obviously perverse, manifestly wrong or unreasonable.

High Court will only interfere with a verdict of a jury when such verdict is obviously perverse or manifestly wrong or unreasonable : A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 308, Foll. [P 37 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 162 — Police Officers deposing to identification of accused in identification parade — Evidence is admissible as it is an actual fact or circumstance witnessed.

Evidence of police officers who give evidence with regard to the identification parades which were held and who depose to certain of the accused having been identified by prosecution witnesses in an identification parade is not inadmissible in evidence under S. 162, as their evidence does not relate to any statement made to the police but is a simple exposition of a fact or circumstances witnessed by themselves. [P 38 C 1, 2]

If neither in their examination before the Committing Magistrate, nor in that in the Sessions Court, accused disclose what their exact defence is to be, and they only enter on their defence of alibi, a certain presumption arises against them as to their guilt of offence. [P 39 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Scope.

Perverse verdict does not make Court improperly constituted.

Judgment. — The appellant, Ramadhin, together with his co-appellants Bachhoo Singh, Bhika, Ramprashad, Ramchandra, Dharma, Dewaji and Rama (Criminal Appeals Nos 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135 and 136 of 1928), whose appeals are also disposed of in this judgment, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, of an offence under S. 302 read with S. 149, I P C, and sentenced to transportation for life At the same trial, eight appellants were also tried with the aid of a jury, under provisions of S 269 (3), Criminal P C., for an offences under S 436, read with S. 149, I. P C. As regards the latter offence, the jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty and the Sessions Judge disagreeing with this verdict, has referred the case under S. 307, Criminal P C., to this Court. In this judgment, therefore, I dispose of the criminal appeals stated as well as of the above reference.

The present offence is alleged to have occurred on the 5th day of September last in the course of the communal rioting between Hindus and Muhammadans, which was, at the time, rife in Nagpur. In the particular riot with which I am concerned, no less than five Muhammadans, Budhu, Piru, Zahed Ali, Fateh Khan and Pir Khan met with their death, while others were seriously injured. A house, to be referred to hereafter, was also set on fire, and the circumstances of the case are admittedly such that, if the present appellants are guilty or innocent of the offence under S. 436, I. P. C, they are equally guilty or innocent of the offence under S. 302, read in each case as already stated with S. 149, I. P. C.

In a confused riot of the kind I am concerned with here, all that the prosecution desires or needs to establish is that the appellants were voluntarily members of the crowd of rioters who committed the offence alleged. In dealing, therefore, with the evidence in this case, I have to consider it, both as regards the appeals and the reference, on the principles which I have adverted to in Emperor v Kankaya (1), viz, that this Court will only interfere with a verdict of a jury when such verdict is obviously perverse or manifestly wrong or unreasonable, and it is from this point of view that I propose examining the evidence in the present case. The case, although a voluminous one, is, from the point of view stated comparatively simple, the one vital question in the case being a mere one of fact as to whether the evidence of certain of the prosecution witnesses, who profess to have seen the various appellants amongst the crowd, should be accepted, or the evidence of the defence witnesses, who depose in each case to alibi on the part of the appellants should, on the contrary, be preferred.

Before, however, entering on an examination of the evidence, I desire to dispose of certain law points which have been raised on behalf of the appellants One of the counsel, who appeared on behalf of the appellant Dharma, raised what appears to me to be a somewhat unsubstantial question of law. As is obvious from the Sessions Judge's judgment and his order on the reference, when read together, the Sessions Judge was of opinion that the opinion of the assessors and jurors as to the innocence of the appellants was a perverse one. It must be noted in this connexion that all the five jurors and assessors were Hindus. The Sessions Judge has given his reasons for his view in this connexion in para 13 of the judgment. Whether that view is correct or not is not a question I am concerned with at the moment. The argument offered in this connexion has been a somewhat novel one. It is that, as the Sessions Judge holds the jurors' verdict and assessors' opinion to be a perverse one, there was no properly constituted Court for the trial of the case in question. I am wholly unable to accept this contention for which I know of no sound basis, either in law or even in common sense. Very obviously the fact of whether a jury is going to return a perverse verdict cannot, in the normal case, appear until the verdict has been given and, even if an individual juror or assessor is, at the inception of the trial, prejudiced in a communal case like the present because of the fact that persons belonging to his own community are being tried for an offence against members of a rival community, the Court can, in the normal case, have no means of finding this out until his verdict or opinion, as the case may be, is given in the matter I have referred to an unofficially reported case, apparently a Madras one, in which it was laid down that where, in the course of a trial, it is found that one of the assessors is interested, and is so unfit to sit, the duty of the Court is to refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order appointing the incompetent assessor and all subsequent proceedings in the trial. Even if this case could be accepted as laying down a correct exposition of the law, it is obvious, on the face of it, that it has no application to the circumstances of the present case, and, as a matter of fact, another counsel, who appeared for the same appellant (Dharma) admitted in his reply that the Court, as constituted, was a proper one I see no reason, therefore, to devote further time to this contention which seems to me to have no sound basis, either in law or in reason

The second question of law, which has been raised in this case, is that the statements of witnesses like Harvey (P. W. No. 17), Mr. Deoskar, P. W. No. 22 and other officers, who give evidence with regard to the identification parades which were held in this case and who depose to certain of the appellants having been identified by the relevant prosecution witnesses, are inadmissible having regard to the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C.; I am wholly unable to accept this proposition, in support of which a single decision of the Rangoon High Court Full Bench reported in an unofficial publication has been quoted. The witnesses, who depose to certain of the appellants having been identified by certain of the prosecution witnesses, are not, in my opinion, deposing to a statement made to the police. They are, on the contrary, deposing to an actual fact or circumstance seen and observed by themselves This type of evidence is, after all, only of a corroborative nature, the essential witnesses to the identification being the prosecution ones who identified certain of the appellants; but, even so, the evidence of witnesses like Mr Harvey and others does not relate to any statement made to the police but is a simple exposition of a fact or circumstance witnessed by themselves This contention, therefore, seems to me to be entirely without basis, and I have been unable to see that the decision quoted in support of it, in any way, affords justification therefor

I now turn to the facts of the present case; for the purposes of this judgment, it is unnecessary to repeat, in great detail, the story of this lamentable riot in which the majority party showed not only appalling savagery but, at the same time, also despicable cowardice Five Mahomedans were killed in the riot, viz., Budhu, his brother Piru, his nephew Zahed Ali, one Ragehkhan and his nephew Pir Khan. Husaini, another nephew of Budhu was severely injured, and three other men, Shaikh Kallan, Jafar Khan and Jawahar Khan, also were wounded. Budhu lived in a hut made of tattas with a corrugated iron roof in the Imambada Mohalla of Nagpur, cf. the map (P. 33.) Fateh Khan lived in a hut a short distance away from Budhu. All the appellants lived in the neighbourhood, their houses being shown in the map. There had been trouble in Nagpur on the previous day (4th September 1927), and, on the morning of Monday the 5th September, a crowd of Hindus came to the house of Budhu and enquired whether Fateh Khan and Pir Khan were inside. I am not directly concerned with the anxiety of the Hindus to come in touch with Fateh Khan in particular, but there are indications on record that this man had incurred the special dislike of the Hindus at the time and that enquiries had been made for him, even on the previous evening. Fateh Khan and Pir Khan were as a matter of fact, concealed in the house of Budhu from the previous evening. On the first visit of the crowd on the Monday morning, Budhu came out on being called; he denied that Fateh Khan and Pir Khan were in his house; the crowd started to beat Budhu and he took shelter inside again. There were six Mahomedan men inside the house and it would appear that they made a courageous sally out, armed with what was described as "iron swords," but were some species of iron bands or the like, and drove the Hindus back twice. The crowd, however, once more came up in great numbers; the estimates vary but there must have been at least 500. Kerosene oil was deliberately thrown on the tattas and the house set on fire, and all the six male inmates some of whom had received severe burns in the meantime were forced by the fire to fly outside; they were at once set upon and killed with the exception of Husaini who was left lying unconscious and presumably was considered to be dead, or as good as dead. Shaikh Kallan, who was also in the house, bolted for the Imambada but was pursued by some of the mob and beaten there

In the Imambada there was also one Jafar Khan and he was similarly assaulted. Budhu's wife Jubedunnisa and his daughter Habiban as well as Fateh Khan's wife Maktumbi and his adopted daughter Munirbi then went to the Imambada for shelter, while Mt Kallo, the mother of Budhu, remained near the house, where the dead bodies were lying, and was found sitting there in the evening by Punia Kotwar (P. W. No. 2) who made the first report of the offence That the crowd, as a whole, was bent on murder and arson and succeeded in their object has not been denied by the defence; nor can it be denied that these unfortunate Mahomedans were done to death under atrocious circumstances of savagery, purely as a result of communal hatred. If the present appellants are proved to have been voluntary members of the attacking crowd, then their guilt as regards both offences is established; if, on the other hand, the evidence leaves the fact of their having been such members of the crowd in doubt, then they are entitled to be acquitted

Before proceeding to examine the evidence, I desire to make certain general observations Although there can be no diminution of the standard of proof required in a case of serious offence, like the one I am concerned with here, it is pertinent to observe that, as regards the prosecution evidence, considerable allowance must necessarily be made in the case, particularly of the Mahomedan women witnesses who saw their nearest and dearest done to death in the way they were Their state of mental agony and confusion must have been very pronounced indeed, and, in the case of all the witnesses, it is no doubt true that absolute exactitude of detail cannot be expected from them in their account of a confused and prolonged riot such as I am concerned with in this case

As regards the defence, I feel that I am also bound to make one observation. It is obvious that this case has been most strenuously defended and the prosecution witnesses have been subjected to an extraordinarily meticulous cross-examination, in which they have been confronted with their previous statements and cross-examined at great length on even petty points of detail.

As regards the alibi evidence of the appellants, I consider it my duty to make one general observation. Neither in their examination before the Committing Magistrate, nor in that in the Sessions Court, did the appellants disclose what their exact defence was to be. It was only when they entered on their defence that each of the appellants stated, in precise terms, his alibi That the appellants were within their legal rights in so doing, is, of course, obvious, but I am bound to say that a certain presumption arises against them in this connexion. If the appellants or any of them were innocent men, one should have expected them, from the first, to say. "I was not there at all, I was elsewhere." It may be urged, and possibly with some reason, that the appellants were well-advised to take this course in case of either the police or members of the Mahomedan community attempting meanwhile to interfere with the evidence of their alibis. In this, there may be some measure of truth but, on the other hand, if an absolutely innocent man is accused of an offence one naturally expects him, from the very start, to say: "I was not there at all, I was elsewhere in such and such place"; this the innocent man could do without disclosing in detail who the witnesses as to his alibi would be. However this may be, I have thought it well here to mention the fact as to the late stage of the case at which the alibis were disclosed (The judgment then discussed the oral evidence for the prosecution and proceeded.) Certain general arguments have been also advanced as to why some of the appellants, viz., Ramadhin, Bachho Singh and Bhika are unlikely to have been amongst the rioters It is suggested that, as they were employed in the Ralli Press and as no Mahomedans who took refuge there were molested, it would be unlikely that they would molest Mahomedans elsewhere The argument is about equivalent to saying that boys who are good inside school are necessarily also good outside, and nothing more need be said on this point.

It has also been suggested perfectly reasonably, that the evidence particularly of the Mahomedan women, in this case must be viewed with great caution, as human nature being what it is, they would be naturally anxious to see that some Hindus suffer for the crime committed by members of that community. I fully agree in this connexion that caution must be necessary in accepting the evidence, but after careful examination of the evidence and a serious consideration of the probabilities of the case, I am of opinion that a strong prima facie case has been made out against each of the appellants on the evidence examined above. I am in particular impressed with the consistency of the evidence of the identification and I am in full concurrence with the remarks of the Sessions Judge in this connexion. The position thus is that I am of opinion that there was ample prima facie evidence on record to warrant the conviction of the appellants and it becomes necessary therefore to turn to the defence evidence. (The judgment then dealt with the alibi evidence of the various appellants in turn and proceeded) The case in my opinion thus stands as follows: There is a large amount of prosecution evidence which specifically connects each and every one of the appellants with having been members of the riotous crowd on the day in question which committed these offences. Keeping in mind fully the principle laid down in Emperor v. Kankaya (1) referred to above, I feel myself forced to the conclusion that the prosecution case against these eight men is a true one and establishes a complete prima facie offence against them. The defence evidence elaborately worked up as it obviously has been and ingenious in certain respects, leaves on my mind only one possible impression and that is of absolute falsity. I find it difficult to imagine that the assessors or jurors, as the case may be, who heard the evidence, could, on any reasonable and bona fide grounds, come to the conclusion that these appellants were innocent. I am not concerned now with the motives which led the assessors or jurors to give a verdict which was either perverse, or obviously wrong or unreasonable It may be that they were actuated by mere communal bias, or it may equally be that, though they thought the appellants to be guilty, they were afraid to give an opinion or, in turn, a verdict accordingly, because of what they possibly feared would at least be said or thought of them by many members of the Hindu community. That one or other motive of such a kind operated on these assessors or jurors I have not the slightest doubt.

I have already pointed out that, if the appellants are guilty of the offence under S 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C, they must equally be held guilty of the offence under S 436 read with S 149. As regards the former offence, for the reasons given the appeals of all eight appellants are dismissed, the sentence imposed upon them being the least allowed by the law and one which, I may add, in the circumstances of this case, is certainly not an over-severe one As regards the reference made by the Sessions Judge under S. 307, Criminal P C., I accept it and I convict all the appellants of an offence under S. 436 read with S 149, I. P. C. For this offence, they will suffer ten years' rigorous imprisonment each, the said sentence to run concurrently with that of the transportation for life in the case of all eight men.

Second Appeal No. 216 of 1927, Decided on 24th February 1928, from judgment of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 10th January 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 173 of 1926.

Wajib-ul-arz—Express provision that tenant of 30 years can transfer his house site—No consent of lambardar was held necessary—C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 203 (8).

Where wijib-ul-arz provided that such of the tenants as are in possession of village sites from before the thirty years settlement are fully entitled to transfer the said sites and it was contended that lambardar's consent was necessary to a transfer of a house in abadi.

Held : that no consent was necessary in view of the explicit language of the wajib-ul-arz : 11 N. L. R. 126, Dist. [P 41 C 1]

S. K. Barlingay—for Appellant.

R. N. Padhey—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the lower Court's judgment and the question involved is in reality a most simple one. The plaintiff-appellant's contention is that as lambardar his consent was necessary to any subsequent transfer of the house in the abadi in question. It is difficult to say how such a contention can be seriously urged in face of the explicit language of the wajib-ul-arz (Ex. D. 1). That language is as follows :

" Tenants are entitled to get abadi land free for building houses or cattle-sheds. Such of the tenants as are in possession of village sites from before the thirty years settlement are fully entitled to transfer the said sites. Transfers of the houses on land which was vacant at the time of the 30 years settlement, however, shall be made only with the consent of the malguzar."

It is the middle sentence of the wajib-ul-arz which is the crucial one in this case.

The pleader for the appellant has urged that in view of the principles laid down in Narain v. Behari (1), as well as of the provisions contained in S. 203, Land Revenue Act of 1917, it should have been held that the transferees in this case became mere licensees and that the consent of the landlord to any further transfer of the abadi site or house was necessary. I find it extremely difficult to see any substance in this argument. So far as the ruling of Stanyon, A. J. C., is concerned, it must be remembered that the only principle laid down is that prima facie every tenant or other village resident is a licensee so far as the portion of the abadi site occupied by him is concerned. Here, however, in this connexion the words "prima facie" must not be overlooked. In the present case the wajib-ul-arz obviously gave a complete and full right of transfer to such tenants as were at the time of the 30 years settlement in possession of village sites. If it had been intended that any subsequent transferee from such a tenant should have a lesser right than his transferrer, most undoubtedly the wajib-ul-arz (Ex D. 1) would have provided something to the effect that although the original class of tenants had a full power of transfer the subsequent transferee would become a mere licensee and he could not in his turn transfer without the consent of the landlord. There is, needless to say, no such provision in the wajib-ul-arz It is equally futile to appeal to the provision in S 203, Land Revenue Act of 1917, for the simple reason that that provision cannot by any stretch of imagination be deemed to be a retrospective one which was intended to upset what had been done in the past. A reference to sub-S. (8) thereof makes this sufficiently obvious. But, even if sub-S. (8) were not on the statute book, the ordinary presumption that the statute in the absence of anything expressly declaring it so, was not intended to be retrospective, would apply. Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non praeteritis. Perfectly obviously in this case the original tenant and ipso facto in the absence of express condition or provision of law to the contrary, his subsequent transferee had a full and complete right of transfer to the site in question.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Criminal Revn. No. 199-B of 1928, Decided on 16th October 1928, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Khamgaon, D/- 27th July 1928, in Criminal Case No. 28 of 1928.

Criminal P. C, S. 344—Adjournments—Case fixed for a future date can be taken at an earlier date if notice is given to the accused or his pleader—Procedure is not illegal or irregular.

When a case is fixed for a future date, it can be heard at an earlier date, provided due notice is given to the accused or his pleader. The intention of the Code is that a criminal trial should proceed forthwith and should be continued from day to day until its termination. The changing of the date is not even a technical irregularity and the procedure is not illegal or irregular. [P 43 C 1]

G. R. Deo—for Applicant.

A. Razak—for Non-Applicant

Order.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Tahsildar and Magistrate, 1st Class, Khamgaon, dated 27th July 1928 ordering summons to issue to the prosecution witnesses and fixing the criminal case for hearing on 11th August 1928. It appears that the First Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Khamgaon, made a complaint against the appellant Raotmal for an offence of perjury under S. 193, I. P. C., and forwarded that complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for trial to the Special Magistrate 1st Class, Khamgaon. That complaint was received on 9th May 1928. The present applicant whose suit was dismissed by the First Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Khamgaon, filed an appeal against that decree to this Court Admittedly the criminal complaint arose out of the suit and he, therefore, on 21st June 1928 made an application to the criminal Court that, as he had appealed to the High Court and the appeal was fixed for hearing on 18th January 1929, the criminal trial should be stayed pending the decision of that appeal. The Magistrate, therefore, adjourned the hearing of the case to 23rd January 1929 and ordered the accused to be present on that date, binding him over for a sum of Rs. 500. The applicant, however, had previously applied to this Court for stay of the proceedings on 14th June and Kinkhede, A. J. C. passed an order on the same date, to the following effect :

"In the meantime a copy of the above order be sent to the criminal Court directing it to stay its hand pending receipt of final orders."

The application was fixed for hearing and came up for hearing before Hallifax, A. J. C, on 12th July 1928. On that date, the following order was recorded :

"Mr. G. R. Deo appears on behalf of Mr. M. K. Chande and states that the Magistrate has himself stayed the criminal trial till the decision of the civil appeal. That is fortunate for him. In cases of this nature it is usually doubtful whether it is at all necessary to stay either trial, and almost always certain that, if it is, the civil trial should be stayed and not the criminal. The application is rejected."

The case was received back by the Magistrate on 27th July and the Magistrate saw that the application was rejected and considered that it was unnecessary to order stay of proceedings of the case. He therefore decided to proceed with the case, issued summons to the prosecution witnesses and fixed a date for hearing as already stated above.

The applicant then made an application for revision to the Sessions Judge, Akola, but that application was dismissed on 21st August. A further application was then made to this Court. It seems to me, however, that there is very little force in the application. It is true that the Magistrate did originally fix the hearing of the case for 23rd January 1929, but he appears to have done so under a mistake, whether it was a mistake induced by the applicant or not. The order passed by Kinkhede, A. J. C. on 14th June was that the proceedings should be stayed until final orders had been passed on the application for stay and not till the decision of the civil appeal fixed for hearing in January 1929. That order does not seem to have been communicated to the Magistrate when he passed the order on 21st June, but either a misrepresentation was made by the applicant or the Magistrate thought that he should grant stay until the decision of the appeal. Then again, the applicant appears to have made a similar mistake when he appeared before Hallifax, A. J. C. on 14th July. There it is stated that the Magistrate had granted stay and that statement being accepted the application for stay in this Court was rejected. The learned advocate for the applicant contends that he would have pressed the application and would not have allowed the application to have been rejected in that way had he not been under the impression that the stay had been granted by the Magistrate pending the decision of the appeal. It appears, however, that Hallifax, A. J. C , did not think it necessary to grant the stay ; he believed that the stay had been granted and he did not wish to interfere.

The case is a somewhat curious one and the only point to be decided is whether the Magistrate has power to change his former order fixing the case for hearing on 23rd January 1929 and to fix it now for an earlier date. A reference was made to S. 344, Criminal P. C , which is the section dealing with the adjournments of trials, and it was argued that a case can be adjourned to a future date, but a case once fixed for a future date cannot be heard at an earlier date. I know of no authority for that contention and see no reason why a case cannot be heard at an earlier date provided due notice is given to the accused or his pleader. The intention of the Code is that a criminal trial should proceed forthwith and should be continued from day to day until its termination. S. 344 only provides for adjournments for definite reasons, but when there is no longer any reason for an adjournment the trial should proceed. I do not agree with the Sessions Judge that the changing of the date is even a technical irregularity. The date, 23rd January 1929, was only fixed under the impression that the proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of the civil appeal. But when once the Magistrate saw that the application for stay had been rejected by this Court and Hallifax, A. J. C. held that it was not necessary to stay the criminal trial, he fixed another earlier date and I do not think that the procedure is either illegal or irregular.

The mistake, if any, is due to the applicant's own conduct in applying to two Courts for stay simultaneously and not informing the criminal Court that he had applied to this Court for stay of the proceedings. The result was that separate orders were passed by the Magistrate and by this Court, namely, the Magistrate first of all fixed the case for 23rd January 1929 while Kinkhede, A. J. C., passed an order for stay pending further orders. In a case like this when two orders are passed, the order of this Court must prevail and, therefore, the order governing the case was the order of Kinkhede, A. J. C. staying proceedings until further orders. When, then, further orders were passed by Hallifax, A. J. C., and the application for stay was rejected, the order for stay ceased to exist, and, therefore, the Magistrate was not only authorized to proceed with the case but, as a matter of fact, was bound to do so. The Magistrate presumably in passing his first order was acting under S. 476, sub-Cl. (3), Criminal P. C., but the Magistrate is given discretion by the Code, as is clearly laid down, and I see no reason why a mistaken order so passed and a date so fixed for January 1929 should not now be revised in view of the rejection of the stay application by this Court and the Magistrate could proceed with the hearing of the case forthwith I do not, then, consider that there is any sufficient reason now for interfering with the order of the Magistrate fixing the case for hearing, and the application is, therefore, rejected The order of this Court staying criminal proceedings pending further orders is cancelled.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 46-B of 1928, Decided on 30th June 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Akola, D/- 13th February 1928, in Criminal Appeal No 384 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 154 — First information is not a statement under S. 162 and can be used to contradict or corroborate its author (obiter)..

A first information under S. 154 is not a statement within S. 162, which is inadmissible in evidence : A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 17, Rel. on. ; such a statement though not substantive evidence can be used to corroborate or contradict its author : 17 C. W. N. 1213, Foll. [P 45 C 1]

(b) Evidence—Admissibility—Prosecution need not formally prove against accused document produced by him.

A document produced by the accused in support of his own defence need not be formally proved by prosecution as against the party producing it. [P 45 C 1]

(c) Penal Code, S. 96—Assembly unlawful from beginning—Question of self-defence does not arise.

Where the object of an assembly was from the very outset unlawful and every one of the accused was clearly a member of an unlawful assembly, no question of self-defence arises in the case : 20 All. 459, Appr. [P 48 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 147—Scope.

Assembly does not become unlawful by reason of its lawful acts exciting others to do unlawful acts. [P 47 C 1]

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Order.—This order will govern the disposal of the Criminal Revisions Nos. 47-B to 63-B of 1928 also.

The counsel for the Muhammadan applicants says that they were improperly prosecuted as aggressors and rioters. The argument is that the Hindus had assembled at the Padamtirth to take out kamdees of the tajias immersed there, and thereby wounded the religious feelings of the Muhammadans, and that they themselves were prompted to go there by their desire to retaliate what they call, was a provocating action of the Hindus. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the prosecution that the Hindus had gone to the Padamtirth for the performance of their usual evening ablutions, sandhia and prayers at the bank of the sacred tirth, that this act of assembling on the banks of the tirth for the performance of such religious duties on the part of a small orthodox section out of the large Hindu populace of the town was not unusual and afforded no proof of an intention to commit riot ; that amongst the people so assembled were persons such as, school masters, patwaris and others who were on their way home from Court, office or their usual places of business, and that their stoppage at the tank must be to enjoy rest on the way after the day's toil and labour, and not to further any premedtiated common object of taking out the kamdees of tajias from the tank, as insinuated by the Muhammadans, much less to get themselves involved in a fight. The prosecution, therefore, suggests that from the mere presence of a large crowd of Hindus at the tirth no inference, that they assembled in a mood to take out the kamdees from the tank and thus give further cause for provocation to the Muhammadans, could be drawn

The trying Magistrate, as also the Sessions Judge, have rejected the version given by accused 1, Muhammad Ibrahim, in his examination as an accused, to the effect that the Hindus were seen by him engaged in taking out the kamdees from the tank ; that as he protested against it, he was assaulted by some of the Hindus, and on one Muhammad Yasin Butcher coming to his rescue the Hindus assaulted him as well, and that when he called out for help, a band of Muhammadans appeared on the scene for rescuing him and Yasin, and beat the Hindus. The question, therefore, is whether this was a fact and if so whether the decision of the Courts below is based on legally admissible evidence on record. The trying Magistrate's reasoning regarding this matter is that, had this been a fact, and had the Muhammadans including Muhammad Ibrahim been simply attracted to the scene of occurrence by the sight of the kamdees taken out or in the process of being taken out by the Hindus from the tank, that fact was bound to find a prominent mention in Ibrahim's first information report dated 5th August 1927, (Ex. D-12) made to the police thana regarding the injuries received by him there. The correctness of this line of reasoning is not open to doubt unless Ex. D-12 itself is inadmissible in evidence and has no evidentiary value. Since it is a fact that it was omitted from Ex. D-12, a doubt naturally arose in the mind of the trying Magistrate as to why such an important circumstance, if it was a fact, came to be omitted. The omission obviously led him to doubt the veracity of those witnesses for the defence who deposed that the Hindus were seen taking out the kamdees. Naturally such evidence would be suspected as an improvement and afterthought and rejected as being inconsistent with the probabilities, as ordinarily an informant would not omit such an important event which attracted him to the spot, from his report. As it appears that, this omission from the first information report of a material circumstance, was the principal reason which led the trying Magistrate to disbelieve the oral evidence adduced in support of the defence, and to treat the defence based on it as untrue, the applicants have naturally focussed their attack in this revision on the legal objection that Ex. D-12 was wrongly admitted into evidence. The relevance and evidentiary value of the said first information report (Ex. D-12) must, therefore, be examined before dealing with the merits of the case.

It is said on behalf of the applicants that, as Ex. D-12, was a statement to police, it was not admissible under S. 162, Criminal P. C. But a first information report is information received under S. 154, Criminal P. C. It is not information received after the commencement of investigation so as to come under Ss. 161, 162, Criminal P. C. It is information given on the initiative of an informant, on which, an investigation is commenced, and which, though not substantive evidence, is yet of acknowledged value, because, it shows materials on which the investigation commenced, and the manner in which the occurrence was related when the case was first started. It may be used to corroborate or contradict the author of it, as held in Autar Singh v Emperor (1). This Court's Criminal Circular 1-7 also clearly lays down that this "information is the basis of the case, and whether it be true or false it, at any rate, usually represents what was intended by the informant to be the case set up by him at the time. In view of the notorious tendency in this country to improve upon the original statement of facts to strengthen the case as it proceeds, and sometimes to add to the persons originally named as offenders, it is of great importance to show what was said in the first instance."

The Circular lays down the necessity of taking down word for word the information in every cognizable case, and the substance only with sufficient detail in the case of a non-cognizable offence. The words of S. 154, Criminal P. C, are also clear :

" Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence, if given orally . . . . shall be reduced to writing . . . and be read over to the informant ; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid, shall be signed by the person giving it . . . ."

In Azimaddy v. Emperor (2) it was held that a first information under S. 154 of the Code is not a statement within S. 162 The objection based on S. 162, Criminal P. C, therefore, fails

In this case the document having been produced by the accused in support of their own defence, there was no need for the prosecution to formally prove it as against the party producing it. The offence in respect of which the information was laid by Muhammad Ibrahim was a cognizable offence, and, therefore, I am entitled to hold that the requirements of law and of the Criminal Circular had presumably been duly complied with The original of Ex. D-12, which is a certified copy of the first information report, purports to be signed by the informant. There is, therefore, no room for the argument that it did not reproduce word for word the information given by the informant Muhammad Ibrahim, or that the omission about the kamdees was due to the neglect of the police officer to record it. I, therefore, hold that the document was legally admissible against the accused and was rightly used against them.

The trying Magistrate was thus perfectly justified in using the first information report for discrediting the present story or the author of it, and in drawing adverse inference against the accused from the absence therefrom of this most important piece of information that the informant had seen the Hindus actually engaged in taking out of the kamdees at the Padamtirth. It, therefore, seems quite natural that the further story of the accused to the effect that Muhammad Yasin came to Muhammad Ibrahim's rescue, that the other Muhammadans subsequently came to Muhammad Yasin's rescue, and that everyone was there in right of self-defence, should also appear to the Magistrate, under the circumstances of the case, as an improvement or invention designedly put forward to escape from the punishment which the law provides for rioters The applicants' legal objection, therefore, fails.

Referring to the pre-riot history, the learned counsel argued on behalf of the applicants that they were not in fact, nor were they likely to be, the aggressors, but that it was the Hindus alone who were the aggressors and were the really provocative people, from the very beginning, that the Muhammadans, however, all along maintained an attitude of non-violence, and acted as law-abiding citizens, especially as they always succeeded in obtaining the support and help of the executive authorities to secure to them the due exercise of their privileges, although sometimes late ; that the Hindus very often met with a defeat at the hands of the authorities, as, almost every effort which they made to assert their rights in a manner causing annoyance to the Muhammadans was foiled and caused them much disappointment and anguish. The learned counsel wanted to suggest by adopting this line of argument, that the Muhammadans must have been dragged to the several scenes of occurrence more in self-defence than as assailants or persons taking the initiative in the riots, and that they would not, looking to their past attitude, resort to force or violence on 4th August, for the first time, because, although the religious susceptibilities of the Muhammadans were being violently injured by the offence and obstructive attitude of Hindus, they had admirably kept themselves under control in the past, and sought the help of the authorities in critical times, and observed great self-restraint and avoided, as far as possible, fracas with the provocative Hindu population of Basim, which, as they say, was practically up in arms against them. It is, therefore, strenuously urged that the Sessions Judge erred in law in holding that the Muhammadans were the first to start the rioting by causing or inflicting injuries to some of the Hindus at the Farsi; that even if they did so, they were perfectly within their right of private defence of person and property, in order to prevent any trespass on the graveyard of Bannusha the inam certificate-holder, and that at no moment did they exceed its proper limits.

On the other hand, it is argued on behalf of the Crown that the incidents which had occurred at the Farsi sounded the bugle for riot In this connexion it is necessary to know what the learned trying Magistrate found on the point I may usefully quote a relevant passage from the trying Magistrate's unparagraphed judgment·

"It was certainly a very childish and unreasonable thing for Ibrahim to have stopped the Hindus from using the footpath especially as there was water over the Farsi and as the Hindus had often used the path and had gone to the tank by that very path. Under normal peaceful conditions even, one would expect these older men (meaning Panwelkar and other Hindu passers-by) would have just told Ibrahim not to be such an ass as to object and then to have used the path without paying any further attention to Ibrahim." * * "The Hindus now come across Ibrahim, the nephew of Bannusha who is the inam certificate-holder. Here was a chance of paying back the debt over the graveyard dispute. I am inclined to believe that they actually beat him. At any rate Ibrahim now raised an outcry and Mussalmans from the direction of the 'Bhatti' came rushing up to the rescue of Ibrahim, and attacked the Hindus at the 'Farsi' and so the riot began."

The following extracts from paras. 17 and 18 of the judgment of the Sessions Judge make the position still clearer:

"* * It is clear that the first beating seen by the Mahomedans at the Bhatti was that at the Farsi, and the prosecution story about the altercation over the crossing and the thorn-obstruction there must, I imagine, have a basis in truth. * * It seems clear that the quarrel started at the Farsi itself, and that it was due to the obstruction of the thorn-fencing. I believe that Ibrahim had put the fencing there and was sitting near it, and that the Hindus got annoyed with him and threatened to beat him, or may have actually started to do so when Ibrahim called for assistance. I do not think that Ibrahim would have dared to start the beating when he was so outnumbered by the Hindus including truculent persons like Panwelkar. * *"

"* * After all, a quarrel usually starts through some incident, however trifling, and the mere fact that Yasin was passing and was recognized by the Hindus would probably not lead them to attack him entirely unprovoked. On the other hand, the little matter of the obstruction at the Farsi was quite sufficient to lead to an attack. I have no reason to doubt that Yasin came up by that road. But I think that he arrived just after the beating started, and was rushing up to help the other Mahomedans when he was intercepted and beaten by the rear guard of the Hindus at the tank * * Being outnumbered he would quickly be disposed of, and the tide of battle having passed on, he might have made his escape * * and may * * have swooned or been again beaten and finally collapsed. That being the most probable sequence of circumstances, it is clear and in fact admitted that no right of defence existed after the first few minutes, and both sides who continued fighting afterwards were guilty of rioting."

But it is argued that, by itself, the placing of the thorn-obstruction does not lead to the inference that Ibrahim was sitting there in furtherance of any common unlawful object, as he had a right to be there; and that, his cry for help, when beaten or threatened to be beaten, was sure to attract others who had assembled at the Bhatti in the neighbourhood, more, for his rescue than, for taking revenge on the Hindus; and that, unless and until it were shown by the prosecution that the assemblage was animated by the same common purpose with the intention of furthering it, and that the said purpose was unlawful, the assembly could not be termed unlawful. Law discourages a combination of men for a common purpose if such combination is conducive to rioting and disorder. Certainly, as observed in Queen-Empress v. Peelimuthu Tevan (3) it is for the prosecution to show that the common object of a crowd was such as would constitute it an unlawful assembly as defined by S. 141, I. P. C. In that case, nothing more of the assemblage was known than that they were in a large crowd and were armed with bill-hooks and sticks and that they dispersed at once on seeing the police, it was held that though these facts, in the absence of any proof of common intention, raised a strong suspicion that the men had not assembled with any harmless or innocent intention, they did not afford proof that the intention of the members of the crowd was to use criminal force or to commit criminal offence. In that case, no evidence was given as to the disturbed condition of the district and especially as to the relations existing between Shanars and the Maravars in the neighbourhood, and the action taken by the Maravars about the same time. Benson, J., therefore observed :

"Had such evidence been given it might . . . have been sufficient to lead to an inference as to the unlawful character of the assembly, though it would not necessarily do so, for it might be that the crowd had come together for a lawful purpose such as to discuss the situation or to petition the authorities, and had armed themselves with sticks and bill-hooks for protection against anticipated violence from the Shanars. The 'common object' of an assembly is to be ascertained from the acts and language of the members composing it and from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances."

It is true that an assembly does not become unlawful by reason of its lawful acts exciting others to do unlawful acts: Beatty v Gillbanks (4) Even an assembly lawful in its inception may become unlawful by its acts: cf Queen v. Khemee Singh (5). In Queen-Empress v. Prag Dutt (6), it was observed:

" When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights, or supposed rights, by unlawful force, and when they engage in a fight with men, who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises. Neither side is trying to protect itself, but each side is trying to get the better of the other."

In such a case the claim of right becomes reduced to a mere pretext for fighting. The assembly is unlawful not because the claim of right is immaterial but because it was not the real object of the fight.

In view of the facts held by the Courts below to be proved against the applicants in this case, it could most appropriately be inferred that, as both the communities were in a state of extreme tension, from before and also at about the time when the riot took place, such of the Muhammadans as were in a mood to fight must have been actuated by a desire to bring the matter to a head and must have manœuvred to bring about the crisis by putting up the kati or thorn-fencing on the footpath and thus stopped the usual passage, and posted Ibrahim the nephew of the inam certificate-holder at the crossing to protest against its use. As remarked by the Sessions Judge this slight incident was sufficient to start the attack. It appears to me that it could very well have been anticipated that the Hindus who were accustomed to use the footpath as found by the Magistrate would not brook this opposition, and the boy though armed with lathi would be overpowered by the Hindu passers-by ; and that this incident would well serve as an occasion for those assembled at the Bhatti to rush to Ibrahim's rescue at the Farsi and to commence the fight. Under these circumstances, I am not surprised to find that the Muhammadans whom the learned counsel for the applicants has given the compliment of possessing the capacity to be more easily provoked to action than their Hindu neighbours proved themselves so true to that high compliment as to begin the riot by using force against their opponents at the Farsi

It is needless to mention that the present case is easily distinguishable from the cases quoted above on the short ground that evidence answering the test laid down in Queen-Empress v Peelu muthu Tevan (3) is quite abundant on the record of this case, and the acts and utterances of the applicants as also the surrounding circumstances satisfy the requirements of the other legal tests laid down in the other cases, and prove beyond doubt that the applicants one and all shared the common intention to beat the Hindus I must remark that the conduct of Ibrahim and of those who rushed to the Farsi in response to his cry judged by their subsequent acts of violence, both at the spot and in the other parts of the town to which the riot extended, could not but lead to the only inference that, the posting of Ibrahim at the Farsi to guard the thorn-fencing obstruction put up there, as also the assemblage of the Muhammadans at the Bhatti and their rushing to the Farsi, was pre-arranged with the one common unlawful purpose of taking revenge on the Hindus. The Sessions Judge's finding that the prosecution evidence leaves no possible doubt as to the presence and participation of the applicants before him, in the riot fully supports this remark

The question of the right of Bannusha or his nephew to put up the thorn-fencing obstruction at the Farsi thus becomes material only in connexion with the further question whether the acts of the accused persons were justified by a right of a private defence of person or property. In the absence of any authoritative adjudication of the civil Court, I assume for the sake of argument that the trying Magistrate's finding, that the act of Muhammad Ibrahim was childish and unreasonable, is correct, and I, therefore, conclude that it was an unjustifiable and sham excuse for fight, and that the Hindus being in a sullen mood as found by the Sessions Judge had cause to be further offended at the unlawful obstruction to the lawful exercise of their usual right of way over the Farsi As soon as some Hindus attempted to cross the Farsi and remove the thorn-fencing, Ibrahim, in his turn, tried to prevent them from doing so by use of force, as it appears Ibrahim was then armed with a lathi. The turn which the events actually took, fully justifies the conclusion that the putting up of the thorn-fencing was a sham excuse to provoke the fight; and the several acts of violence on the part of the applicants point to the common intention on their part to take revenge on the Hindus who crossed the Farsi as well as those whom they may meet thereafter in the other parts of the town to which the riot rapidly extended. Under these circumstances the object of the assembly was from the very outset unlawful and everyone of the applicants was clearly a member of an unlawful assembly, and consequently in their case no question of self-defence could have arisen.

From the way in which the arguments were addressed before him the Sessions Judge seems to have concluded that the counsel made no attempt to dispute that the applicants 2, 4 to 6, 8 to 15, 17 and 18 were guilty. He had, therefore, no reason to consider the case of each of those persons individually. The only attempt made before him in the interest of individual applicants, was as regards the applicants 1, 3, 7 and 16. The learned Sessions Judge after dealing with the case of each of these four persons came to the conclusion that applicants 1 and 3 besides being guilty of rioting had committed the offence of causing grievous hurt to certain Hindu gentlemen; that applicant 7 was one of those who was fighting and guilty of riot; and that No. 16 was moving into the riot instead of away from it and in fact encouraged the Muhammadan rioters. In view of this clear decision it was useless to argue that the applicants were not guilty, or that they were acting in the exercise of their right of private defence of person and property. The convictions of all the eighteen applicants for rioting under S. 147 and of such of them as committed other offences with which they were charged under S. 325/149, I. P. C., must, therefore, be upheld.

The Magistrate awarded sentences of imprisonment for varying periods to individual accused persons, and the Sessions Judge, in his turn, has remarked that "they are not really heavy, and in view of the serious nature of the riot they cannot be further reduced."

I am, however, asked to reduce the sentences, firstly, because the offence happened to be committed in the heat of communal tension and not deliberately; and secondly, because the pre-riot history itself showed that the existence of civil disputes between the two communities of Basim regarding the exercise of their respective civil rights or rights to property was the root of all the future evil which befell them on 4th August 1927. The sentences are, therefore, said to have gone beyond the legitimate needs of the occasion, and it is submitted they require to be considerably moderated, due weight being given to the circumstance that the civil disputes form the back ground of these riots, and that the two communities must long since have been pacified and possibly reconciled as between themselves. Lastly, it is submitted that this Court may, in view of the provisions of sub-S. (2), S. 562, Criminal P. C, give them the benefit of being released on probation, as contemplated by sub-S. (1) of the said section, on the ground that they are first offenders.

I have anxiously considered the question of sentences of imprisonment and fine imposed on the accused-applicants, in the light of the argument addressed at the Bar I feel myself constrained to observe that although the Courts below have in order to bring the guilt home to the applicants given full consideration to the facts brought out in the pre-riot history, which form the back ground of the riot, they have failed to give full weight to the same facts, while measuring out punishment to the culprits. It will be seen that the principal points of dispute between the two contending parties were: (1) the right of the Hindus to carry their procession attended with music along the public streets running in front or by the side of the mosques ; (2) the right of the Muhammadans to immerse their tajias in the Padamtirth tank, and that too, from all, or, some of its sides, without interference to its lawful use by the Hindus ; (3) the fixing of the right boundary line between the limits of the Padamtirth tank and its catchment area, and, of the graveyard of Bannusha Fakir, the inam certificate-holder thereof ; and (4) the right of the Muhammadans claiming to be related to Bannusha's family to bury their dead within the limits of the said graveyard so as to cause no nuisance to the Hindus visiting or using the Padamtirth tank for the performance of their religious rights and observances.

These disputes have given trouble in the past few years and disturbed the amity which is said to have once existed between the two communities residing at Basim But looking to their nature, anyone can say, (and there can be no two opinions on this point), that they are all matters purely of civil nature fit to be setted by an amicable settlement outside Court, if the contending parties were so minded, or to be more effectively and satisfactorily decided by an adjudication of a civil Court, should they, or any of them, be advised to take such a step. A mere resort to petitions to the Executive or Revenue Authorities, or, for the matter of that, to the Magisterial Courts, with a view to bring their pressure to bear upon one party or the other, for occasional wrongs which may be caused by one community or its individual members, to the other community or its individual members, in the heat of its or their momentary enthusiasm to support a cause believed to be good and beneficial in the interests of the public or section of the public to which it or they belong, can never bring about a satisfactory solution of such disputes, although it may serve only as a temporary make shift.

I dare say, had good sense prevailed, and any of these contending communities been rightly advised in time to resort to civil Court, these matters would have been settled by a decree of the civil Court long ago, and the incidents of 4th August 1927, would not have found place in the annals of Basim. The riot which took place, is only a manifestation of a sudden outburst of a momentary passion or desire to seek redress for wrongs, by taking the law into one's own hand, when the feelings of animosity rankling in the hearts of the contending persons or communities actually get the better of their reason, for the time being Their reason becomes so far eclipsed that individual persons are led to magnify, owing to communal tension, every slight thing done by the members of the opposing party into an unpardonable wrong committed against themselves or their community as a whole, although, in calmer moments, they could realize that it has really nothing in them to object to. The intensity of such feelings of animosity or of communal tension must, very often, be only momentary, and I may not be far from correct if I were to presume, that the ill-feeling which once characterized the Muhammadans of Basim must have by the lapse of time become almost non-existent, or at any rate very much subsided, and the desire to take revenge considerably subdued and brought under the control of reason by now The normal mental condition of the citizens of Basim may now have in all probability been completely restored so as to make them law abiding and fully alive to the dire consequences which may follow, if they were to commit offences against public tranquillity once again. The very fact that all the present applicants had to procure their own temporary release by furnishing heavy bails during the trial of their case in all its stages, to enjoy their freedom of life as ordinary citizens, must not have failed to produce its educative effect on them. It must have by this time awakened in them their true sense of responsibility as such citizens to maintain peace and order, and made them keenly alive to the great danger of breaking the law which they are expected to respect if they want to avoid incurring the heavy penalties and expenditure, and, suffering the inconvenience, anxiety and loss of peace of mind, which they must surely have incurred or suffered in connexion with this prosecution. With this experience, I trust they are bound to reform themselves and also to refrain from thereafter engaging themselves in communal fights Looking then, at the case of the applicants, from the perpective of the back ground of civil disputes the offences of of riot and also of causing grievous hurt incidentally during its progress to individuals in particular, though serious, were technical and I think deserve lighter treatment than what has been meted out, in the circumstances of the case.

Taking into consideration the above extenuating circumstances, and also the fact that most of the persons involved are friends and relations of Bannusha the owner of the graveyard over which the first fight took place, and that amongst them there are both adult or grown-up men as also boys of immature age and understanding against none of whom were any previous convictions proved at the trial, and who may be, therefore, safely treated as not being previous convicts, I think that this is pre-eminently a fit case in which I should deem it expedient that the offenders should be released on probation of good conduct

In the exercise of my powers under S 562 (2) of the Code, I accordingly direct: (1) That each of the 18 applicants excepting applicants Nos 3, 12, 13 and 16 shall be released on his entering into a bond for Rs 500 with two sureties, each of the like amount, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during the period of 1½ years from this day, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, as required by S 562 (1) of the said Code; (2) that each of the applicants Nos 3, 12 and 13 shall be similarly released on his giving a similar bond for Rs 700 with two sureties, each of the like amount, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during the period of two years from this day, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour as required by the aforesaid section; (3) that the applicant No 16 Safdar Ali shall be similarly released on his giving a similar bond for Rs 2,000, with two sureties, each of the like amount, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during the period of 2½ years from this day; and in the meantime to keep peace and be of good behaviour as required by the aforesaid section; (4) that as instead of sentencing the applicants at once to any punishment, I have directed their release on probation of good conduct, the fine, if any, realized in the meantime from the applicant No. 16 shall be refunded to him

As the applicants were already released on bail, I direct each of them to appear before the District Magistrate, Akola, on 6th July 1928, to hear the order, and to enter into the bond and furnish the sureties ordered of him, to the satisfaction of the said officer, within such time as he may, by order, fix

The assessee's right to debit the loss sustained on account of bad debts written off by him, against the profits or gains of any year, is unqualified and absolute as regards the amount to be debited and the choice of time at which to write it off: *A. * (b) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 6, 4 and 13—Interest unrealized, but credited in accounts is not income accruing, or received for income-tax purposes—Test is whether it is available to assessee at his pleasure.

It is not just and equitable to treat the unrealized interest, although formally credited to the kasar khata, as income, profits or gains derived accruing or arising or received, for purposes of the Income-tax Act. The test to be applied is whether any profits in the shape of interest have become due to the creditor (assessee) in such a manner as to be immediately available to him in the account year so as to be capable of being received by him at his choice and pleasure. If the interest money has become due to the assessee in the manner and in the sense that it was so completely under his control that, he by an act of his will, could receive it in cash without greater trouble than is involved in cashing a cheque, then only it could be called "income" such as would be liable to payment of tax, otherwise not : *A. Order of Reference (Findlay, J. C., and Prideaux, A J. C.)— We have heard arguments in this reference. In our opinion the question of whether sums entered as credits on account of interest and re-entered as debits in the assessee's account books, sums not actually received or proffered to the assessee, should be treated as income, profits or gains and should be taken into account in computing income for the year to which the entries relate, is of such importance that it is desirable that this reference should be heard by a Full Bench. The decision in Reference No 27 of 1927 by Hallifax and Mohiuddin, A J Cs , A. I R. 1928 Nag. 241, is one which, in our opinion, may possibly require reconsideration The question of when a debt becomes a bad debt, which arises in this reference, is also of importance Both questions are likely to arise frequently We, therefore, recommend that a Full Bench should hear this reference as a whole.

Opinion

Kinkhede, A J. C—This is a reference under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act (11 of 1922). The following two points have been referred to this Court for decision by the Comissioner of Income-tax :

(1) Has not the assessee got the option of declaring debts bad when he finds after sufficient waiting that from the circumstances of the debtors he is unable to recover them ? Can the Income-tax authority deprive the assessee of this option ? Should not the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner have allowed Rs. 7,481-13-9 to the assessee on the same consideration on which the remaining amount out of Rs. 17,802 claimed by him was allowed ?

(2) Could the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner treat Rs. 16,031-4-6 on account of unrealized interest and merely credited in the books to equalize the sides of the khata of the debtors, as "income" coming into the hands of this assessee for the purposes of Ss. 4 and 6, Income-tax Act, and under ruling reported in Pandurang v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1) especially when the major portion of the amount is made recoverable under the terms of the bonds in several future years ? Cannot the recoveries of this interest be taxed in future and not treated as income in the year under assessment ?

The Commissioner of Income-tax has in stating the case, answered the first question in the negative and the second in the affirmative

The reference was originally heard by a Bench of two Judges of this Court on 10th April 1928, but as the questions raised were considered to be of such importance as to necessitate a decision by a Full Bench, the reference as a whole was set down for hearing by a Full Bench duly constituted The points for decision concisely stated in the order of reference to the Full Bench are :

(1) When does a debt become a bad debt ?

(2) Whether sums entered as credits on account of interest and re-entered as debits in the assessee's account books, sums not actually received or proffered to the assessee should be treated as income, profits or gains and should be taken into account in computing income for the year to which the entries relate ?

A few facts which occasioned this reference under S 66 (2), Income-tax Act, may be stated here The assessee submitted a return showing Rs. 74,668 as his total taxable income for the previous year for purposes of assessment of income-tax for the ensuing year 1926-27. The Income-tax Officer after looking into the accounts assesssed him on an income of Rs 1,16,480, but in the appeal the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Nagpur, reduced the assessable income to Rs 1,13,012. This included Rs. 86,307-11-0 under the head of business profits taxable under S 10 of the Act The assessee complains that in fixing the business profits at this amount the item of Rs. 7,481-13-9 out of a sum of Rs 17,982 debited on account of bad debts was wrongly disallowed, and, the sum of Rs. 16,031-4-6 which represented unrealized interest, was wrongly treated as 'income' in the accouut year.

It will be seen from the Assistant Commissioner's order, dated 25th April 1927, that in all Rs. 17,982 were claimed to be debited or written off as bad debts against the income of the account year Lists were called for showing details of dates when these amounts had become due, with a view to ascertain when they were really found to be bad On examination of the lists it was found that Rs 7,481-13-9 were on account of old bad debts which had become time-barred long before the account year The Assistant Commissioner overruled the contention of the assessee that it should be left to him to declare when particular debts became bad debts; and that the Income-tax Department should not go on a presumption that the amount had become time barred in previous years. According to him the right criterion to know is to see whether and when the assessee's all legal remedies to recover it failed.

As to the other item of Rs. 16,031-4-6, the Assistant Commissioner has observed that this amount of interest is shown in the profit and loss account, i. e, kasar khata as interest receipts although no actual recovery was made; and that, as the assessee's books are on the book profit system and not on cash basis, the assessment has to be made on interest accrued and due, and, it has nothing to do with what the assessee actually recovered He opines that there can be no unfairness in this kind of assessment, because when bad debts are claimed interest is already included in them.

In stating the case the Commissioner has pointed out that this sum of Rs 16,031-4-6 represented the interest which was debited to the accounts of seven debtors whose bonds had been renewed during the year with corresponding credit to the kasar khata These bonds are said to provide that the debts were payable by instalments in several future years

Taking the point of bad debts first, I may refer to page 98, Part 3, Vol. 1, Income-tax Manual, Edn 2, where in sub-para. (3), para. 35, notes and instructions regarding the method of accounting for purposes of assessing income, profits and gains under Ss. 10 to 13 are set forth. It is pointed out there that

"under the mercantile accountancy system . . . an entry is made on the receipt side when a sale is concluded, although the money on account of such a sale has not been paid and in making up the accounts at the end of the year such entries are treated as receipts, and the tax is levied on these 'book profits'. It may happen that some of these 'book profits' cannot be recovered; they are written off as 'bad debts'" when found to be irrecoverable; and since such 'book profits' have been included in the income assessed to income-tax the 'bad debts' must be written off against the 'book profits' in the year in which they are written off in the accounts as irrecoverable. Where the cash system is adopted, there can be no 'bad debts'."

I have underlined (italicized) the important words.

On the statement of the Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner that the assessee maintains his books on mercantile system of accountancy, the assessment of the business profits under S. 10, Income-tax Act, made by the Assistant Commissioner on Rs 86,307-11-0 must be on what are treated as 'book profits' of the account year It is, therefore, argued by the assessee's counsel that if the tax is to be levied on 'book profits' he is entitled to write off against them, such book profits to the extent of Rs. 7,481-13-9 as have been found, or adjudged by him, to be bad debts, and, as such, irrecoverable in the account year Even according to the aforesaid instructions where

"'book profits' have been included in the income assessed to income-tax, the 'bad debts' must be written off against the 'book profits' in the year in which they are written off in the accounts as irrecoverable."

I think that this line of reasoning based upon the instructions themselves ought to be assumed as correct. It entitles the assessee to urge that in deducing the taxable income in the shape of book profits of the account year the whole of the amount of bad debts written off by him in his account as irrecoverable in the account year must be deducted. The receipt side of the account represents the aggregate of receipts not merely on account of the year's new business but also those on account of the accumulated balances of business carried over from past years' accounts and, therefore, the debits against it must necessarily comprise the balance of outstandings actually carried over to the next year's books of accounts, and also the aggregate of such balances of the past years' businesses as have either turned out to be bad or irrecoverable in that year, or, were considered by the creditor, for several reasons, to be unfit to be carried over any further less he has lost all hope of its recovery, whether he has lost his limitation for a suit in respect of it or not Amongst Hindu debtors a notion prevails that it is a sin to die indebted to others, and several instances of debtors executing bonds, and pro-notes, and even alienating joint properties for the satisfaction of even time-barred debts are often noticeable in Courts A creditor, therefore, naturally hesitates voluntarily to enter as given up a debt, which by change of circumstances, his debtor or even his legal representative may arrange, or, be expected, to pay even after the expiry of limitation An entry in the creditor's account-books writing off a debt as a bad debt in any particular year is under such circumstances likely to be interpreted by the debtor as prima facie good evidence of conduct on the part of the creditor wherefrom an abandonment of his right to demand it might reasonably be inferred so as to serve as a good answer to any future demand, on the occasion of any adjustment or fresh loan. Such an entry is, in my opinion, a conscious act on the creditor's part whereby he determines his election, once and for ever, to treat the debt referred to therein as bad or irrecoverable It, therefore, stands to reason that the creditor must have full discretion in the matter; because, it is he, and not the Income-tax Officer who knows or must be deemed to know, the circumstances and risks as well as chances of recovery from his debtor. The Income-tax Officer cannot, therefore, legally insist that the assessee must subordinate his own will or discretion and even his decision in the matter to his decision. The creditor, merely because he happens to be an assessee liable to pay income-tax to the Crown, cannot be asked completely to surrender his own judgment and allow it to be overridden by that of the Income-tax Officer.

In the absence of any legislation to that effect an Income-tax Officer cannot, in my opinion, dictate to the assessee that he must write off a certain amount due to him after the lapse of the prescribed period of limitation Nor can he lay down that in a given set of circumstances the assessee will show the amount as outstanding, at his own risk, since it will no longer give him any right to set it off as a bad debt against his profits. The Hindu law does not recognize any rule as to the extinction of claims by efflux of time: Ram Kishan Rai v. Chhedi Rai (2). The older the debt the greater the responsibillty of the descendants of the man who leaves the debt unpaid. Vrihaspati accordingly lays down :

" The father's debt must be first paid, and next the debt contracted by the man himself, but the debt of the paternal grandfather must even be paid before either of these . Kanhaiya Lal, J., in the Full Bench case of Gajadhar v. Jagannath (3) observed at pp. 782-83 (of 46 All.), "

that

" The Hindu law did not recognize any rule of limitation for the recovery of debts . . . . A debt may become irrecoverable under the law now in force by reason of the lapse of the period of limitation, but the debt exists all the same, and if a person chooses to pay a time-barred debt in the manner permitted by S. 25, Contract Act, the debt which he chooses to pay remains the same debt, though by reason of the contract which he enters into, it assumes a new garb and gains a fresh vitality. "

Mere loss of limitation for a suit cannot, therefore, be regarded as a criterion of universal application in the matter of writing-off debt.

Sometimes it may happen that when a loan is taken by a debtor he may be quite solvent and the creditor may entertain no doubt as to his ability to pay In the next year of the advance, and, perhaps, several years before the due date, he may become involved in a financial crisis, for which he is not responsible, as a result of the bank or firm, with which he may have been crediting his surplus money, failing. There may thus be no prospect in that year, or in the near future, of any recovery from such a debtor. If as argued on behalf of the Crown, this creditor were to make it his practice to debit as bad or irrecoverable debt, every loan or its balance on the expiry of three years from its due date, and not earlier, how and when is he to debit the amount of the debt to the kasar khata, although he is quite satisfied as to the debtor's inability to liquidate it Is he to wait until the whole debt falls due, and also for a period of three years thereafter, to become entitled to debit the said debt as a bad debt for purposes of income-tax ? Or, should he debit it in the year in which the debtor's liability to pay becomes clear to his mind ? The Income-tax Department might in the latter case come down on him for having departed from his system of book-keeping and may therefore disallow that debit. It is no use multiplying instances to expose the absurdity of the contention Several anomalous results will follow, if the assessee's discretion or election in the matter of the choice of the proper time to write off a debt advanced by him as a bad or irrecoverable debt were allowed to be overridden by the taxing officer's decision in this way.

The assessee must for obvious reasons be the sole arbiter of his own rights and privileges as regards the business he conducts in his own interest What is to his interest, and what is prejudicial to him, must depend upon his own decision. It, therefore, follows that, on the question whether to treat any particular debt as bad or irrecoverable, his word or decision must be final for he alone is or can be the judge of the risks, chances and circumstances which may affect the recovery or non-recovery of that debt from his debtor

There is nothing in the wording of S 24, Income-tax Act of 1922 which militates against this view. That section does not authorise the Income-tax Officer to investigate and determine the year in which any loss sustained is to be deducted from profits All that it enacts is that the loss sustained in any year under any of the heads mentioned in taxing sections shall be set off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year, so that loss under one head of income can be charged against profits under another in the same year A reference to Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol 16, para. 1310, dealing with the subject of income-tax, shows that in England no deduction is allowable

"for any debts except bad debts proved to be such to the satisfaction of the Commissioners."

I do not find such a prohibition either in S 10 or S 24 or anywhere else in the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922 In the absence of words "proved to be such to to the satisfaction of the Commissioner" or words to that effect, in the Indian Statute, I am inclined to take the view that bad debts are deductible from business profits at the opinion of the assessee, the deduction need not be of only such as are proved to the satisfaction of the Income-tax authorities to be bad debts. I do not find any restriction in the Indian Statute as to the year in which the bad debts could be deducted by the assessee. In the absence of words in the statute, restricting the assessee's option, and, prescribing, the time for writing them off, or, the quantum of proof required, as a condition precedent, for doing so, or, imposing the condition that the Income-tax authority should be consulted before writing them off, I think the assessee's right to debit, the loss sustained on account of bad debts written off by him, against the profits or gains of any year, must be held to be unqualified and absolute, as regards the amount to be debited and the choice of time at which to write it off His decision to write bad debts off the account cannot be regarded as conditional upon his proving them to be bad debts to the satisfaction of the Income-tax authorities, as is the case under English Statute

In the absence of any express provision in the Income-tax Act, 1922, either authorising or prohibiting the deduction of bad debts from the profits of a business carried on by an assessee, and in view of the fact that the specific directions in S 10 of the Act are subsidiary to the underlying principle that only profits ascertained according to the mercantile system of accounting, are taxable, there can be no two opinions that bad debts actually written off the account as such by a creditor would form a proper deduction What is usually done is to square up the debtor's personal ledger account by entering a corresponding credit to wipe out, wholly or partially, as the case may be, the debit standing against his name. Thus, once these personal ledgers of the debtors are squared up, or the balance due reduced by the amount written off, the sums written off can no longer be carried over to the next year's books as outstanding assets of the business These aggregate sums written off, must, therefore, necessarily go to reduce the receipts of the business profits in the year in which they are written off and thus reduce the balance of outstandings to be carried over to the next year It, therefore, follows that, unless and until the bad debts are written off the account no right to claim a deduction on their account, even though they may have been ascertained in the past years, accrues to the assessee. If the assessse has failed to sort out in the past the bad debts from the good or doubtful debts and indiscriminately carried over the whole of the outstandings to the next year's account, it does not stand to reason that he should be compelled for ever, at least for purposes of income-tax assessment, either to treat what are admittedly bad debts of some standing as good debts because of his omission to sort them at such time as the income-tax authorities may think, was the proper time for that purpose, or to take the risk of being called upon to pay tax on business profits by ignoring bad debts altogether. For these reasons I am of opinion that the item of Rs 7,481-13-9 was wrongly disallowed in computing income under the head of "business profits."

I now proceed to consider the second point referred. As pointed out by the Bench of this Court in Pandurang v Commissioner of Income-tax (1) the word "income" has nowhere been defined in the Income-tax Act of 1922 The learned Judges of the said Bench referred to the Privy Council decision in St Lucia Usines and Estates Co v. St Lucia (4) and in particular to Lord Wrenbury's following observations as regards the true meaning of the word "income" as used in the taxing statute which was involved in that case, and the provisions whereof are more or less analogous to those of the Indian Statute in this respect:

"The words "income arising or accruing" are not equivalent to the words "debts arising or accruing." To give them that meaning is to ignore the word "income." The words mean 'money arising or accruing by way of income." There must be a coming in to satisfy the word "income." This a sense which is assisted or confirmed by the word "received" in the proviso at the end of S. 4, sub-S. 1. If the taxpayer be the holder of stock of a foreign Government carrying say 5 per cent interest and the Government is that of a defaulting State which does not pay the interest, the taxpayer has neither received nor has there accrued to him any income in respect of that stock. A debt has accrued to him but income has not. It does not follow that income is confined to that which the taxpayer actually receives. Where income-tax is deducted at the source the taxpayer never receives the sum deducted but it accrues to him. It is said, and truly, that a commercial company, in preparing its balance sheet and profit and loss account, does not confine itself to its actual receipts, does not prepare a mere cash account : but values its book debts and its stock in trade and so on and calculates its profits accordingly. From the practice of commerce and of accountants and from the necessity of the case this is so, but is far from establishing that income arises or accrues from (as above instanced) an investment which fails to pay the interest due."

I have underlined (italicized) the words which seem to me to be important for the purposes of this reference.

In the aforesaid case their Lordships of the Privy Council had to interpret the words "accruing or arising" as also the words "derived" or "received" as used in relation of the words "income, profits or gains" in an Income-tax Ordinance. 1910, of St. Lucia where also income-tax was leviable on an assessment made on the basis of a return of the assessee's income for the previous year, as is the case under the Indian Income-tax Act. Their Lordships held that the appellant company had not derived or received any "income" in the account year, as the purchaser from that company had not paid the interest payable in that year on the unpaid part of the purchase price which became due then They thus distinguished "income" from "debt" for the purposes of assessment and held that the word "income" is not equivalent to the word "debt" and unless "money arising or accruing by way of income" actually "comes in," there is no "income" in the strict sense of the term

In Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (5) Lord Lindley has observed that a sum of money may be received in more ways than one, e. g , by the transfer of a coin or a negotiable instrument or other document which represents or produces a coin and is treated as such by the business men. Even a settlement of account may be equivalent to a receipt of a sum of money although no money were passed His Lordship further observed that to constitute a receipt of anything there must be a person to receive, and a person from whom he receives, and something which is received by the former from the latter must be a sum of money, and that "a mere entry in an account which does not represent such a transaction does not prove any receipt, whatever else it may be worth."

If the principles underlying the two Privy Council cases quoted above for determining what is "income" were applied to the facts and circumstances of this case, I think that the arrears of rent, which were calculated and went to form the consideration of the several renewed bonds then accepted, having been allowed to remain unpaid and locked up again in the hands of the debtors for a further period stipulated in each bond, could not be treated as "income derived accruing, arising or received" at the time. To become "income" of that year it had then to "come in," which admittedly it had not A mere entry in the account, therefore, under the kasar khata, with a view to equalize or square up the old debit of the amount outstanding against the debtor and also to make fresh entries in the debtor's personal ledger account only to tally them with the terms of the contracts concluded in the shape of renewed bonds does not and cannot, in my opinion, entitle the debtorto say that the said amount or the interest included therein was paid by him to the creditor on the date the bonds were renewed Since the amount of prospective sawai debited to the debtor's personal ledger account cannot be regarded as an outgoing sum of money advanced to him actually on the date he executed a bond for a consolidated sum a mere credit of that sawai in the kasar khata cannot be treated as "income" under that date. Similarly, arrears of interest included in the consideration of the renewed bonds and debited to the debtor's personal ledger account with a corresponding credit thereof to the kasar khata imports no "outgoing" or "coming in" of any sum of money.

(4) [1921] A. C. 508.

(5) [1920] A. C. 287.

Moreover, the sawai as well as the interest though credited the same day in the kasar khata was admittedly in the future under the terms of the renewed bonds. Consequently, so long as the amount of sawai or interest so included in the consideration does not become overdue to the creditor, he cannot be regarded as having even realized it, as it were, for purposes of income-tax assessment simply because he credits it in the kasar khata If the terms of the contract disentitle the creditor from demanding the interest until after the lapse of a certain period of time, and if when interest becomes due, the creditor may not succeed in realizing it, I think it would not be just and equitable to treat the unrealized interest, although formally credited to the kasar khata, as income, profits or gains derived accruing or arising or received, for purposes of the Income-tax Act.

The mere conclusion of a contract is not always sufficient to yield a business profit. It is the performance of its terms that leads to the accrual of a claim to, or to the receipt of, profits of the business. If on the occasion of taking the renewal bond the creditor expressly agrees to give time to the debtor to pay up the arrears of interest at a future date, he by his own contract precludes himself from demanding or realizing it at once, even within a reasonable time usually necessary to cash a cheque on a banker, In other words, the test to be applied is, whether any profits in the shape of interest had become due to the creditor in such a manner as to be immediately available to him in the account year so as to be capable of being received by him at his choice and pleasure If the interest-money has become due to the assessee in the manner and in the sense that it was so completely under his control that, he by an act of his will, could receive it in cash without greater trouble than is involved in cashing a cheque, then only it could be called "income" such as would be liable to payment of tax, otherwise not; cf. Sadasiva Ayyar, J's. observations in Secy. to the Board of Revenue Income-tax, Madras v. Arunachalam Chettiar (6). Although this Madras case was under the Act of 1918 and the present is a case under S. 13 of the Act of 1922, it does not make any difference in the principle applicable Simply because, while under S, 5 of the Act, 1918, only "income" was made chargeable to income-tax, and under S. 6 of the Act of 1922, not only "income" but "profits" and gains" are made chargeable, the addition of the words 'profits" and "gains" makes no difference as regards the matter now under consideration as I will show in the following paragraphs.

In Tora Gul Bai v. Commissioner of Income-tax (7), the sale-proceeds of goods sold in England by the Amir of Bukhara through a commission agent were credited to the agent's banking account in London and then transferred to his order at Bombay. There was no definite agreement fixing the rate of commission payable to the agent. The dispute as to the commission was settled in a suit at Peshawar in accordance with a compromise executed at Kabul and the Peshawar Court decreed that two lacs of the sale price was the property of the agent. The agent was assessed to income-tax on that sum. On the question being referred to the High Court at Lahore as to whether the Peshawar Court's decree resulted in the receipt by the assessee of the two lacs in British India for purposes of S 4 (1), Income-tax Act of 1922, it was held that as the assessee had received the price for the goods in England not as owner but merely as agent, notwithstanding his right to detain a portion of the money as his remuneration, he was not competent to convert the same to his own use before he had settled with the Amir, and thus, for the purposes of Indian Income-tax, the assessee received his two lacs after it had been allotted to him by virtue of the compromise.

(7) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 512=8 Lah. 395.

In J. P. Hall & Co Ltd, v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (8), it was held that, for the purposes of Excess Profits Duty, profits from the contracts for the purchase and sale of the control gear arose to the appellant company in the accounting periods in which the gear was actually delivered and not in the pre-war period ending the 30th June 1914, in which the contracts were made The following observations of Lord Sterndale, M. R, are important:

"* * * These profits were neither ascertained nor made at the time that these two contracts were concluded. There are any number of contingencies that might have happened, by which the profit would not have turned out what it appeared on the face of it when the contracts were made. Any number of complications might have occurred that might have caused quite a different result to have accrued from these two contracts."

Atkin, L J., also observed that

"the profits for Excess Profits Duty are to be assessed on the same basis of profits for income-tax purposes, and the word "profits" for income-tax purposes is to be understood in accordance with the words of Lord Halsbury in the Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles (9) "in its natural and proper sense, in a sense which no commercial man would misunderstand"

"that profits and gains must be ascertained on ordinary principles of commercial trading." * * * It seems to me that no person here trying to ascertain profits on the principles of ordinary commercial trading would dream of including profits in his yearly balance-sheet, which would not be made until the goods had actually been delivered in respect of some contract which was to run over a period of at least two years, possibly more. To my mind the procedure of the company was the ordinary commercial procedure in taking the profits that they made as and when the goods were delivered. Anything else, it appears to me, would be quite contrary to commercial procedure, and would not be profits in the natural and proper sense."

The principles deducible from these ruling are that unless and until the preliminary conditions necessary for earning the benefit of any business contract as a profit are settled, or performed the profit does not even arise, or accrue To treat it as a profit, in its real sense the assessee must be "competent to convert the same to his own use;" he cannot therefore, be regarded as having received any income in the shape of profits of the particular business contract until the contract is performed. Further a mere conclusion of a contract is not sufficient, nor will a receipt of money on somebody else's account be sufficient pending settlement with him It, therefore, follows that a mere credit of the amount of interest in the kasar khata, in the year when the contract is concluded, pending the actual receipt thereof after it falls due, is not sufficient to charge the amount so credited as "income." Not only this but a credit of the anticipated profit in the very year in which the contract is made, i. e, before the performance, or delivery, contemplated by it, falls due, or, is given, is "contrary to commercial procedure" and would not reflect the real "income" of the assessee, or "be profits in the natural and proper sense."

Reading the credit entries in the kasar khata in conjunction with the debit entries in the debtor's personal ledger accounts the only legal inference deducible therefrom is that what is shown as received under the kasar khata is really not received at all but is only expected to be received or perhaps may never be received and the amount so credited can therefore be regarded merely as an unrealized asset of the business, and not as "income" or "profits" or "gains" of the business. What is only a jama kharchi kasar, i. e profit by book adjustment cannot be confused with profit derived from cash realizations of interest, merely because both are lumped together under one ledger head kasar khata."

A Bench of this Court had occasion to decide in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Nanhelal (10) a more or less similar question upon a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax. It was there held that sums shown in the accounts as having fallen due but not received could not be treated as "income." I think that the said decision in no way contravenes the provisions of S. 13, Income-tax Act of 1922. For these reasons I am of opinion that the item of Rs 16,031-4-6 which represents unrealized interest was wrongly treated as "income," "profits" or "gains" under the head of "business" by the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax in taxing the present assessee.

As a result of the above conclusions I recommend that the answer to the first point should be in the affirmative, and that to the second should be in the negative Order.—This is an application for review of my decision. The learned counsel for the applicant has in a very long and elaborate argument tried to urge that the view taken by me in the case as regards the obligation of the Railway Company to reweigh is opposed to that taken by the Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Janki Das v. B N. Ry. Co. (1), and Ram Jas Agarwal v Indian General Navigation & Ry. Co. Ltd. (2) and Jagannath Marwary v. E. I. Ry. Co. (3) and that I should not have preferred the view expressed in R. & K Ry. Co v. Ismail Khan (4), by the Judges of the Allahabad High Court, to their view. In other words the review is sought on the short ground that there is an error of law in my decision. But as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajuram v Neki (5), the mere fact that a judgment proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law is no valid ground for review. This view has been followed by this Court in Ramchandra v. Govindrao (6), where it is distinctly pointed out that a mistake of law is not in itself a sufficient mistake or error apparent on the face of the record to warrant a review of judgment. Even assuming that there is an error or mistake of law in the decision under review, I think I, as a single Judge, am bound by the Bench decision of this Court especially as it is based on the Privy Council decision just quoted above I am, therefore, constrained to reject the petition for review on this technical ground.

Lastly, I am asked to hold that some of my remarks as regards the scheme and intention of the Railways Act are mere obiter and unnecessary for the actual decision of the case This may be so, I may say it is natural in a judgment which was somewhat long. But the correctness or otherwise of this remark of the applicant must depend upon the actual observations made, or upon the construction of word that may have been used or might have crept in the course of writing a decision. If the observations were unnecessary, as the company thinks for supporting the actual finding or decision given in the case and it could be otherwise supported on the evidence on record, then the Railway Company is at perfect liberty to ignore my obiter remarks, without the necessity of asking for a review of my decision and obtaining a pronouncement to that effect from me. All that I can say, for the benefit of the Railway Company, if it benefits the company at all, is that on the facts and circumstances which were proved in the case, the refusal and neglect of the Railway Company to comply with the plaintiffs demand for reweighment was prompted by improper motives and was not justified It was, therefore, actionable in the circumstances of the case. It was far from my intention to lay down as a matter of abstract proposition of law that the Railway Company was under a legal obligation under all circumstances, to reweigh the goods at the sweet will of a customer If there was any generalization and reference to the provisions of the Railways Act, the same must be with the object of lending more support by way of an additional proof rather than as the main stay for the decision, which was arrived at and based by me, on the evidence adduced in the case

Under these circumstances, I see no reason to interfere with the decision as given by me. The application for review stands rejected with costs. I fix pleader's fee Rs 20.

Second Appeal No 118 of 1928, Decided on 27th September 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Nimar, D/- 15th December 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 46 of 1927.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 203 (1)— A tenant has right to transfer site subject to exceptions without landlord's consent.

A tenant has a right of transfer subject to certain exceptions mentioned in the section. A transfer of a site to a person entitled to and not already in possession of it being perfectly legal is not voidable at the instance of the landlord, because the transferrer and the transferee settled the bargain without reference to him. [P 59 C 2]

(b) C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 203 (8)— Word "contract" does not include entry in wajib-ul-arz.

The word "contract" cannot be so liberally or widely interpreted as to include within its scope an entry in the wajib-ul-arz that the landlord's permission is necessary for the validity of a transfer. [P 59 C 2]

W. R. Puranik—for Appellant.

Judgment.—Mr. W. R Puranik, advocate, for the appellant heard. I think the provisions of S. 203 (1) and sub-S. (3), C. P. Land Revenue Act have been rightly interpreted. In using the words "A person holding a site shall be incompetent to transfer it except to a person entitled to and not already in possession of such site the legislature must be considered to have recognized a right of transfer subject to the exceptions. In other words the capacity to transfer was circumcribed and limited duly to the two exceptional cases: In laying down a general bar against transfer, the legislature conferred a limited right of transfer by making it possible to the transferring person to choose his own transferee within the statutory exceptions. The circle of persons who could be transferees was thus limited If the transferee was within the exception the transfer was legal and it gave to the landlord no right of re-entry. If the transferee did not satisfy those conditions, there was no right at all created in his favour in respect of the site, much less would he be classed as a licensee of the landlord. I think, the legislature never intended to lay down that a transfer which was perfectly legal was voidable at the instance of the landlord, because the transferrer and the transferee settled the bargain without reference to him.

I am asked to treat sub-S. 8 of the Act as sufficiently wide to bring the present case within the operation of an entry in the village administration paper which is said to be in the nature of a contract between the proprietor and the holder of the abadi site. I am not prepared to interpret the word "contract" so liberally or widely as to include within its scope the so-called implied covenant in the wajib-ul-arz that the landlords' permission is necessary for the validity of a transfer I cannot read into the section any provisions of the wajib-ul-arz in the absence of express words to that effect. If the legislature wanted to make any such exception in favour of an entry in the village administration paper, there was nothing to prevent it from doing so expressly in this section itself while enacting the exception in favour of a contract. It could have equally excepted such an entry in the village administration paper also The fact that in S 96, C P Tenancy Act of 1920 and in sub-S. (5) of S. 203, C P. Land Revenue Act of 1917, such exceptions are made is clearly indicative of an intention that wherever the legislature thought fit to enact an exception it did so expressly.

I therefore hold that the permission of the landlord was not necessary for the legality of the transfer in question and that the plaintiff's claim has been very rightly dismissed in the Courts below. The appeal fails and is dismissed without notice to the respondent

Judgment — The judgment in this appeal will govern the decision of the cross-appeal No 470 of 1927—Madhorao v Kamtaprasad and others At the beginning of 1914 one Ramrao held a two annas share in Mouza Lachanpur in the Bilaspur District as his ancestral property He had two sons, Baburao since deceased and Madhorao, the plaintiff in this case On 14th February 1914 he sold the share to Mt Pilibai, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants. In the suit out of which this second appeal arises Madhorao sought possession of the entire two annas share alleging that the consideration was taken for immoral purposes, or in the alternative, was not supported by legal necessity He stated that Baburao is dead and Ramrao could not be traced so that he was entitled to possession of the entire share. The defendants urged that the right to avoid the transfer so far as Baburao's share was concerned abated on his death and that Ramrao was alive and the plaintiff could not claim his share. They alleged that the sale to Pilibai was supported by legal necessity and also that Pilibai made due enquiries regarding the existence of legal necessity before purchasing the property.

The lower appellate Court has held in para. 3 of its judgment that the sale was not effected to obtain money for immoral purposes but was not justified by legal necessity ; out of the purchase money Rs 450 was used for the acquisition of tenancy right in certain lands at Mohtari; there was no legal necessity to acquire these lands, but as the plaintiff was in possession of the lands the sale was valid against him to the extent of Rs 450; there was no proof that the remainder of the consideration was obtained in order to benefit the family estate; it is not proved that Mt Pilibai made any enquiries regarding necessity; Ramrao was alive and still entitled to his share; and the right of Baburao to avoid the sale abated on his death

The conclusion from these findings was that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree putting him in joint possession of his share amounting to eight pies on payment of Rs 150 "as his share of the amount supported by legal necessity"

I first deal with the second appeal filed by the defendants, S. A No. 422 of 1927. It is first urged that the entire consideration of the sale-deed was taken for legal necessity and for the benefit of the estate. This ground attacks a finding of fact. Apart from the recitals in the sale-deed, there is no good evidence in support of the ground Ramrao has admittedly been a spendthrift and the recitals in the sale-deed carry a little weight I see no reason to interfere with the finding of the lower appellate Court on this point.

It is next urged that the vendee made proper and bona fide enquiries as to the existence of legal necessity and took the sale-deed after reasonably satisfying herself as to the existence of such necessity As pointed out in Ganba v. Shri Vishveshwar Deosthan (1), recitals in the sale-deed are ordinarily insufficient to establish that the vendee made sufficient enquiries into the existence of legal necessity As I have stated above, the fact that Ramrao was a spendthrift diminishes the value of these recitals. There is no independent evidence on record to show that Pilibai made any enquiries. This ground, therefore, fails.

The last ground is that as the sale is justified to the extent of more than one-third and the share of the plaintiff is only one-third, the plaintiff is not entitled to have the sale set aside. Now the finding of the lower appellate Court, although it contains a statement that there was legal necessity to the extent of Rs 450, appears clearly to be that there was no legal necessity for any sum. The reason for ordering the plaintiff to deposit part of the Rs 450 before the sale was set aside is that the plaintiff is actually in possession of the land purchased with the proceeds of the sale of the village share and that in equity he should not obtain both his share of the purchase-money and his share of the property sold. Apart from this, his father Ramrao was clearly not entitled to sell that part of the joint property, which would ultimately form his son's share for legal necessity, reserving the part which would form his own share for other purposes. Again, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Krishan Das v Nathu Ram (2), the true question which has to be answered in cases like this is: "Whether the sale itself was one which was justified by legal necessity." I have not to consider whether the sale of a one-third share of the property might have been justified for legal necessity but whether the sale of the whole property actually effected was so justified For all these reasons the last ground must fail.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. Costs on appellants.

I proceed with the appeal filed by Madhorao, S A. No. 470 of 1927. This raises several interesting questions of law. I first deal with the argument that as the sale was not for legal necessity the plaintiff, a joint cosharer in the share sold, is entitled to possession of the entire share, while the purchaser can only be given a declaration that he is entitled to stand in the shoes of his vendor and work out his rights and remedies in a partition suit

There can be no doubt what a purchaser of an undivided share of a joint Hindu family, if out of possession, should not be given joint possession with the other coparceners but should be left to his remedy of a suit for partition This is settled law. I need only refer to Bhau v. Budha Manaku Dhor (3) and Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (4), and the cases cited therein. But the Bombay High Court in the case cited above has held that if such a purchaser is already in possession and a suit for recovery of possession is brought by an excluded coparcener, the purchaser need not necessarily be ejected: the Court has discretion to declare him entitled to hold

(2) A. I. R. 1927 P.C. 37=49 All. 149=54 I.A. 79 (P.C.).

(3) A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 399=50 Bom. 204.

(4) [1916] 39 Mad. 265=25 I. C. 585=27 M. L. J. 409.

(pending a partition) as a tenant-in-common with the other coparceners.

In the present case the purchaser has been in possession for many years in virtue of a sale which is good until the sons exercise their personal rights to set it aside It does appear a somewhat cumbrous procedure to deprive the purchaser of the possession of land which he has held for many years under a voidable title when he has still a right to regain possession of a part of the land by means of a partition suit But, in reality, the adoption of this course does not involve greater hardship on the purchaser than the alternative course involves upon the coparcener who has set aside a sale In the former case, the purchaser can file a suit for partition immediately and will very possibly be entitled to a share of the mesne profits during the pendency of the suit, whereas in the latter case, the coparcener will very possibly be driven to a suit for partition before obtaining physical possession of the share which he has every right to possess.

Clearly the fact that the purchaser has been so fortunate as to remain for many years in possession under a voidable title is not a strong reason for inflicting inconvenience on the coparcener in order to avoid possible hardship to the purchaser.

In Mohanlal v. Tekchand (5) the facts were very similar to those in the case which I am dealing There was a sale by the father and even if the father did not represent himself to be acting as manager the son had only a personal right to set aside the sale and the purchaser remained in possession of the entire share for many years It was decided that the plaintiffs were entitled to possess the whole and every part of the undivided estate while the family remained undivided. I see no reason to dissent from this view In Maharaja of Bibbili v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (4) it is stated

"The Privy Council has decided that the alienee in possession is liable to be ejected at the instance of the coparceners who are not bound by the alienation."

The view taken by the Bombay High Court is to the effect that a purchaser already in possession should in some cases be ejected and in some cases allowed to hold, till a partition, as a tenant-in-common I agree with the opinion of Stanyon, A. J C., in Mohanlal v Tekchand (5), that it involves undue hardship on the coparcener to drive him into the anomalous position of joint possession with a stranger or compel him to carry out a partition for the benefit of the vendee.

This ground of appeal, therefore, succeeds, and I hold that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendants, though, as was ordered in Deendyal Lal v Jugdeep (6), a declaration in favour of the defendants should form part of the decree

It is next urged that the lower appellate Court erred in holding that the right of Baburao to impeach the sale abated on his death and the plaintiff could not recover the share which could have been recovered by Baburao. I agree with the appellant's counsel that the decision in Sardar Sing v Ajit Sing (7), does not apply to the facts in this case It is not the case that the plaintiff Madhorao has a right to set aside the sale with respect to one-third of the estate while his brother Baburao had an entirely separate right to avoid the sale with regard to a separate one-third share. The plaintiff has a subsisting right to set aside the sale. In Sardar Sing v Ajit Sing (7) there was at the time of the suit no person in existence who had a right to set aside a sale. After the sale is set aside the defendants remained purchasers of the undivided share of the plaintiff's father, Ramrao. They can sue for partition and the share which they will get depends upon the state of the family at the time of partition. Had other sons been born to Ramrao the share would have been diminished. After the death of Baburao the share which they can get has increased. From the admitted facts it would appear that the share which the defendants will receive on partition will be a half share if they now file a suit The lower appellate Court is wrong in thinking that the plaintiff is only entitled to a one-third share and the aphellant's contention that he is entitled to a two-third share is incorrect.

It is last urged that the plaintiff should not have been held liable to make reimbursement before recovering the property sold. Ramrao sold property which was liable to be attached by creditors and spent Rs. 450 in obtaining possession of occupancy lands; he entered the names of his minor sons as tenants of that land. The plaintiff is in possession of the lands, either solely or at least to the extent of one-half. It has not been urged that the lands are of a less value than the sum expended in their acquisition I see no reason for disturbing the order made under the principles of equity that the plaintiff should make reimbursement before recovering the property sold It has not been urged that he should make the reimbursement of the whole of the Rs 450 and it is clear that he must pay half that sum before he gets a decree for possession of the whole of the property sold This ground therefore fails.

The decree of this Court is therefore that if the plaintiff pay Rs 225 to the defendants within a period of two months from this date,the defendants shall deliver possession of the 2 annas share in suit . but it is declared that the defendants have acquired the share and interest of Ramrao in that property and are entitled to take such proceedings as they may be advised to have that share and interest determined in partition If the plaintiff fails to pay the Rs 225 his suit shall stand dismissed The plaintiff will bear one-fourth of the costs in all Courts, the defendants the remainining three-fourths. Judgment. — The lower appellate Court decided all the points in dispute except those which related to the amount due to the defendants as mortgagees, The judgment states·

"The pleadings and issues as to what should be the price of redemption are however left incomplete and defective and no proper adjudication can be given on it."

The decree of the first Court was reversed and that Court was directed to take proper pleadings with regard to the sum due to the mortgagees The plaintiffs in appeal to this Court attacked the findings of the lower appellate Court on the point in dispute

The respondents urge that no appeal lies In Jagannath v. Maruti (1) it was pointed out that a remand such as this is not a remand under O 41, R 23, Sch, 1 Civil P C, as the first Court had not disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point It is stated that such a remand was an exceptional course followed under the powers given by O. 41, R. 33 I prefer the view taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ghuznavi v Allahabad Bank Ld. (2) that S 151 of the Code authorises such a remand, but it is not very material whether the power to make remand is given by S 151, or by O 41, R. 33, as in either case no appeal lies from an order which is not a decree The order of remand is not a decree, as it does not conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters of controversy in the suit any more than a finding on some issues given in the course of the suit This has been held in Chandrika Prasad Singh v Mithu Rai (3) and I agree with the reasoning of the Judges who decided that case. In Radha Krishna Rao v.

(3) A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 296=6 Pat. 380.

Venkata Rao (4), also, it was held that no appeal lay from an order of remand made without reliance on the provisions of O 41, R. 23. I add that in Jagannath v Maruti (1) the order regarding refund certificate justified Stanyon, A J C in treating the remand order as an order improperly passed under O 41, R. 23, and entertaining an appeal from that order

The appellants do not urge that the remand is improper and though I fully agree with Stanyon, A J C., that the power of remanding a case, when O 41, R. 23 does not apply, should be most sparingly used by the Court of first appeal, I see no reason to interfere with the procedure of the lower appellate Court.

I have been asked by the appellants to make it clear that this Court if and when the appellate Court finally decides all the matters in dispute and a second appeal is filed, will consider the propriety of the findings which the lower appellate Court has already reached.

I hold that this appeal does not lie and, therefore, dismiss it Costs of this appeal will be borne by the appellants Counsel's fee Rs 40.

Balkishan—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 533 of 1927, Decided on 29th November 1928 from decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Saugor, D/- 21st July 1927, in Civil Appeal No 34 of 1927

Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 203 (3)—Person having site insufficient for his agricultural needs can purchase abadi site without landlord's consent—Civil Court can decide validity of transfer.

The words "such site" in Cl. (3) do not refer to the site which it is desired to transfer. They refer to the words "a house-site of reasonable dimensions in the abadi." A person having a site insufficient for his requirements as agriculturist is, therefore, entitled to purchase an abadi site without the permission of the landlord. Cl. (4), S. 203 does not prevent civil Court from deciding whether such a transfer is valid. [P 64 C 2]

A. V Vazalwar—for Appellant.

G. L. Subhedar—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The judgment in this appeal governs the disposal of Second Appeal No 534 of 1927. Mahant Premdas v Balkishan: both appeals arise from a single decree of the original Court. The facts found by the lower appellate Court are that the defendant-respondent had a portion of a house in mouza Tili, but this portion was totally insufficient for his requirements as an agriculturist. He purchased another house in the village without the consent of the plaintiff malguzar. The malguzar's suit for possession of the site has been dismissed. There is an order, against which the defendant has filed no appeal, that the defendant should pay Rs. 150 to the plaintiff as compensation.

It is urged in appeal that the civil Courts had no jurisdiction to decide whether the site already in possession of the defendant was insufficient for his requirements; and even if that site was insufficient, the defendant could not purchase another site without reference to the landlord. S 203, Cl. (3), Land Revenue Act is as follows:

"A person holding a site under sub-S. (1) shall be incompetent to transfer it except to his next heir or to a person entitled to and not already in possession of such site."

The words "such site" cannot refer to the site which it is desired to transfer, as a rule permitting a person to transfer a site to a person entitled to it is obviously unnecessary. It follows that the words "such site" must refer to the words "a house-site of reasonable dimensions in the abadi," in Cl. (1), S 203 The defendant was admittedly entitled to such a site and it has been held, for excellent reasons, that he did not possess such a site. Cl. (3) then does not prohibit the transfer of the site to him

The question whether a transfer to him was competent is clearly not a dispute regarding the allotments of sites in the abadi Cl. (4), S. 203, which directs that such disputes shall de decided by a revenue officer, does not prevent a civil Court from deciding whether the transfer with which I am concerned was valid. S. 203, Land Revenue Act, then does not render the transfer of a house to the defendant invalid, although the plaintiff's consent was not obtained. It is not suggested that the transfer was for any other reason invalid. The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed. Costs on appellant.

N. G. Bose—for Appellant,

B K. Bose and P. N. Rudra—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Muksudan Singh, malguzar of Kacharbod, filed this suit on 26th March 1925, against Darbargir who had purchased by means of an unregistered sale-deed dated 2nd October 1922, 8·53 acres of occupancy land for Rs. 256 from Mt. Premkuar, the tenant of the land in suit. Darbargir was put in possession in accordance with the sale. Mangal Singh, a nephew of Mt. Premkuar, was made a defendant, because he used to live with Mt Premkuar, was her heir, had signed the sale-deed and had thus given his consent to the sale. Mt. Kala applied on 17th July 1925, to be made a defendant, as she alleged that she was the daughter of Mt. Premkuar and was added as a defendant The defendant Darbargir stated that he purchased the land for Rs. 481, after obtaining the consent of the plaintiff, that he had been in possession since 2nd October 1922, that as plaintiff did not apply under S 13, C. P. Tenancy Act for setting aside the transfer, his remedy is barred and this Court has no jurisdiction. Mt. Kala put in a written statement in which she stated that she was the heir of Mt. Premkuar and not Mangal Singh, and that plaintiff had no right to bring the suit.

The trial Court found that plaintiff had not consented to the sale, that Darbargir was in possession of the land in suit from 2nd October 1922, that Mt. Kala was Mt. Premkuar's daughter, that civil Court had jurisdiction to try the suit, that the sale-deed was inadmissible for want of registration, that Mangal Singh signed the sale-deed as an attesting witness, that Mt Kala's claim had become barred and passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. The lower appellate Court held that the malguzar's consent was not proved, that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, that Mt Kala's claim was not barred against the plaintiff who was not in possession, that the landlord had no right of re-entry unless it was proved that the tenant right had ceased to exist and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The first point which is urged in this appeal is that the civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit under S. 9, Civil P. C., and S 105 (c), Tenancy Act, has no application to such a suit. In this case the transfer, which is by an unregistered deed, is invalid and the intended tranferee is not a transferee at all and is a trespasser at civil law and can be ejected from the land by a suit. In Chindhu v. Rameshwarnath (1), Kotwal, A. J C., and Prideaux, A. J. C., in a similar case, held as follows :

"We are of opinion that registration in contravention of any provision of law whatever be the cause that led to the contravention is ineffectual and must be ignored. We agree with the view taken in Nilkant v. Ghulya (2) and the reasons given in support of that view. If the registration is ignored there is no transfer in cases where registration is necessary and the jurisdiction of the civil Court is not barred."

In this case the sale being for Rs. 481 registration was necessary and as the document could not be registered there was no transfer and the vendee is a trespasser and the civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

(2) [1917] 13 N. L. R. 165=42 I. C. 384.

The next point which is urged is that the plaintiff is entitled to possession though Mt Kala, the daughter of Mt. Premkuar is a defendant in the suit, because Mt. Kala never undertook to cultivate the holding, pay rent to the landlord and was never in possession of the holding Mt. Premkuar died in June 1924, and she was the tenant of the land in suit at the time of her death. She was succeeded by her daughter Mt. Kala who on Mt. Premkuar's death, became the tenant of the land in suit and is still the tenant The plaintiff's case against defendant 3 was that she was not the daughter of Mt. Premkuar and in the alternative he had pleaded, that in case it was held that she was Mt. Premkuar's daughter, she could not claim the land in preference to the plaintiff's right who was the lambardar. The lambardar as such has no such preferential right and, therefore, cannot be allowed to take possession of the land, when the tenant is alive and her tenant right has not come to an end. The posision of Darbargir is that of a liecensee and Mt. Kala is the tenant of the land in suit. As the tenant is a party to this suit, the plaintiff cannot be put in possession, and, therefore, his suit for possession must be dismissed.

Considering the fact that the appellant hae succeeded on the main point involved in the appeal, though his suit fails for other reasons because Mt. Kala is also a party to this suit, it seems fair and proper that each party should bear his costs as incurred in this Court and the Courts below. The plaintiff's suit for possession is dismissed and the appeal is rejected.

(Sheikh) Mahomad—Objector—Applicant.

Pandurang and others— Non-Applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 123-B of 1928, Decided on 30th October 1928, from order of 2nd Class Sub-Judge, Pusad, D/- 27th February 1921, in Misc. Case No. 138 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 58—Possession only is to be determined—Question of title should not be gone into.

What the Court has to find out in objection cases under O. 21, R. 58, is who was in possession. It should not go into questions of title as finding as to title in a summary enquiry does not bind the Court in the regular suit brought by the aggrieved party : 15 Cal. 521 (P. C.) ; A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 744 and 14 Cal. 617, Rel. on. [P 67 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 115 — Other remedy open—Finding of fact not opposed to evidence should not be interfered in revision.

When another remedy is open to the aggrieved party and where no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from High Court's refusal to act, High Court will not interfere in revision with a pure finding of fact when the finding is not opposed to the evidence on record or is not based on meagre or little evidence or on disregard of evidence: A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 115 and A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 290, Appl. [P 67 C 1]

M. Y. Sharif—for Applicant

D. R Baxi—for Non-Applicants.

Order.—In this case the non-applicant (decree-holder) obtained a decree in Civil Suit No 379 of 1927 on 22nd June 1927 against Sheikh Nur and Sheikh Hayat. He attached in execution of that decree fields S. Nos. 40, 69 (half-share) and 210 (one-third share) and houses situated at Dhanki as the property of the judgment-debtors. Against this attachment the objector, brother of the judgment-debtors, filed an objection under O 21, R. 58, on the contentions that the judgment-debtors had transferred their shares on partition by a souda-chitthi dated 10th January 1927 and subsequent sale-deeds dated 13th January 1927. These sale-deeds were said to be for consideration, and his story is that he is in exclusive possession of the above property as owner from 10th January 1927.

The decree-holder admitted that the objector had a one-third joint share in the attached property and asked that that share be released. The partition set up was denied by the decree-holder and the sale-deeds were said to be bogus, fraudulent and executed with intent to defeat the claim of the creditors of the decree-holders.

The objector has failed, and the lower Court finds that the sale-deeds were not for consideration and that consequently no title passed from the judgment-debtors to the objector who acquired no interest in the property described in the sale-deeds. Dealing with the point of possession the Judge writes :

"I believe the evidence of decree-holder and hold that judgment-debtors were in possession of the property under attachment."

The words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Prasad (1), are pertinent in these cases. They state :

"The Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go, and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question, in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Court at the time, leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows him."

And virtually what the Court has to find out in these cases is who was in possession, for the finding as to title in a summary enquiry does not bind the Court in the regular suit brought by the aggrieved party. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in Najmunnessa Biti v. Nuzharuddin Sardar (2), that Rr. 60 and 61, R 21, Civil P. C., provide for a summary investigation into possession as distinct from a trial of ultimate right. The same conclusion was come to in an earlier case of the same High Court in Hamid Bakhut v. Buktear Chand (3), and it seems to me that in the present case the lower Court went further than was necessary in deciding the question of title But there is a clear finding on the part of the lower Court as to possession. It has long been held that, though S 115, Civil P. C. forbids revision only in cases in which an appeal lies, it will not ordinarily be granted where there is some other remedy open to the aggrieved party, see Ramchandra v Shridhar (4). In Samsherkhan v. Abdul Sattarkhan (5) I held that it is not the practice of this Court to interfere in revision when another remedy is open to the aggrieved party and where no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from its refusal to act, and I do not think that in the present case I should interfere with the pure finding of fact as to possession, for it cannot be said that that finding is opposed to the evidence on record or is based on meagre or little evidence or on disregard of evidence.

I think the lower Court has come to a right conclusion in the matter and I, therefore, dismiss this application for revision The applicant will pay the non-applicants' costs. I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Second Appeal No. 357-B of 1927, Decided on 8th December 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 9th August 1927 in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1927.

(a) Will—Maintenance.

It is doubtful whether more right to maintenance can be given by a will. [P 68 C 1]

(b) Will—Construction — Testator giving legatee field for maintenance and house for residence—Legatee restrained from alienating but descendants of legatee made entitled to enjoy property after legatee—Not mere right to maintenance but absolute estate was given, restraint on alienation being invalid.

A testator by his will gave a field for legatee's maintenance and a house for his residence. The legatee was forbidden to transfer the property by sale, mortgage or gift and the will contained a clause that if he did so the heirs of the testator would be entitled to claim the property. There was, however, a clause whereby the descendants of the legatee were to enjoy the property after him.

Held : that the will did not give a more right to maintenance but the legatee was to get absolute estate and the restraint on alienation was invalid and ineffectual: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 176, Dist. [P 68 C, 1 2]

D. T. Mangalmurti—for Appellant.

M. K. Chande—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The only question which I have to consider is the nature of the estate conferred on the legatees by the will of Sitaram. Sitaram had been adopted by one Jairamdas and the legatees were his natural brother and nephews. The will states that the legatees had no claim to the testator's property ; they were in poor circumstances and out of pity for them a field was given for their maintenance and a house for their residence The will is very clear on the point that the field was given for cultivation, though it might be leased for a short period, and the house was given only for residence. The legatees were forbidden to transfer the property by sale, mortgage or gift and the will contains a clause that if they did so the heirs of the testator would be entitled to claim the property. There is, however, a clause which is admitted to mean that the descendants of the legatees should enjoy the property after them.

The lower appellate Court has held that this will must be construed as giving an absolute estate to the legatees, the conditions restraining alienation being invalid and ineffectual In appeal it is urged that the will does not transfer the entire rights in the property; it merely gives the legatees and their descendants a right of maintenance from the property, the remaining rights in the property devolved at the testator's death on his heirs. It is argued that a right to maintenance out of an estate enjoyed on the part of a person and his descendants is a right known to Hindu law: for instance, such a right may be enjoyed by the younger brothers of a zamindar where the zamindari is impartible.

It is quite clear that the legatees have not got a right to maintenance It is at least doubtful whether such a right could be given by a will and even if this could be done what was given to them by this will was either full rights in the property or something in the nature of a charge on the property. The heir of the testator is in no way bound to maintain the legatees The facts in Rajindra Narain Singh v. Sundara Bibi (1) were entirely different. In that case the appellant was declared to have a right of maintenance in certain villages by a compromise decree between himself and his brother There was apparently no suggestion that before the decree the brother had no right of maintenance and the decree appears merely to have fixed the manner in which the maintenance was to be received; the rights of the appellant in certain villages represented his right to maintenance and could not be attached in execution.

After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the legatees took an absolute estate under the will. The will cannot be considered merely to carve out an estate in the property mentioned leaving the testator's heirs with the remaining rights in the property for the provisions of the will deprive the testator's heirs of any real interest in the property. There is no attempt to define with exactness the heirs of the legatees who were to enjoy the estate after the death of the legatees and there is no clear statement that on failure of these heirs the estate will revert to the heirs of the testator. The provision that the testator's heirs will be entitled to possession if the property is improperly alienated appears designed to prevent alienation, not to secure any benefit to the testator's heirs. The will then must be read as depriving the heirs of the testator of the property given to the leagtees. The legatees then take absolute estate and the restraints on alienation are invalid and ineffectual The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed Costs on appellant.

M. B. Niyogi and M. B. Marathe—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The applicant asks for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from what she terms the judgment and decree of this Court in First Appeal No. 59-B.

of 1927, decided on 12th January 1928. She was the the defendant in the suit, filed by Hari Ram for a declaration that he (Hari Ram) was the adopted son of Ganeshdas The first Court in a careful judgment found that Hari Ram had been adopted by Ganeshdas and passed a decree in his favour. The appeal to this Court, First Appeal No 59-B of 1927, was dismissed by a Bench without notice to the respondent. The decision of the appeal was termed by the Bench a judgment but no decree was drawn up ; it is the pratice of this Court not to pass a decree when an appeal is dismissed under O. 41, R 11, Civil P C. As the judgment or final order of this Court affirmed the decision of the Court immediately below leave to appeal to the King in Council cannot be granted unless the appeal involved some substantial question of law.

It is urged before us that it was necessary for this Court to pronounce a judgment containing the matters set forth in O 41, R. 31, Civil P. C. and that the judgment pronounced does not contain these matters and " is really no judgment at all. " We first consider the question whether a Court dismissing an appeal under the provisions of O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., is bound to pronounce judgment containing the matters detailed in O. 41, R 31.

Order 41, R. 30, Civil P. C. directs the appellate Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties or their pleaders. It has no reference to dismissal of the appeal at an earlier stage under R. 11. R 31 clearly refers to the judgment pronounced in accordance with R 30, but we are unable to see that it has any application to an order of dismissal passed under R. 11 The rulings in which the point has been discussed at length are in consonance with this view. In Samin Hasan v. Piran (1) it was held that a Court dismissing an appeal under S. 551 of the old Procedure Case was not bound to record a judgment complying with the provisions of S 574 of the Code In Tanaji Dagde v. Shankar Sakharam (2) two Judges of the Bombay High Court held that in dismissing an appeal under R 11 it was not obligatory upon the lower appellate Court to write a judgment This decision was considered by a Full Bench in Hanmant v. Annaji Hanmanta (3) The Judges of that Bench apparently considered that the judgment in Tanaji Dagde v. Shankar Sakharam (2) would have been correct but for the existence of a Civil Circular published under the provisions of the High Courts Act giving directions to the lower Courts of appeal in Bombay. Scott, C. J., states:

" There is much to be said for the reasoning in Tanaji Dagde v. Shankar Sakharam (2) upon the materials which were then before the Court " and Beaman, J. would have adhered to the view expressed in Tanaji Dagde v Shankar Sakharam (2) if the Bench had had nothing more to do than to give a true construction of O 41

In Royal Reddi v. Linga Reddi (4) two Judges took the opposite view with regard to the provisions of a former Procedure Code, but the short reasoning which supported their view appears to have no application to the provisions of the new Code. In Kali Kishore Deb Sarkar v. Guru Prosad Sukul (5) Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ , took the same view of the provisions of the old Code as that taken in the Madras case, but they are careful to say that they think this is the correct view and do not discuss the point at length.

We are of opinion that the provisions of O. 41, Sch 1, Civil P. C do not require a Judge to write a judgment when the appeal is dismissed under O. 41, R. 11. In S. 2, Civil P. C , " judgment " is defined as a statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order. It is optional for a Judge to write a judgment whenever he passes an order: but it seems clear that the provisions of O. 41, R 31, do not apply to every statement given by the Judge of the grounds of an order. Apart from this if it is unnecessary for the Judge to write a judgment, the order of dismissal is not invalidated if he writes something which " is really no judgment at all. "

We hold, therefore, that if the judgment of this Court had not been in accordance with O. 41, R 31, Civil P. C. the dismissal of the appeal would not have been invalidated.

(1) [1908] 30 All. 319=5 A. L. J. 300=1908 A. W. N. 115.

(4) [1881] 3 Mad. 1.
(5) [1898] 25 Cal. 99.

To avoid misconception we add that in some cases it is desirable to give full reasons for an order of dismissal under O. 41, R. 11, this is frequently so desirable when the order can be attacked in second appeal.

The judgment of this Court, however, does contain the matters mentioned in O 41. R. 31 It states the only point for determination, namely, whether Hari Ram was duly adopted by Ganeshdas, it gives a decision thereon and an entirely adequate reason for that decision, viz:

"there is a mass of conclusive evidence proving that the adoption was made and in the course of an address lasting over four hours the learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to mention a single item of real evidence to the contrary effect."

The first ground put forward by the applicant therefore fails.

The remaining grounds really urge that undue weight was attached to a certain evidence produced by the plaintiff, while proper weight was not given to numerous circumstances, which, it is asserted, favour the defendant's case. We consider that no question of law either as to construction of documents or to any other point arises on the judgment of this Court.

This application must therefore be dismissed. Costs on applicant. Pleader's fee Rs. 200

High Court's jurisdiction under S. 25 is discretionary and cannot be exercised except to remedy injustice. [P 71 C 1]

W. R. Puranik—for Applicant.

V. N. Bapat—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The applicant is the Village Sanitation Panchayat of Chandur. The Panchayat on 31st July 1926 passed a resolution dismissing the non-applicant. The non-applicant in the Small Cause Court sued for damages caused by his sudden dismissal. He stated that he was not able to secure employment for a period of three months and thus sustained a loss of Rs. 120. The learned Small Cause Court Judge in a very careful judgment has awarded this sum to the plaintiff with interest.

It is first urged before me that the applicant Panchayat was a public officer within the meaning of S. 80, Civil P. C., and hence in the absence of notice the suit was untenable. Reliance is placed on S 2, Cl 17 (f) and (g), Civil P C In Cecil Gray v. Cantonment Committee of Poona (1) it was held that the Cantonment Committee was a "public officer" The learned Judges state that a "public officer" means, in the first place, a "person" and the word "person" includes any body or association of individuals. I must, with all respect, disagree with a finding that a committee can be a "public officer." In S. 2, Cl. 17, Civil P C., it is stated that "public officer" means a person falling under any of the descriptions which follow; and while "a person" includes any body or association of individuals, it does not follow that any body or association of individuals need fall under any of the descriptions given. A "committee" cannot be described as an "officer" or "a person who holds any office." In my opinion it would be impossible to discover in any standard work an instance of the use of the common word "officer" to denote an association of individuals.

The duties and powers of committees such as Municipal Committees, Village Sanitation Panchayats and Cantonment Committees are derived from special Acts. Where it is considered necessary such Acts, e. g., the Municipal Act, contain sections making notice necessary before a suit is instituted: and the existence of such sections confirms the view that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code with regard to public officers do not apply to such committees. The first point urged, therefore, fails.

On the next ground it is argued that, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff was rightly dismissed I do not see any reason to interfere with the finding of fact.

On the last ground it is urged that the lower Court erred in law in holding that at least three months' notice was necessary. It is perhaps difficult to hold that the applicant could not have given the non-applicant a month's notice when they proposed to dispense with his service, but the claim of the plaintiff was that after his dismissal he could not obtain employment for three months. It may well be that had he not been dismissed he would have found it more easy to obtain employment. Even assuming that the Small Cause Court Judge erred in law in thinking that three months' notice was necessary, my jurisdiction under S 25, Small Cause Courts Act, is discretionary and cannot be exercised except to remedy injustice. I am not satisfied that the damages awarded are excessive and refuse to interfere.

This application is, therefore, dismissed. Costs on applicant. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

First Appeal No. 119 of 1927, Decided on 20th November 1928, from decree of 1st Cl. Second Sub-Judge, Raipur, D/- 20th July 1927, in Civil Suit No. 84 of 1926.

Specific Relief Act, S. 42—Suit for declaration that a document does not affect plaintiff's title is one for declaration with consequential relief—Court-fee must be paid under Court-fees Act, S. 7 (4) (c).

A suit for a declaration that a registered deed does not affect plaintiff's title, is one clearly made under the provisions of S. 39, Specific Relief Act, and such a suit is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and Court-fee must be paid under Court-fees Act, S. 7 (4) (c). The relief claimed is really the same whether the plaint purports to ask that a document should be adjudged voidable or declared not to affect the plaintiff's title or be set aside or cancelled : 38 Mad. 922 (F.B.), Foll. ; 30 Cal. 788, not Foll. ; 16 N.L.R. 84, Rel. on. [P 71 C 2 ; P 72 C 2]

M. R. Bobde—for Appellants.

P. S. Kotval—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellants put their signatures on a sale-deed. The document was registered under S. 74, Registration Act. The plaint states :

"Plaintiffs pray that a decree be passed declaring that the plaintiffs are proprietors of one anna four pies share of patti I of mouza Mohda and that the document registered on 20th October 1926 does not affect their title."

The plaint bore a ten rupees stamp and the value of the relief was stated to be Rs. 6,000. The defendant urged that the suit as framed is really one for declaration of title and cancellation of a sale-deed and therefore Court-fees ought to be paid on Rs. 2,000 under S. 7 (4) (c) and (d), Court-fees Act The plaintiffs in reply to this plea submitted that the consequential relief such as cancellation of the document was not necessary, but added that if the Court held otherwise they would amend the plaint, claim the relief and pay Court-fees. The learned Judge held that the claim was not properly valued for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction and that the proper value of the claim for the Court-fee and jurisdiction should be Rs. 2,000. The plaintiffs refused to pay the additional Court-fee and the plaint was therefore rejected under O. 7, R. 11 (c), Civil P. C.

Before me it is urged that the plaint as framed is properly stamped ; it does not ask for cancellation of the deed, and if it contravenes the provisions of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, the plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to amend the plaint. Now, under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, a suit may be instituted asking solely for a declaration that the plaintiff has title to any right over property. But the plaint in this case as framed does not only ask for this relief ; it asks for a declaration that the registered deed does not affect their title. This claim is clearly made under the provisions of S. 39, Specific Relief Act, which allows a person to sue to have a written document adjudged void or voidable against him.

I cannot distinguish between a declaration that a document does not affect a person's title and an adjudgment that the document is void or voidable against that person. Now if a person sues under the provisions of S. 39, Specific Relief Act, he must be deemed to ask for the remedy given by that section, namely, that the Court should adjudge the document void and order it to be delivered up and cancelled. It does not appear that under S. 39 the Court can adjudge a document void without ordering it to be delivered up and cancelled, except in the contingency mentioned in S 40. The relief claimed in the plaint was the relief which the Court could give under S 39, Specific Relief Act. The whole tenor of the plaint is to this effect, para. 20 alleges that the sale-deed is void and does not affect the title of the plaintiffs and para 19 states that the cause of action arose when the defendant attempted to make use of the deed.

There are several reported cases in which it has been held that a suit, in which the only prayer is to have it declared that a decree or deed is ineffectual and inoperative against the plaintiffs, is a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief ; I instance Zinnatunnessa Khatun v. Gobinda Nath Mukerjee (1). The reason for the decision in this ruling is that the plaint merely asks for a declaratory decree and that all that need be looked at is what the plaintiff asks for in his plaint There are a number of other reported cases in which it has been held that such a suit is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief. The ratio decidendi in these cases is that the relief claimed is really the same whether the plaint purports to ask that a document should be adjudged voidable or declared not to affect the plaintiff's title or be set aside or cancelled I instance the Full Bench decision in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangaswamy Pillai (2) There the question referred to the Full Bench related to :

"a suit for a declaration that an instrument of mortgage or sale executed by the plaintiff or a decree that has been passed against the plaintiff for a debt is not binding on him (p. 925 of the report)."

The Full Bench, after discussing the law with regard to a suit for a declaration and an injunction, proceeded, on p. 926, to deal with the case where a declaratory decree was asked for without any relief such as an injunction. Their opinion is stated as follows :

"We are of opinion that a suit of the nature indicated in the reference which merely asks for a declaration is none the less a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of Cl. 4 (c)."

I agree with this opinion and think it can be justified on the short ground that a suit of this nature is a suit permitted by the provisions of S. 39, Specific Relief Act, for the reliefs mentioned in this section. It seems clear that a prayer to set aside or cancel a document is a prayer for a consequential relief. This has been held by a Bench of this Court in Baldeoprasad v. R. S. Seth Ghasiram (3).

It is next urged that, as the plaintiffs were at liberty to value the relief of cancellation at Rs. 130, the plaint was sufficiently stamped. The plaint valued the relief at Rs 6,000. The defendant urged that the value of the relief was Rs 2,000 and the plaintiffs did not urge that the value was less It must be taken as admitted that the value of the relief was at least Rs. 2,000. The rejection of the plaint was then proper.

This appeal therefore fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellants.

Civil Revn. No. 234-B of 1928, Decided on 20th November 1928, from order of 2nd Class Sub-Judge, Kelapur, D/- 26th July 1928, in Civil Suit No. 172 of 1927.

 Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 1 (2)—Claim based on particular pro-note—After evidence, plaintiff finding it to be based on other note—He cannot be allowed to withdraw.

Under O. 23, R. 1, the words "formal defect" refer to cases of misjoinder either of parties or matters in contest in the suit, or to cases in which a material document has been rejected because it has not borne a proper stamp, and to cases in which there has been an erroneous valuation of the subject of the suit. But where the plaintiff comes into Court contending that his claim is based on a particular note of hand and, after evidence has been recorded, finds that it is not based on that but based on another note altogether, it can hardly be said to be a "formal defect," and he cannot be allowed to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit 40 All. 612; Rel. on.; A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 84 Appr. [P 73 C 1]

K V. Deoskar—for Applicant.

Abdul Razak—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This suit is based on a pronote dated 21st April 1924. The defendant contended that this had been renewed by another note dated 28th July 1925 and was therefore cancelled. The latter note he also contended, had been paid off and he produced it. The plaintiff stated that the second note of 1925was not genuine but when examined as a wiitnses he said that his claim was based on the note of 1925 and not on that of 1924. He then applied for withdrawal of the suit, and the lower Court holding that there was a formal defect in it permitted it to be with drawn

In my opinion the lower Court is wrong Under O. 23, R 1, Civil P C,, the words "formal defect" refer to cases of misjoinder either of parties or matters in contest in the suit, or to cases in which a material document has been rejected because it has not borne a proper stamp, and to cases in which there has been erroneous valuation of the subject of the suit. Those are cases which fail by reason of some point of form, but where the plaintiff comes into Court contending that his claim is based on a particular note of hand and after evidence has been recorded, finds that it is not based on that but based on another note altogether, it can hardly be said to be a "formal defect." It was held in Jhunku Lal v, Bisheshar Das (1) that a Court ought to be very slow to give liberty to bring a fresh suit after a case has been heard out on the merits In the present case the plaintiff seeks to recover a sum of money upon certain allegations which are admittedly untrue, and in a case like this I do not think he should be allowed to withdraw It was held by Batten, O.J. C., in Singhai Rajilal v. Kanhai (2) that "the object of R. 1 (2), O. 23, Civil P, C., 1908, is not to enable a plaintiff, after he has failed to conduct his suit with proper care and diligence and after his witnesses have failed to support his case, to obtain an opportunity of commencing the trial afresh in order to avoid the result of his previous misconduct of the case and so to prejudice the opposite party."

This finding has my concurrence

I set aside the order permitting the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit and dismiss the present suit with costs. The plaintiff will pay the defendant's costs both in the Small Cause Court and here I fix pleader's fees at Rs 15.

J. Sen—for Appellant

S B. Gokhale—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed in the Court of the 1st Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad The defendants, among other pleas, urged that the suit should have been filed at Burhanpur and that the Hoshangabad Court had no jurisdiction The first Court held that the suit was properly filed at Hoshangabad. Mukundsa appealed. In appeal it was held that the suit should have been filed at Burhanpur ; the decree of the lower Court was set aside and the plaint was returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court.

The plaintiffs applied for review of this order, on the ground that one of the provisions of S. 21, Civil P. C., had been overlooked, as the question whether there had been a failure of justice had not been considered The Judge who had decided the appeal directed that notice should issue. The successor of that Judge granted the application and directed that the appeal should be heard again, first with regard to the question whether there had been a failure of justice, and later if necessary on the merits. A defendant has appealed to this Court.

The respondents put in a preliminary objection to this appeal. Mr. Gokhale points out that under O 47, R. 7, Civil P C, an order granting an application for review may be objected to by an appeal on certain grounds and that the present appeal is not based on any of these grounds. He cites Sundar v. Habib Chik (1) and Munnu Lal v. Kunj Bihari Lal (2). Mr. Sen for the appellant points out that an appeal from an order granting an application for review is given by O. 43 R 1 (w), Sch 1, Civil P C. O 47, R. 7, does not state that no appeal shall lie on any of the grounds mentioned in that order The position, therefore, is that O. 47, R. 7, authorizes an appeal on certain grounds and O 43 R. 1 (w) authorizes an appeal on any ground.

The provisions of O. 47, R 7, have been reproduced from the former Code : O. 43, R 1 (w) is new. It seems clear that the existence of O. 47, R. 7 must have escaped notice when it was decided to insert O. 43, R 1 (w). I agree with the reasoning in Daso Keshav v. Karbasappa (3) and hold that O. 43, R 1 (w), enables a party to appeal on grounds other than those mentioned in O. 47 R. 7 since there is nothing in the Code which expressly limits the grounds of an appeal under O. 43 R. 1 (w) I hold, therefore, that an appeal lies.

The first argument in appeal is that the Judge who tried the first appeal may have considered the question whether a failure of justice took place. I think the absence of any reference to this question in the appellate order and the fact that the same Judge when an application for review was filed issued notice justify the inference that the point escaped the Judge's attention

It is next urged that the omission to consider the effect of S. 21, Civil P C, is a mere mistake of law and not a ground for review. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (4) held that the words " any other sufficient reason" in R. 1, O 47, mean

" a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously."

I have, therefore, to decide whether the failure to notice the provisions of S. 21, Civil P. C., bore an analogy to a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. In the case with which their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing the Court which granted the review had dealt on the merits with a judgment brought before it under the Code for review, treating the view of the law taken by the Judges who had decided the appeal as a matter that was open to them as if on an appeal, and coming to the conclusion that the previous decision of the case had proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law. It is obvious that the reason for which the review was granted was in that case not analogous to a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record.

The case I am considering is very different. Clearly the order of remand is defective : it omits all mention of failure of justice whereas S. 21, Civil P. C., clearly prohibits the passing of the order unless it is found that a failure of justice occurred. The omission is apparent if S 21 is known or is consulted. If the omission is not a mistake apparent on the face of the record, it is something analogous to it.

The lower Court was entitled to entertain the application for review. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed. Costs on appellant, counsel's fees Rs. 40.

Judgment—This appeal was filed by Nandoo on 19th September 1927 and was fixed for hearing parties on 14th December 1928. The appellant Nandoo died on 8th August 1928, leaving behind sons and grandsons of predeceased sons but no application on their behalf was made within 90 days the period prescribed by law, for bringing the legal representatives of the deceased appellant on record, and accordingly the appeal abated so far as the deceased appellant was concerned. The legal representatives of a deceased appellant can apply within 60 days from the date of abatement to set aside the dismissal and if it is proved that they were prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the appeal, the Court shall set aside the abatement upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit. In this case, three out of thirteen legal representatives filed an application on 12th December 1928, stating:

"that they were not aware that an application for substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased appellant had to be made within 3 months of his death" and prayed that, in the circumstances, the delay in making the application be condoned. In short, the applicants plead ignorance of law, and put forward this ignorance of law as sufficient cause for not making the application earlier.

The learned pleader for the applicants argued that the mistake was bona fide and was not due to wilful negligence and cited Hero Chunder v Surnamoyi (1) The learned pleader for the respondent cited Sitaram Paraji v. Nimba Harishet (2) and Bechi v. Ahsanullah Khan (3), and argued that ignorance of law cannot be considered sufficient cause for extending time. In the case reported in Huro Chunder Roy v. Surnamoyi (1), the appeal was filed late, because the appellant was under the impression that the appeal would lie to the High Court, while, as a matter of fact, on account of the reduction of the claim from 18,000 to 5,000 by the Court of first instance, the appeal could not lie to the High Court but to the Court of District Judge. There was thus a mistake of fact as well as a mistake of law in that case. The case is not on all fours with the present case and therefore is not applicable. West and Birdwood, JJ, held in Sitaram Paraji v. Nimba Valad Harishet (2). that:

"mere ignorance of law cannot be recognized as a sufficient reason for delay under S. 5, Lim. Act.

The same point was considered by Mahmood, J. in Bechi v. Ahsanullah Khan (3) and he made the following observation in that case:

"A bare mistake of law is not a sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, Lim. Act, for extending the period of limitation."

The statutes of limitation are intended to check the tendency which litigants have of dilatoriness and such statutes must have strict operation. Ignorance of law cannot be sufficient excuse for not filing the application in time and, therefore, the abatement cannot be set aside The application is rejected I allow Rs. 10 as costs which will be paid to the respondent by the applicants.

Order.—This is a petition by the defendants under S. 110, Civil P. C, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree passed by this Court in First Appeal No. 49 of 1926, directing the specific enforcement of the contract which the defendants had made to reconvey and deliver into plaintiff's possession certain property, and also payment of monetary compensation. The first Court had refused to grant the relief of specific performance of the contract, and had granted him the alternative monetary relief by way of damages. The plaintiff came up in appeal to this Court, and succeeded in obtaining the appropriate decree. The defendant-appellants now urge that the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C, and that they should be granted the necessary certificate. The plaintiff on the other hand, contends that it does not, and that the certificate should be refused. Therefore the question to be considered is whether this is a case which fulfils the requirements of either Cl. 1 or Cl 2, S 110 of the Code As the decision of this Court is not an affirming decision we need not consider the applicability of Cl. 3 of the said section.

It has to be borne in mind that, whereas, Cl 1 of the said section makes reference to the value of the 'subject-matter of the suit' and also of the 'subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council,' the second looks only to the value of 'property' to or respecting which some claim or question is involved in the decree appealed against. It will thus be seen that in a case coming under Cl. (1), S. 110, Civil P. C, the conjunction 'and' is very important. Both the values must be looked to. The word 'and' cannot be read as 'or': cf. Molichand v. Gunga Pershad (1). So that, besides the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance at the date of the institution of the suit, the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council at the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made must, as held in Gooroopersad v. Juygut Chunder (2) and Sahu Ram Kumar v. Muhammad Yakub (3), be taken into consideration. On the other hand, in a case coming under Cl (2) of the said section the value of the property referred to in it must be determined with reference to the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made : cf. Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakravarti (4) and Raoji Bhaikaji v. Laxmibai (5). Cl 2 which is the alternative to the whole of the requirements of Cl. 1 does not take into account the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, as it existed at the date of the suit; the same is necessary only for the purposes of Cl. 1. Moreover, the words "subject-matter" and "property" used in the two clauses cannot, for obvious reasons, be treated as synonymous terms referring to the property in dispute in the suit or appeal. The absence of the words "in suit" or "in dispute" after the word "property" in Cl. 1 suggests the inference that the word "property" is used there with a view to indicate property not in suit or dispute, which may be, directly or indirectly, involved : cf. Udoychand Pannalal v. Guzdar & Co. (6).

The first question to be considered is whether the case fulfils the requirements of Cl. 1 of the said section As already observed, for the purposes of this clause, two things are material : (1) the value of the subject-matter of the suit at the date of its institution ; and (2) the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council at the date of this Court's decree. In connexion with the first value, our attention is drawn by the applicants to the valuation as given by plaintiff (non-applicant) in para. 10 read in conjunction with para. 13 of his plaint ; and with regard to the second to the account as made by this Court in para 29 of its judgment in first appeal No. 49 of 1926 Both these are reproduced in an annexure to this petition marked statement A for ready reference They also refer to their own valuation as given in their affidavit.

A reference to para. 1 of the judgment of the first Court will show how the plaintiff's claim was laid in the plaint. He wanted a decree directing the defendants to specifically perform the contract of sale by executing a sale-deed and delivering possession of the land and buildings to him and also to pay him Rs. 2,930.

(6) A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 159=52 Cal. 650=52 I. A. 207 (P.C.).

The following account will show how this amount was arrived at :

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Value of entire concern | Rs. | 52,000-0-0 |
| Deduct value of entire machinery and value of moveables | ,, | 44,111-0-0 |
| | ,, | 1,819-0-0 |
| Total | Rs. | 45,930-0-0 |
| The net value of land and buildings | Rs. | 6,070-0-0 |
| Price of machinery and moveables payable to plaintiff for his ¼th share | Rs. | 11,482-8-0 |
| Price payable by plaintiff to defendant for ¾th share of land and buildings | ,, | 4,552-8-0 |
| | Rs. | 6,930-0 0 |
| Deduct earnest money received | ,, | 4,000-0-0 |
| Balance | Rs. | 2,930-0 0 |

It will thus be seen that the value as put by the plaintiff on the main relief of specific performance of the contract of resale with a stipulational for possession, was Rs 4,552-8-0 and the additional monetary relief he claimed was Rs 2,930, their total being Rs 7,482-8-0 : see items 1 and 2 in Part 2 of the annexure marked statement A to the petition. But in case it were held that he was not entitled to specifically enforce the contract and obtain possession, he asked that a decree awarding him the following alternative relief may be passed

|---|---|
| Rs. 7,482-8-0 | For money due to him, made up of Rs 4,552-8-0 and Rs, 2,930 |
| ,, 751-7-0 | as his share of profits |
| ,, 1,100-0-0 | as damages |
| ,, 1,517-8-0 | As the price of his own ¼th share of land and buildings which in that case might be retained by defendants |
| Rs. 10,851-7-0 | Total |

In para. 10 of the plaint the plaintiff distinctly stated that, as the value of the subject-matter of his suit so far as he claimed the specific enforcement of the contract of resale and the monetary relief

(which together amounted to Rs. 7,482-8-0) was less than the value of the alternative relief regarding the return of his ¼th share of land and buildings and the monetary claim, (which together amounted to Rs 10,851-7-0), he valued the relief for purposes of Court-fees and jurisdiction and paid Court-fee on the higher of the two alternative reliefs, viz., on Rs. 10,851-7-0. The contention advanced in one of the grounds of the petition, that the aggregate of the two reliefs determines the value of the subject-matter of the suit and that S. 17, Court-fees Act applies to such a case, has not been very wisely pressed at the hearing. It is altogether untenable. If, for purposes of S. 110, Civil P. C., the words "value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance" are taken as refering only to the main relief of specific performance of the contract of resale and the monetary claim, then, the value must be taken to be Rs. 7,482-8-0 (4,552-8-0 + 2,930) only, or at the most at Rs 9,000 ( 6,070 + 2,930 ) if the value of the whole 16 annas of land and buildings taken in place of ¾ths. If the value of the subject-matter of the suit is to be preferably determined with reference to the higher alternative relief only, then we think, Rs. 10,851-7-0 will represent that value But, even then, this alone will not serve the applicants's purpose, as besides it the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council with reference to the date of the decree of this Court has also to be taken into account for purposes of Cl. 1 as the use of the conjunction "and" shows. This must necessarily refer to the relief granted by the decree of this Court by which the applicants are aggrieved and which they wish to dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council. We must, therefore, ascertain the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The Court held the plaintiff entitled to the main relief of specific enforcement of the contract to reconvey and deliver possession, which was valued in the plaint at Rs. 4,552-8-0, namely, at ¾ths of Rs. 6,070 the total value of the land and buildings payable under the contract of resale. But according to this Court the plaintiff was liable to pay to defendants Rs. 5,916-12-0, as representing the ¾th share of Rs. 7,889, which it fixed as the total value of the land and buildings to be reconveyed instead of Rs. 6,070: so, this sum of Rs. 5,916-12-0 set out to represent the value of the first relief by the decree, namely, the specific enforcement of the contract of resale and possession of ¾th share of land and buildings. The value of the second relief, namely, of possession of the remaining ¼th share of the land and buildings granted by this Court's decree, as set forth in the plaint is Rs. 1,517-8-0, but on this Court's calculation it would be Rs. 1,972-4-0 (¼ of 7889). Adding to these two values, (i. e., Rs. 5,452-8-0 + Rs. 1,517-8-0 or Rs. 5,916-12-0 + Rs 1,972-4-0) Rs. 1,566 on account of monetary relief decreed in this Court, the total value of these reliefs granted by the decree of this Court would come to Rs. 7,636 or Rs. 9,455. From these calculations, we have left out the interest which this Court allowed from the date of the suit upto the date of its decree in the exercise of its discretion. The value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council exclusive of such interest falls short of Rs 10,000. Thus the second requirement of the first clause is not fulfilled. It will thus be seen that it is only if the interest, which works out at Rs 750, is included, that the said value may exceed Rs 10,000. But in the absence of any express or direct authority of a Privy Council decision to that effect, we do not feel ourselves justified in including in such value the amount of interest which a Court may allow in the exercise of its discretion but which is not claimable as of right: cf. Sahu Ram Kumar v. Muhammad Yakub (3).

The applicants, however, contend that the value of the land and buildings at the date of the decree of this Court was Rs 15,000 and have filed an affidavit in support of their assertion. The non-applicant disputes this valuation and urges that it is unnecessary to go into the question of the value of the property, as the suit is one for specific performance of the contract to resell and deliver possession and the value of the subject-matter of such a suit is determined not by any artificial rule as to valuation adopted for the purposes of Court-fees or jurisdiction, but by reference to the price of consideration actually payable under the contract of sale, as S. 7, Cl. 10 (a), Court-fees Act, would show. The consideration being the price of the property must, it is urged be treated as its value. We accept this contention. Since the consideration for the sale determines the value of the subject-matter of the suit for purposes of both Court-fees and jurisdiction in view of S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, we think, the consideration or price payable under the contract of sale must alone determine the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council. In this view of the case Rs. 5,916-12-0 would represent such value In a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale as here, where, the relief of possession is claimed, as flowing from, and not independently of, the relief of conveyance of title, we think, the suit must be regarded as substantially one for specific performance, and as such governed by S. 7 (10), Court-fees Act, and the relief for possession must be treated only as a relief ancillary or leading to the substantial relief of specific performance. Where, however, the possessory relief is claimed as a relief independent of the contract, not flowing from the grant of the relief of specific performance of such contract, the reliefs of specific performance and possession would in that case have to be separately valued, and their aggregate value would have to be considered as the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal. But as we have held that the present suit was one for obtaining the main relief of specific performance of the contract of sale, and the relief of possession is regarded as an ancillary relief flowing from the main relief, we think there is no need to order any investigation in regard to the market value of the land and buildings, at the date of this Court's decree. It will thus be seen that the case does not fulfil both the requirements of Cl (1), S 110, Civil P. C.

The applicants next invite us to apply Cl 2 to this case, as they urge that in carrying out the directions of this Court's decree, they will have to remove the new machinery, which they say, they had brought upon the premises subsequent to the institution of the suit and which according to them is worth Rs. 60,000, as alleged in para. 4 of their application for stay dated 10th October 1927, and their affidavit dated 8th October 1927 (in file B of First Appeal No. 49 of 1926 dated 12th September 1927). We find it stated in the judgment in First Appeal that the machinery, which was purchased by the defendants from plaintiff and his partners, as per first contract in suit, for Rs. 44,111, had already been removed by them to Sanawad; if, as they say, they thereafter brought any other new machinery on the premises during the pendency of the suit, of which absolutely no mention is to be found in the pleadings or in evidence or even at the stage of arguments in appeal, they must be deemed to have done so at their own risk; and we think, that, in law, they cannot make that an excuse for urging that the decree of this Court, directly or indirectly, involves, a claim or question, to, or, respecting, property namely, the new machinery of the value of Rs 10,000 and upwards. We are referred to the decision of another Bench of this Court in Miscellaneous Petition No. 58 of 1927 in this connexion, but it is not clear from that decision that the superstructure standing on the plots in dispute there was property brought upon the premises during the pedency of the litigation as in the present case. We, therefore, think that that decision does not help the applicants In this view of the case it is unnecessary to take into consideration and determine the value, of the new machinery said to be involved, at the date of this Court's decree, or, the costs of its removal. We, therefore, hold that the present case does not fall under Cl. (2), S. 110, Civil P C., as well.

The application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council being thus untenable, we refuse to grant the certificate of fitness under S. 110, Civil P. C We accordingly reject the petition with costs. Councel's fee Rs. 50

Second Appeal No. 72-B of 1927, Decided on 11th September 1928, from decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 24th January 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 236 of 1926.

(a) Decree—Validity of — Mortgagee abandoning his claim against one mortgagor—His name retained on record and decree passed against him also—Decree is not binding on that mortgagor.

A voluntary and unqualified abandonment by a mortgagee of his claim against one of the mortgagors operates as unqualified dismissal of his suit so far as that mortgagor's interest is concerned although his name is retained on the record and the decree is passed as against him also. The mortgage should be deemed to have been wiped out of existence as against that mortgagor's interest. [P 80 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 115—Scope.

Where a person has successfully opposed an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., on the ground that that section did not apply, he cannot subsequently raise a plea in a suit brought by the applicant that the suit was barred by S. 47. [P 80 C 2]

D. W. Kathalay and M. R. Bobde—for Appellant

G. R. Pradhan—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendant who is an assignee of a mortgage-decree dated 6th January 1922 passed on the basis of a mortgage dated 29th March 1906 Ex. P-1 in mortgage suit No. 28 of 1921 brought by the legal representatives of the original mortgagee Sukhdeo against the legal representative of the original mortgagor, Gangaram and Devsing and Balaram The preliminary decree which was passed, was based on a compromise effected As the result thereof the present plaintiffs were exonerated from the decree and the then plaintiffs were content with accepting a decree for foreclosure against Balaram and Sheoram The property in suit was mentioned in the decree as foreclosed and the then plaintiffs obtained a final decree and foreclosed and got possession of the field with standing crops on 14th October 1923. Hence this suit by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the fields No. 21/4 with crops on the ground that the defendant had no right to the same under the decree assigned to him.

The defence was that the plaintiffs though discharged were retained on the record, and that the decree was made absolute against them as well and that the suit was barred by S. 47, Civil P. C. The first Court held the suit not barred and passed a decree in plaintiff's favour for possession and crops worth Rs 400. The defendant's appeal was dismissed by the Additional District Judge, Akola. Hence he appeals. I think the appeal must fail. In spite of the fact that the present plaintiff's father Gangaram was one of the mortgagors of the field in suit, the then plaintiff's elected to obtain a decree against the other mortgagors and voluntarily abandoned their right to obtain a decree, binding the interest of the present plaintiffs, who were defendants to the former suit. This was a voluntary and unqualified abandonment of their claim which must operate as an unqualified dismissal of that suit so as to bar a second suit by them on the same cause of action. If the suit having been thus dismissed, the then plaintiffs attempted to dispossess the present plaintiffs from possession of property belonging to them the latter is entitled to show that they have acquired immunity from all further claim based on the mortgage The defendant cannot urge that he has a right to retain possession of the land until the plaintiffs offer to redeem him. So far as the plaintiffs are concerned the mortgage must be deemed to have been wiped out of existence. I think the Additional District Judge was right in holding that the defendant could not take up inconsistent position and urge the defence of bar of S. 47, Civil P. C., as when the plaintiffs came in under that section he successfully maintained that that section did not apply and the remedy was by regular suit. The defendant cannot blow hot and cold in the same breath as it were.

The sole question on which the plaintiff's heir therefore depended was that they were owners of the field in suit It is clear from the documentary evidence on record that the field in suit was the exclusive property of Gangaram and after him of his sons of the plaintiffs by virtue of a partition. The defendant's predecessor or for the matter of that, the defendant acquired no interest in the property in suit by virtue of the foreclosure decree as his judgment-debtor has ceased already to have any interest in the property. The appeal must therefore fail with costs to be paid by the appellant who will bear his own.

S K Ghosh—for Appellants

W. B. Pendharkar—for Respondents

Judgment—The right of parsaipan in Nimar is held by the Court of first appeal to be transferable but its operation was limited to the lifetime of the transferrer on the analogy of the right of joshipan in Berar on the authority of Rajaram v. Waman (1). I think, the lower Court erred in extending the analogy of the right of joshipan in Berar to this right To the joshipan watan referred to in Rajaram v. Waman (1) case certain property was attached This one circumstance distinguishes that case from the present one. Here there is no such thing. The lower appellate Court ought to have held that the right to parsaipan was similar to the pala or turn of worship at a temple That a right to pala or turn of worship is not immovable property but is moveable property has been established in Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (2) and Jato Kar v Makund Deb (3) cited with approval in Narasingha v. Prolhodman (4). In view of these recent decisions I do not think the view to the contrary effect that the right to officiate as a president at funeral ceremonies of Hindus is in the nature of immovable property can be held to be saved.

In Sukhlal v. Bishambhar (5) it was held that there is nothing in the law to prevent a Mahabrahmin mortgaging his right to offerings recoverable by him in his personal capacity. The Mahabrahmins are members of a sect which perform certain ceremonies and duties at funerals of Hindus It was remarked at p. 199 that the offerings at a temple do not stand on the same basis as remuneration which Mahabrahmins receive for the services they perform at Hindu funerals. The S. 6, T P. Act, was quoted in support of an argument that the so-called right was at least a mere possibilty within the meaning of Cl. (a) of that section and that the mere possibility was incapable of being transferred. Before me reliance is placed by the respondents on the case of Puncha Thakur v. Bindeshwari Thakur (6) and it is argued that the chance that future worshippers will give offerings is a mere possiblility and as such it cannot be transferred. The argument is that no man can compel another to make voluntary offerings, and as offerings are made to a deity of which the image is its visual symbol and their appropriation by the officiating priest is not a right in which he is entitled to traffic. But as pointed out in Sukhlal v Bishambhar (5) at p. 198 where the remuneration is received for certain duties and the amount largely depends upon the surrounding circumstances, the generosity of the person getting the duties and services performed at the funeral and very probably the wealth and position of the deceased, the offering could not be called purely voluntary No doubt there is no obligation on any person to employ any particular Mahabrahmin No Mahabrahmin could bring a suit to compel any person carrying out the funeral to employ him and it is probable that in the absence of a special agreement a Mahabrahmin could not bring a suit against another Mahabrahmin for fees received. This shows that the right to receive remuneration or fees for the performance of certain services as a parsai is not "a mere possibility" and can be the subject of transfer. If it is property of a transferable nature, and is moveable property the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, has no application to its transfer.

The next question is whether it is transferable beyond the lifetime of the transferrer. This question is well discussed in Mancharam v Pran Shankar (7) where it was held that that such rights are heritable, partiable and even transferable. Alienation by divided member of a Hindu family to his relations of the right of worshipping a goddess and receiving a share of the offering was upheld, on the principle that the purchasers were persons standing in the line of succession In that case the purchaser was not the next heir but only a possible heir. This condition is duly fulfilled in this case by the appellant who besides being a relation and a possible heir is a holder of an 8 as share in the parsaipan in his own right and has his own turn by rotation ef enjoying the remuneration "fees payable for the services to be rendered." In view of the existence of the special agreement as to enjoyment of their rights by rotation, I think the present appellant had every right to acquire the rights of the deceased Nana by the transfer dated 21st February 1921 and to sue the defendants for their obstruction to the exercise of his rights to realize the fees which were wrongfully received by them, in so far as they related to the 4 as. share purchased by him from Nana. The death of Nana could not put an end to the right of the transferee The plaintiff had therefore every right to maintain the suit. For all these reasons I hold that the lower appellate Court's decree dismissing the suit should be reversed and that of the first Court decreeing the claim to the extent it did, restored with proportionate costs in all the three Courts to be paid by the defendants who will bear their own.

Misc. Appeal No. 22-B of 1928, Decided on 1st November 1928, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 13th April 1928, in execution case arising out of Civil Suit No 1 of 1926, D/- 4th February 1926.

 Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 57 — Execution proceedings struck off after attachment at instance of decree-holder—Attachment is ended in spite of contrary direction.

An executing Court passed the following order. Decree-holder by pleader. Judgment-debtor absent. Case struck off as infructuous at decree-holder's instance. Costs on judgment-debtor. Property to continue under attachment.

Held, that the order passed cannot possibly be interpreted as an order adjourning the proceedings to a future date in spite of the erroneous direction that the property should continue under attachment. The attachment is at an end and it must be held to be an order dismissing the application. 41 All. 157 Foll.; A. I. R. 1922 All. 62, Dist. [P 82 C 2]

M. B. Niyogi—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The point which I have to decide is whether the attachment of certain property subsisted after the executing Court had passed an order on the following terms:

"19th February 1927. Decree-holder by Mr. Shembeker. Judgment-debtor absent Case struck off as infructuous. Costs on judgment-debtor. Property to continue under attachment."

In Dildar Husain v Sheo Narain (1) Richards, C. J, and Tudball, J. decided that the effect of an order in very similar terms was that the attachment came to an end. I agree with the reasoning contained in this report. When a decree-holder does not desire to proceed with an application for execution, the Court under O 21, R, 57, Sch. 1, Civil P. C must either (1) dismiss the application, with the result that the attachment ceases or (2) for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. The order passed in this case, cannot possibly be interpreted as an order adjourning the proceedings to a future date in spite of the erroneous direction that the property should continue under attachment. It must be held to be an order dismissing the application. In Muhammad Mubarak Husain v. Sahu Bimal Prasad (2) the order was to the effect that the execution case should, for the time being, be dismissed but the attachment should remain in force. It may well be that an order in those terms though not a proper order, bears a closer relation to an order adjourning the proceedings to a future date than it does to an order finally dismissing the application The learned Judges, who held that the order which they were considering did not cause the attachment to cease, based their decision on the word "filhal", for the time being, in the order.

I therefore find that the effect of the order in the present case was that the attachment ceased The appeal before me is, therefore, dismissed without notice to the respondents

A settlement entry itself is no evidence of title. Where, therefore, a land has been given by family arrangement to a certain person for maintenance muafi khairati, a note by the Settlement Officer in the wajib-ul-arz, during the lifetime of such person that the land will be according to the condition of wajib-ul-arz until the village is held by the then malguzar or his descendants, does not prove that a perpetual rent-free grant was made and the landlord is entitled to recover rent from the heirs of the person. 13 *N. Judgment.—This second appeal is with regard to a suit brought for arrears of rent of certain land. The contention was, that the defendant-appellants were entitled to hold that land free of rent That, however, has been held against them in both the lower Courts, and they have now preferred a second appeal. Admittedly the plaintiff-respondent is the malguzar of the village and the appellants are in possession of the land for which the rent is claimed. Appellants, however, contend that this land is muafi khairati, and they are entitled to hold it free of rent. It is admitted that the village belonged to one Kalu Patel, that on his death there appears to have been some agreement or settlement between one Hamir Singh and Rajo Patelan, the widow of Kalu, and Jasodi, the daughter of Kalu. Mutation of the village was effected in the name of Hamir Singh in that year and according to the agreement fields Nos. 20 and 22, of an area of 20.25 acres, in the village were granted to the daughter, Jasodi, for her maintenance as muafi khairati The plaintiff's case was that the grant was only for the life of Jasodi, whilst the appellants contended that it was a grant free of rent to Jasodi and her descendants for as long as the malguzari remained in the family of the plaintiff.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the lower Courts is correct, and the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to demand rent from the appellants. There is no justification for the plea put forward by the appellants that their mother Jasodi was entitled to succeed to her father as his daughter nor has evidence on that point been adduced. Similarly, there is no evidence for the alleged family arrangement and no witnesses have been examined. A reference was made to the recent ruling in Sidh Gopal v. Bihari-lal (1), about family arrangement, but in any case a family arrangement must be proved as well as pleaded, and it cannot be presumed in the absence of any evidence

It may be noted that the first ground in the memorandum of appeal was admitted in argument to be a mistake and was given up. The argument put forward, however, was that the muafi khairati was to continue as long as the malguzari remained in the plaintiff's family Reliance was placed on Ex P-6 which is a copy of an order in a revenue case in the Court of the Settlement Officer and on Ex D-3 which is a copy of the wajib ul-arz in which there is a note made by the Assistant Settlement Officer I do not think, however, that either of these documents by themselves support the appellants' case In Ex P-6 it is simply stated that unless the malguzars recover rent actually through the Court or even privately the muafi khairati tenure cannot be extinguished and the attestation entry will therefore stand but this is surely what the plaintiff has done in the present case. In Ex. D-3 there is a note by the Assistant Settlement Officer that the land will be continued to be according to the condition of the wajib-ul-arz until the village is held by the present malguzar and his legal descendants On the other hand, this is a note by the Assistant Settlement Officer, and cannot by itself confer any title. A settlement entry itself is no evidence of title and at the time when that note was made Jasodi was still alive The question of title was, therefore, not decided by the Settlement Officer nor, in fact, was it to be decided, and the entry of muafi khairati was repeated from former papers as it was not shown to be incorrect Nor do I think the ruling in Ramprasad v. Mt Jagoti (2), will really support the appellants, because in that case the order of the Settlement Officer clearly stated that the petitioner should be recorded in the wajib-ul-arz as a privileged occupancy tenant holding rent-free in lieu of haq in the village income. In the present case there is no such entry nor has it been held that there was any such haq. On the appellants' own showing the muafi khairati was only granted as a family arrangement and that arrangement was to hold good during the lifetime of Jasodi. I agree with the lower Courts that there are no grounds for holding that a perpetual rent-free grant was made.

(2) [1917] 13 N. L. R. 179=42 I. C. 292.

In that case, then, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to recover rent and the lower Courts rightly followed the ruling in Tikaram v. Budhu (3). I am of opinion that the matter has been correctly decided. There is no force in appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs

Tukaram—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Ref. No 235 of 1928, Decided on 11th September 1928, made by Addl. Session Judge, Nagpur, on 14th June 1928, in Sessions Trial No. 8 of 1928

 (a) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Jury unanimously returning verdict of not guilty—Judge disagreeing—He must ask jury to give reasons for disbelieving prosecution evidence for High Court's information.

Where a jury returns a unanimous verdict of not guilty against the accused and the Judge is of opinion that the verdict of the jury is manifestly wrong, he ought to ask the jury to state their reasons for disbelieving the prosecution evidence, and ought to record it for the information of the High Court. [P 85 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Scope.

Criminal Procedure Code does not put the opinion of the jury on any higher plane than the opinion of the Judge, and both should be given due weight . A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 732, Foll. [P 85 C 2]

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Jems—for Non-Applicant.

Judgment.—This is the case of Tukaram Patil, which has been referred to this Court, under S 307, Criminal P. C., by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Nagpur. Tukaram was tried on two charges, one under S 147, I. P. C., and the other under S 307/149, I. P. C. The jury unanimously found him not guilty under both the sections. Besides Tukaram, there were 27 other persons who were also tried on the same charges, for which Tukaram was tried. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty against 16 accused. The learned Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury against 27 accused and disagreed with the jury, so far as their verdict against Tukaram was concerned. He was of opinion that Tukaram was guilty under S. 147 and 325/149, I. P. C.

This case has been referred to this Court, under S. 307, Criminal P. C., and in dealing with the case, I have to keep in view, sub-S. (3), S. 307, Criminal P. C., which runs as follows :

"In dealing with the case so submitted, the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinion, of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it, and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session."

The terms of the section are fairly clear. This Court is first called upon to consider the entire evidence, and then give due weight to the opinion of the Session Judge and to the opinion of the jury I must therefore consider the entire evidence first. (Here the judgment discussing the evidence concludes). Tukaram's presence at the scene of the occurrrence has been satisfactorily proved. He was a member of the unlawful assembly, which came from Khairi to Marajghat bridge and assaulted the ten persons who received injuries. The assailants were armed with lathis and guns, which were used. Grievous hurt was caused to Sadoo and Sitrya The members of the unlawful assembly knew it to be likely that grievous hurt will be caused Tukaram has thus committed the offences under Ss 147 and 325 read with S. 149, I. P. C

In a case of this sort, where a jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty against the accused and the Additional Sessions Judge was of opinion that the verdict of the jury was manifestly wrong, he ought to have asked the jury to state their reasons for disbelieving the prosecution evidence, and ought to have recorded it, for the information of this Court The reasons, most probably were the same or similar, as were urged before me, by the learned counsel for the appellant. The point of view from which reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C should be considered by the High Court has been the subject of numerous judicial decisions and the learned counsel for Tukaram cited Emperor v. Kankaya (1), Emperor v. Dhananjoy Raha (2), and Emperor v. Akbar Moola (3). These cases lay down rules of guidance, which may be followed in deciding references under S. 307, Criminal P. C., but the law on the point is very clear and explicit, as laid down in S. 307 (3), Criminal P. C. As pointed out by Cuming and Gregory, JJ., in Emperor v Ram Chandra Roy (4), "the Code would not seem to put the opinion of the jury on any higher plane than the opinion of the Judge, and both should be given due weight."

The jurors accepted the prosecution story regarding the riot and rejected the defence version about it, by giving a verdict of guilty against 16 persons. There was overwhelming evidence on record finding conclusively the presence of Tukaram with the rioters, and, therefore, no other conclusion was possible except that he was also guilty. The verdict of the jury was not only manifestly wrong but perverse.

I have considered the entire evidence and have given due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the jury, and find that Tukaram is guilty, under S. 147, and under S. 325 read with S. 149, I. P. C. In view of the serious nature of the offence, and also taking into consideration th fact e that Tukaram is a respectable man, who had to bear the anxiety and worry of a protracted criminal trial, I sentence Tukaram to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 2,500, and in default of payment of fine, to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for three months, for each offence. The sentence of imprisonment shall run concurrently The accused must surrender to his bail to serve out the sentence.

FINDLAY, J C.

S. R Pandit—Applicant.

W. R. Pandit—Non-Applicant

Misc. Petn. No 7 of 1928, Decided on 28th April 1928, for leave to appeal to Privy Council from decree of Findlay, J. C , in First Appeal No 64 of 1926.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 110—Claim in suit for less than Rs. 10,000—Findings on questions relating to other property valued at more than Rs. 10,000 recorded but not necessary for decision of suit — Subject-matter of suit is not more than Rs. 10,000.

Where the real claim in suit is not more than Rs. 10,000, the mere fact that the Court has recorded findings on other questions relating to other property worth more than Rs. 10,000, not at all necessary for the decision of the suit, does not make the subject-matter of the suit, worth more than Rs. 10,000. [P 86 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 110 — Trifling account adjustments made—Judgment agreeing with findings of the Court below—Judgment is an affirming one

Where some trifling account adjustments are made in the matter of interest and the like, but the judgment on all essential points agrees with the findings of the Court below on the merits, the judgment must be treated as an affirming one: *A. R. N. Padhye—for Applicant

H. S. Gour, and A. D. Mande — for Non-applicant

Order.—The applicant desires leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council against the judgment and decree of Findlay, J. C, dated 8th October 1927 in first Appeal No 64 of 1926.

It is necessary here to repeat the facts of the last-mentioned case As is apparent from the judgment, the suit was one for village profits for three years by a recorded cosharer of mouza Dhaba against the present applicant who was the duly recorded lambardar As is apparent from para. 7 of Findlay, J. C's judgment the case for the village profits, as it was, could have been decided purely on the question of whether these profits were due or not due, the parties admittedly being the recorded cosharers and the present defendant-applicant being the lambardar The Judge of the first Court had, however, recorded findings on many other questions concerning the whole family property and in para. 7 of his judgment Findlay, J. C., also considered these matters in the hope that the said findings might restrict. If not prevent, further litigation between the parties At the same time, the judgment in question made it clear that these findings were not, in reality, necessary for the decision of the suit which was in essence and in reality, purely one for three years' profits of the village in question.

In the present application, it has first of all been urged that the subject-matter of the present suit is Rs 10,000 or upwards. That is, in our opinion, an impossible contention on the record as it stands For this purpose we must only have regard to the amount of village profits claimed in the plaint and this amount was admittedly below Rs. 10,000.

It has next been urged that, in any event, the decree or final order involves, directly or indirectly, property worth Rs. 10,000 or over, and we have been referred to the decision in Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (1) in this connexion. Even if we accept that decision as correct exposition of the law, it is obvious that, for the reason above mentioned, findings given on the questions of reunion, the alleged will by the father of of the parties, the family settlement and the like were not in reality, essential for the decision of the suit in question. From this point of view, therefore, it cannot be said that the decree or final order necessarily involves a claim or question relating to property worth Rs 10,000 or over The remaining property belonging to the family is, in reality, not involved at all in the present suit which was tried in a Court of Subordinate Judge with a jurisdiction limited to Rs 10,000 only It is not in dispute that the value of the estate or even of the share which either party to this proceeding may lay claim to would be worth more than Rs. 10,000 Therefore, in our opinion, it cannot be said that the decision of the case by this Court in any way, necessarily involves the remaining question of the property

It has even been urged in this Court that the value of the two anna eight pie share of mouza Dhaba would be worth more than Rs. 10,000. This contention is an utterly impossible one on the pleadings and evidence on record and requires no serious discussion

(1) [1913] 35 All. 445=21 I. C. 617=11 A. L. J. 654.

The next contention urged is that the decision of this Court was not an affirming one. We are also unable to accept this contention. It is true that Findlay, J. C, made some trifling account adjustments in the matter of interest and the like, but the judgment, on all essential points, agreed with the findings of the Court below on the merits and, in our opinion, the present judgment must, therefore, be treated as an affirming one. We are aware of the decision in Bhagwan Singh v. Allahabad Bank Ltd (2) which so far supports the contention urged on behalf of the applicant, but the present case is, in our opinion, in this connexion much more parallel to the decision of the same High Court in Kamal Nath v Bithal Das (3) The modifications made in the decree in this Court were trifling ones in favour of then appellant and now applicant In any event, however, we are inclined to the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in this connexion : cf Chaitanya Charan v Mohammad Yusuf (4) and Sree Nath Roy Bahadur v. Secretary of State (5) What the applicant desired to do is to appeal to their Lordships against the decision of this Court so far as it affirmed the decision of the first Court This is, in substance, the real motive of the present application and, from this point of view, therefore, the decree of the Court must be held to be an affirming one.

No argument has been offered before to the effect that the case is one which should be certified as a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under S. 109.(c), Civil P C. 1 do not think it necessary to discuss in detail the argument offered as to there being any substantial question of law involved in the present case. It was suggested in this connexion that Findlay, J C, was incorrect in holding that a statutory liability rested upon the applicant as lambardar to keep and render accounts, and the like, but we cannot see that any question of law arises in this connexion in the present case ; only pure questions of facts were, in reality involved.

As regards the arguments that the findings as regards the reunion, the family settlement and the like involve questions of law, we have already pointed out that these questions were, in reality, immaterial in the present suit and, from this point of view, therefore, there cannot be any question of allowing the present application in any such connexion

The grounds given in the application are very largely a pure attempt to contest the various findings of fact arrived at by the Judge of this Court and it is rather unnecessary to consider these grounds. For the above reason we are of opinion that the present application has no sound basis and must be dismissed We order accordingly The applicant must pay the non-applicant's costs. We fix Rs 75 as pleader's fees.

Criminal Revn No. 18 of 1928, Decided on 15th October 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Raipur, D/- 30th November 1927, in Criminal Appeal No 124 of 1927

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Where acquittal is wrong, High Court can order retrial only.

K. V Naidu—for Applicant.

G P. Dick—for Non-Applicant

Order.—This is a revision application filed on behalf of Ramchand Sonar who had filed a complaint in the Court of Mr J L. Mishra. Magistrate 1st Class, Drug, on 7th October 1926, against Chauthmal under S. 500, I P. C. The learned Magistrate, found the offence proved and convicted Chauthmal under S 500, I P. C On appeal, the learned Session Judge held that his assertions made in the Exs. P-1, 2 and 4 were true, that they were defamatory, but the case of the appellant fell under Excep. 10. S. 499, I. P. C and, therefore, acquitted Chauthmal.

There is no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction under S 439, Criminal P. C., to set aside the order of acquittal, but this Court cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction and, therefore, has no alternative, but to order a retrial, in a case, in which this Court is of opinion that the order of acquittal is wrong. It is the settled practice of this Court not to interfere in revision at the instance of a private prosecutor, except in those cases in which the Local Government is not likely to appeal from the order of acquittal, on account of the nature of the offence and the offence of defamation is one of those offences, in which the Local Government is not likely to appeal. This Court, sitting as a Court of revision and, not as an appellate Court, will not go into facts, and as pointed out by Kinkhede, A. J C. in Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan (1) :

" will ordinarily confine its interference to cases of exceptional circumstance or where there is error of law, and it will not interfere with the acquittal unless the error has been illegal or so radically and incurably irregular as in fact to have occasioned a failure of justice".

It was pointed out by Stevens, Offg. J. C., in Empress v. Baiju (2) that " a retrial should only be ordered in cases of acquittal in which the trial has been radically and incurably defective," and this view was accepted as correct by Stanyon, A. J C., in Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan (3) which was a case similar to the one now before this Court. In that case the complainant urged that the Magistrate who tried the case had taken an erroneous view of the law of defamation in that he had held to be privileged a grossly defamatory statement which was not protected by law and there was no suggestion that the trial was vitiated by any illegality or irregularity. Stanyon, A J. C., decided that as the acquittal was challenged upon its merits namely, as being based upon an erroneous view of the law of defamation, this Court as a Court of revision could not and should not if it could, exercise its revisional jurisdiction In this case, if the point urged by the learned advocate for the applicant is accepted as correct, that is, the statement contained in the letters are defamatory and Excep 10 does not apply to the facts of this case, in that case, this Court would be practically converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, and a retrial, if ordered, will not really be a retrial, but a clear direction to the Magistrate, before whom the case will be retried, to convict the accused, after going through the formality of a de novo trial. The word " error of law " can only mean an error in the procedure adopted in the trial of the case and not an error about the interpretation or application of the law, applicable to the case In this case, no illegality or irregularity is alleged and, therefore, this Court, sitting as a Court of revision cannot interfere with the order passed by the Sessions Judge The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Second Appeal No 258-B of 1926, Decided on 25th September 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Yeotmal, D/- 29th March 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 111 of 1925.

Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law—Perpetual tenant though subsequent to 1895 cannot be ejected.

There is nothing to prevent an izardar from giving out fields to tenants permanently and therefore although a perpetual tenant may not actually come within the definition of a permanent tenant, he cannot be ejected from his field. [P 89 C1]

G. L. Subhedar and M. R. Bobde—for Appellants.

W. R. Pendharkar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs are the izardars of mouza Dhotra, taluq Yeotmal, and sue for a declaration that the defendant, who has been recorded a permanent tenant of Survey No. 28 of that village, is not a permanent tenant of that field. They lost the case in both the lower Courts. One Tanba Wanjari and his son, Jhitru got from the plaintiffs a perpetual lease of this field and another, with power to alienate them with the condition that on foreclosure, sale, gift or lease for a period exceeding 12 years, the plaintiffs would be paid 25 per cent of the price to get their sanction for such foreclosure, sale, gift or lease The field in suit was bought by one Yeshwant, and the defendent purchased it from Yeshwant on 17th February 1922. The lower appellate Court holds that, though the defendant may not be a permanent tenant within the meaning of that expression in the Berar Alienated Village Tenancy Law. yet he is nevertheless a perpetual tenant of the field, and has given very good reasons for the conclusion it has come to.

It is obvious that there can be permanent tenants in an izara village not coming within the term as defined by that law, i. e tenants who have not been in possession since 1895. There is nothing to prevent an izardar who owns fields in his izara village from giving out the same to tenants permanently if he likes to do so ; and therefore, it does not necessarily follow that, because a perpetual tenant does not come within the definition of a permanent tenant, of the law, he can be ejected from his field. The case seems to me to have been properly decided and I decline to interfere. I dismiss this appeal with costs. The appellants will pay the respondent's costs.

G. R. Deo—for Applicant

M. B. Niyogi—for Non-applicants.

Order.—The plaintiff whose appeal was dismissed on 12th October 1927 seeks a review of the decision on the ground that this Court should not have refused to adjourn the case when the advocate who was retained to argue it declined to argue it as the balance of fees promised was not paid and the newly engaged pleader said that he was not prepared with facts and law. within the short time at his disposal after his engagement, and also on the ground that this Court declined to permit appellant 2 who was present in person to file a written argument by way of reply to the argument addressed by the respondents. It is urged that besides this there is an error apparent on the face of the record in that when the appellant was not prepared to go on with the arguments this Court ought to have treated that inability being tantamount to appellant's absence, and refrained from hearing any arguments of the respondent and deciding the appeal on the merits but it should have dismissed the appeal for default of appearance as it were. A further contention is raised that some of the phases of the question of limitation raised in the grounds of appeal have not been at all touched by this Court in its judgment.

I am not prepared to uphold any of these contentions. In view of the case in Jhackan Singh v. Uttamchand (1) the mere unpreparedness of the appellant's counsel to argue the appeal is no ground for the Court to dismiss the appeal for default. The failure to offer argument in support of the appeal does not relieve the Court of its obligation to decide the appeal on its merits. I therefore think that the applicants' argument that this Court's procedure of hearing the arguments for the respondent, after having called upon the appellant to say what he had to say in support of their appeal, was fully justified and according to law. Then it is argued that in not permitting the appellant to file a written argument by way of reply this Court has contravened the provisions of R 16, O. 41, Civil P. C. All that the rule compels the Court to do is to hear the argument if any addressed and not to permit written argument It was open to appellant 2 who was personally in attendance to address such verbal arguments as he may have desired. He was not prevented from doing so.

The fact that the Court declined to grant an adjournment prayed for and decided the case can afford no ground for review : cf. Bindu Bashini Roy v Secretary of State (2) As to the contention that this Court's judgment does not state that it considered certain aspects or phases of the question of limitation suffice it to say that it does not mean that they were not considered at all in arriving at the conclusion : cf. Loola v. Pyare (3). At any rate the omission may not be a ground for granting review, just as non-reference to documents in the judgment is no ground for review as held in Raghu Singh v Krishna Dayal Gir (4). I am not satisfied that there is any error apparent on the face of the record or any sufficient cause for granting the review The application is dismissed with costs Pleader's fees Rs 15

Judgment.—It is not contested that the plaintiff and defendant 3 inherited the lands in suit on the death of their father, Ganesh Narayan, defendant 1, had taken a lease of the lands from Ganesh and remained in possession after his lease expired until the plaintiff filed a suit for partition against defendant 3. In that suit a receiver was appointed and Narayan sent a notice to the receiver stating that he was holding under defendant 2, Dharnidhar, who is the appellant in this Court In this suit the plaintiff claims half the lease-money for the year 1922-23, Rs 1,550, together with half the mesne profits for the next two years, from defendants 1 and 2, alleging that they have been colluding in keeping the plaintiff out of possession. In reply Narayan stated that he was a lessee of defendant 2 from whom he had taken the fields annually for the years in suit Defendant 2, Dharnidhar stated that he was joint with his brother Ganesh at the time of his death and that he had all along been in possession of the land in suit since the death of Ganesh The only other plea which I need consider is that the claim for the year 1922-23 was barred by limitation. The trial Judge held that defendants 1 and 2 had combined to keep out the plaintiff on false pleas and both were liable to the plaintiff for full claim. A decree followed on this finding Narayan has not appealed, this appeal being filed by Dharnidhar

It is first urged that in spite of Dharnidhar's allegation in this suit it should be held that he was not in possession of the land in any way during the years to which this suit relates : it was only in 1926 when the receiver was attempting to take possession that he put forward his false claim to the land. It is urged that in the partition suit the plaintiff stated that she was in possession of the land. I hold that this suit must be decided on the pleadings made in it. Until the appellant came to this Court he did not deny that Narayan was in possession of the lands as his tenant. Had he stated in the lower Court that he had done nothing to obstruct the possession of the plaintiff during the years in suit the plaintiff might have adduced evidence to the effect that but for the action of the appellant Narayan would have delivered possession to her. I agree with the finding based on the pleadings of the parties that the appellant and Narayan acting in concert prevented the plaintiff from obtaining possession during the years in suit.

It is next urged that the claim for the year 1922-23 is barred by limitation The plaint merely states that the cause of action accrued on the expiry of the year 1922-23. In an oral statement, dated 16th August 1926, Narayan said that lease-money was generally payable on 1st December of each year and Dharnidhar in a written statement stated that the cause of action for this year arose in December 1922-23. The plaintiff made no specific rejoinder to these replies The trial Court merely stated that the date of action accrued at the end of the agricultural year and quoted S 79, Berar Land Revenue Code, which shows that an annual tenancy expires at the end of an agricultural year It was for the plaintiff to prove that the lease-money did not become due until the tenancy expired I am referred to the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rangayya Appa Rao v. B. Sriramulu (1). Their Lordships only say :

"It has been said, and no doubt rightly, that by the custom of the country agricultural rents are payable at or before the close of the fasli year."

Clearly they referred to a custom in Madras. I am not aware of any custom of this nature in Berar In the Central Provinces dates have been fixed for payment of rent by tenants under S. 61, Ten. Act, and these dates precede the expiry of the agricultural year. So far as my experience goes, it is usual, when land is leased, either to take a payment in advance or to agree that payment should be made soon after the crop is harvested. The plaintiff, then, has failed to show that the claim relating to the year 1922-23 is within time. The suit was filed on 1st March 1926. (The judgment here discusses evidence and holding that the finding that the mesne profits for the subsequent years also was Rs. 2,500 was justified, it proceeds). The appeal contains a ground that interest charged is excessive, but 12 per cent per annum is the usual rate to allow on mesne profits: The amount decreed will, therefore, be altered by excluding mesne profits with interest for the year 1922-23 Costs in this Court will be borne as incurred

Judgment.—The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the first Court, by which the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. The learned District Judge, in dismissing the appeal held that it was permissible in the present case to prove that Mt. Gendibai alone was entitled to recover the amount in deposit under the receipt (P-1), and also dismissed the present plaintiff's appeal. He has now come up to this Court on second appeal

The first matter for decision is whether, in view of the terms of P-1, it was permissible for the lower Courts to hold that Gendibai alone without the present plaintiff was entitled to give a complete discharge for the amount in question. There has been some argument in this Court to the effect that the words of the receipt do not necessarily imply that Gendibai and the plaintiff were co-promisees; I will assume, however, that this was so. It has been urged strongly on behalf of the appellant that, in view of S. 92, Evidence Act, it was not permissible for the defendants to prove, or for the Courts to hold, that Gendibai could give alone a valid discharge as regards the amount covered by P-1. S. 92, Evidence Act, only lays down that in the case of a written contract:

"no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to "

the contract

" for the purpose af contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms."

In the case of consideration mentioned in such a written document, it is open to the party contesting it to show that there was no consideration, or that the consideration was different from that described in the contract. In the present case, the position of the defendants is that the present appellant joined in the execution of the document at his own request and that he was allowed to do so, being the husband of Gendibai Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baijnath Singh v. Vally Muhammad Hajee Abba (1) have remarked as follows:

" It is true, as was laid down in Balkishen Das v. Legge (2) that under S. 92, Evidence Act, as between the parties to an instrument, oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds of or proving the intention of the parties. But in the view their Lordships take of the circumstances of this case, the section and the ruling have no application to it.

" The preamble to the Evidence Act recites that " it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the law of evidence," and S. 92 merely prescribes a rule of evidence, it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. To these circumstances their Lordships will briefly advert."

The position in the present case seems to me to be precisely analogous to that adumbrated in the second passage from their Lordships' judgment just quoted. If the findings of the lower Courts on the questions of fact involved stand, viz.. that this money was, in reality, Gendibai's and that at the time her husband was fully aware of this and never attempted to contest the fact, then it seems to me obvious that. in the circumstances of the present case, it is open to this Court to take into codsideration the evidence which has been produced on behalf of the defendant—version of the circumstances under which P-1 was executed. I do not think there is any necessity to have recourse, as the learned District Judge did, to the analogy of a benami transaction. The analogy may exist, but, at the best, it is a vague and imperfect one. It has, however, been urged before me that the lower appellate Court was incorrect in holding that the money in question was in reality Gendibai's own property. This money, it has been argued, represents the sale-proceeds of the field of Gendibai's father. Gendibai has a son alive and she is now residing with the plaintiff. It is suggested, therefore, that she has only a life-interest in the money and that, in the circumstances, it is incorrect to hold that the money was Gendibai's sole and absolute property.

A further argument has also been adduced that, in any event, Gendibai having allowed her husband to join as a promisee in the note (P-1), the presumption arises that she had made him a gift pro rata of the amount concerned, or had constituted him, so to speak, a partner in the money concerned.

Neither of these arguments seems to me to be of any avail in the present case. We have in the first Court's judgment a careful finding of fact as regards the circumstances under which the present plaintiff executed the receipt, dated 7th November 1923, (3 D-1) The astounding story told by the plaintiff in this connexion only needs to be read to be disbelieved, although it is not more obviously false then various other pleas of fact offered by him, on which the Subordinate Judge has animadverted with well-deserved severity. Holding, as I do, that this document was executed voluntarily, it is perfectly obvious that the plaintiff cannot now be heard to say that the money was his under the ordinary principles applicable to a Hindu woman, or by gift, or by partnership. Even the very receipt, dated 21st May 1923, (1 D-1), was also attested by him. It has, indeed, been suggested on behalf of the appellant that the mere fact that the plaintiff executed the document (3 D-1) implies that he had been interested in the property concerned. I am unable to accept this suggestion. Considering the relations existing between a Hindu husband and a Hindu wife, third parties may well take the precaution of obtaining the husband's signature on documents like those we are concerned with, and the fact of the appellant's signature being taken, leads, in my opinion, to no necessary presumption that he actually had a title to the property in question.

The case, in short, is, in my opinion, clearly one in which, on the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case quoted above, the Court is bound to go behind the written terms of P-1 and to elucidate the real facts of transaction. On the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts—findings which there is not a shadow of ground for disturbing—it seems to me inevitably to follow that, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, Gendibai must be held to have been capable of giving a valid discharge for the debt as she professed to do. This being so, the plaintiff-appellant is clearly out of Court and I need hardly add, that, from the equitable point of view, he has never had a shadow of case. The appeal fails and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

G S. Lule—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant has been appointed by the District Judge, Wardha, the manager of his father Pandurang, who has been declared a lunatic and incapable of managing his own property, and he has appealed to this Court on the ground that no manager can be appointed for a lunatic's undivided interest in joint family property. The facts of the case are simple and may be briefly stated. The appellant Dada alias Bhimrao and his father Pandurang form a joint Hindu family Pandurang has 2 wives, Mt. Chandrabhaga Bai and Mt. Bhima Bai. These two wives made an application under the Lunacy Act, for the appointment of a manager of their husband's interest in the family property and for the appointment of a guardian of his person. They alleged that Dada was mismanaging the estate since his father became a lunatic The appellant Dada admitted his father's lunacy and his incapacity to manage the estate, but pleaded that he was not guilty of any waste or mismanagement and that the estate was indebted when his father became a lunatic. He admitted that the debts on the property had increased, but stated that the increase was not due to any mismanagement on his part, he further pleaded that, even if mismanagement and misconduct be proved against him, he could not be deprived of his right to manage the estate, and that the wives of Pandurang and Pandurang himself were only entitled to maintenance out of the estate.

The District Judge found that Pandurang was a lunatic and incapable of managing his property, but that he had not forfeited his interest in the joint family property by reason of his lunacy. The District Judge further found that a manager could be appointed for a lunatic's interest in joint family property and that the appointment of a manager was necessary in the present case. He thereupon appointed the appellant as the guardian of the person of his father Pandurang and as manager of the property The effect of this order is really that the Court will have control over the management of the property, as accounts will have to be exhibited annually and transfers and alienations cannot be made without the sanction of the Court. There is no actual change in the management as the appellant Dada has been managing the whole property for some years and he will continue to do so The only result of the order is that he will now manage the property under the control of the Court

It has not been seriously contested in the appeal that Pandurang has a share in the property. It is true that the 1st ground in the memorandum of appeal contests the finding of the lower Court on this point, but we heard no argument on that ground, and the point was not pressed. It will be sufficient to uphold the finding of the District Judge in this respect, following the ruling in Abilakh Bhagat v Bhekhi Mahto (1), where it has been held that, where the property has once vested in a coparcener of a Mitakshara joint family, he will not lose his interest by subsequent insanity. The case reported in Vithoba v. Waman (2) lays down the converse proposition that a member of a joint Hindu family, who is insane at the time the partition is made or when succession opens, is excluded. This, however, does not imply that a member of a joint family who has once obtained a share would lose his share by subsequently becoming insane. We are of opinion, therefore, that the finding of the District Judge, on this point is correct.

The real contest, however, in the appeal is with regard to the 2nd ground in the memorandum of appeal, viz, whether a manager can be appointed for a lunatic's undivided interest in a joint family property. On this point there is certainly a conflict of authority, and the matter is not free from difficulty. The Lunacy Act (Act 4 of 1912) is silent in the mattter. S. 67 of the Act simply states that the Court may make orders for the custody of lunatics and for the management of their estates. S. 68 refers to the estate of a lunatic which consists of property subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards. S. 69 deals with the estate of a lunatic which consists in whole or in part of land or any interest in land which is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards. S 71 simply states that in all other cases the District Court shall appoint a manager of the estate of the lunatic and may appoint a guardian of his person. The wording of this section appears to be imperative as regards the appointment of the manager of the property, the section stating that a manger of the estate shall be appointed

The Courts in India, in dealing with such cases have generally applied the analogy of the appointment of a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act, and several Courts have held on that analogy that a guardian or manager of a lunatic's estate, which consists of a share in the joint family property, cannot be appointed In Charibullah v. Khalak Singh (3) it has been clearly laid down that a guardian cannot be appointed for a minor's undivided share in joint family property governed by the Mitakshara Law, and following that ruling, the Patna High Court, in the case reported in Parma Dube v. Mahadeo Singh (4) has held that a manager could not be appointed for a lunatic's share in joint family property, holding that it was impossible to draw any distinction in principle between the two classes of guardians. The Madras High Court, in a case reported in Govindan Nair v. Narayanan Nair (5) has held that a manager could not be appointed for a share of a member of an undivided Malabar tarwad who had become a lunatic. In the case reported in Trimbaklal Govindas v. Harilal (6) Farran, C. J., held that, where a manager of a Hindu lunatic's estate had been appointed under the Hindu Lunacy Act then in force (Act 35 of 1858), he was not bound to exhibit accounts under S. 15 of the Act. The learned Chief Justice referred to the ruling in Virupakshappa v Nilgangava (7). which was on the question of the appointment of a guardian of a minor's estate in joint family property, and seemed to be inclined to the view that a manager of the joint family property should not have been appointed In that case, however, a manager had been appointed, and, as appears from p. 665 (20 Bom.), of the ruling the question whether the manager should or should not have been appointed was not argued before the lower Court and was not agitated in the appeal. There is, therefore, no definite pronouncement on this question, but the learned Chief Justice simply held that, if a manager had been appointed, he was not bound to exhibit accounts. That case is on all fours with the present case in this respect that the manager appointed was himself the joint owner.

On the other hand, in the ruling in Bhoopendra Narain Roy v Greesh Narain Roy (8) the Calcutta High Court held that they were unable to admit as correct the propositiou that Act 35 of 1858 (the Lunacy Act then in force) could not or did not apply to members of a Mitakshara family. It is true that no definite decision in the matter was given, because the Judges held that the application would fail on another ground, namely that no case had been made out for the appointment of a manager. The following remark was, however, recorded in the judgment :

"It appears to us that there may be cases where it is essentially necessary that a guardian should be appointed for a member of any other family."

This case has been followed in the case of Dalipat Singh v. Dy Commissioner, Sitapur (9). The learned Judicial Commissioners have considered the matter at some length at p 663 (3 I. C) and have drawn a distinction between the case of a lunatic, and a minor on the ground that a minor can always bring a suit for partition through his next friend, whereas it has been held that a lunatic has no right to sue for partition. They therefore held that a lunatic must be allowed some remedy, and that, if he cannot sue for partition the Court should have power to appoint a manager of his property. The following passage from p 664 may he quoted :

"It seems to us obviously impossible that a lunatic who is suffering neglect or ill-usage at the hands of the person who has management of his property, or whose property is being wasted by the said manager, should be left without any legal remedy merely because he happens to be a member of a joint family living under the Mitakshara law. He must either be permitted to sue for partition in the same way as a minor, or the Courts must have power to protect him under the provisions of Act 35 of 1858. In view of the wording of S. 2 of the said Act and of the Calcutta rulings already referred to, we are of opinion that the civil Courts have jurisdiction in such a case to take action under the provisions of Act 35 of 1858."

In view of the wording of S. 61, Lunacy Act, and of the fact that a lunatic has no right to sue for partition as a minor has, we prefer to follow the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court, and we hold that, if a member of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara law be a lunatic, where it is shown that his property is being wasted, the civil Courts have power to appoint a manager of the lunatic's share under the Lunacy Act. We are fortified in this opinion by the fact that it has been consistently held in this Court that a coparcener's share in an undivided ancestral property can be alienated and can be attached by a creditor in execution of a decree against one member of the family. If a share can be attached or alienated, it would seem to follow that a manager can be appointed, even for a share in the property. The law on this subject has been differently interpreted in different parts of India, but the view stated above has been consistently held in these Provinces and may now be regarded as settled law. In this connexion we have been referred to the ruling in Mukund Ram Sukal v. Ram Ratan (10), and Sarkar's Hindu Law 6th Edn at p 357 We therefore uphold the finding of the District Judge that a manager can be appointed of a lunatic's share in a joint family property.

It remains, then, to decide whether a sufficient case has been made out for the appointment of a manager in the present instance. Both in the Calcutta case Bhoopendra Narain Roy v. Greesh Narain (8) and in the case of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court Dalipat Singh v Dy. Commissioner, Sitapur (9) it was held that a strong case must be made out for the appointment of a guardian or manager, and in both cases it was held that no sufficient case for the appointment under the Act had been made out In the present instance no evidence has been led on the question of waste or mismanagement, and the only witness examined was the Civil Surgeon, Dr. Paranjpe, with regard to the lunacy of Pandurang. At the same time there have been very serious allegations made by the wives of Pandurang against the appellant, and, although these allegations were denied, the appellant did not adduce any evidence, though he had an opportunity of doing so On the other hand he has, to a great extent, admitted waste and mismanagement in his written statement. It is, at any rate, admitted that the debts upon the property have increased from Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 30,000, and the reasons given by him for this increase in indebtedness are not, we think, sufficient to account for such an abnormal increase. The only proper inference that can be drawn from such an increase within a short period is that the appellant has been squandering the property. It is admitted that he is trying to pay off the debt by a mortgage, and there seems every reason to believe that, if left to himself, he will soon alienate the bulk, if not the whole, of the property We are of opinion, therefore, that a sufficient case for interference and for the appointment of a manager under the Act has been made out even on the admissions of the appellant himself. As already noted above, the appellant is not in any way wronged by the order. He has himself been appointed the manager of the property and the guardian of his father's person All that has been done is that the appellant has been made answerable to the Court, which will control and supervise his accounts in future Such control appears to us highly desirable in the circumstances of the case We would therefore confirm the order of the lower Court appointing the appellant guardian and manager of the property and dismiss the appeal.

Costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellant. We fix pleader's fees at Rs 30.

General Clauses Act, S. 10—Principle of S. 10 may be applied to Cattle Trespass Act, S. 20.

Although S. 10, General Clauses Act, only applies to Acts made on or after 14th January 1897, and does not cover in terms, an Act like Cattle Trespass Act passed in 1871, the principle underlying S. 10, General Clauses Act, should be applied to complaints under Cattle Trespass Act, S. 20. Order. — The Bench of Honorary Magistrates, 2nd Class, Sitabuldi, dismissed a complaint under S 20, Cattle Trespass Act, on the ground that the complaint in question had been filed beyond the ten days allowed under S. 20 of the Act In this, the Honorary Magistrates clearly acted erroneously. The alleged forcible seizure of the cattle occurred on 1st December 1927, and, under S. 9, General Clauses Act, the ten days therefore, ran from 2nd December and would ordinarily expire on 11th idem; 11th December, however, was a Sunday. It is true that S 10, General Clauses Act, only applies to Acts made on or after 14th January 1897, and does not cover, in terms, an Act like the Cattle Trespass Act which was passed in 1871. Nevertheless every consideration of justice and expediency would require that the accepted principle, which underlies S. 10, General Clauses Act, should be applied in the present case also and, as the Courts were closed on 11th December, I am of opinion that this complaint was correctly entertained on 12th December.

The judgment of the Court below is accordingly reversed and the case will go back to that Court for re-disposal. No opportunity for producing further evidence should be given to either side, but, after hearing counsel for the complainant and accused, if necessary, the Bench should proceed to deliver a fresh judgment in view of the finding I have given above on the question of limitation.

Opinion

Kinkhede, A. J. C.—While agreeing with my learned brother, I may add a few words. If the enumeration of Courts given in S. 6, Criminal P. C, is exhaustive as I think it is, it necessarily follows that there is no such Court as a Court of District Magistrate. But all the same the powers, which the District Magistrate, exercises, are really powers which vest in him as a First Class Magistrate supplemented with such others, as his appointment under S 10 or 30, Criminal P. C, clothes him with. His decisions in appeal are principally as a Court of First Class Magistrate, but the appeal against his decision may ordinarily lie under S 408, Criminal P. C, to the Sessions Court or to the High Court according to the duration of imprisonment for which he may pass the sentence (unless it is one of transportation in which case the appeal will lie to this Court only). Judged by the test of the sentence which the District Magistrate may pass, the appellate forum may vary according to the period of the sentence and its nature also. In matters of appeal, therefore, the District Magistrate is subordinate to two Courts, (1) the Sessions Court and (2) High Court. Out of the two appellate Courts the Court of Sessions being of inferior jurisdiction the District Magistrate could well be regarded as subordinate to that Court for purpose of S. 195-(3) read with Ss 476 A and 476-B, Criminal P. C I, therefore, agree with my learned colleague Ghulam Mohiuddin, A. J. C., in the reply he proposes to give to the reference.

Mohiuddin, A. J. C.—This reference is made in an appeal under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. The necessary facts are given in the order of reference and need not be repeated. The question propounded is in these words :

"To what Court an appeal under S. 476-B Criminal P. C., by the person against whom a complaint has been filed by the District Magistrate shall lie."

According to S. 476-B, Criminal P. C, any person against whom a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (3) and the superior Court may thereupon after notice to the parties direct the withdrawal of the complaint. It is thus to be seen, what Court is superior to the Court of the District Magistrate, that is to which Court, the District Magistrate is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (3), which runs as follows :

"For the purposes of this section, a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appellate decrees or sentences of such former Court. Provided that . (a) where appeals lie to more than one Court, the appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate."

Sections 476-A, 476-B and 195 (3), Criminal P C., use the word Court, and, the different classes of criminal Courts are mentioned in S. 6, Criminal P. C., and according to this section, there is no such Court as the Court of District Magistrate. As defined in S. 10, Criminal P. C., a District Magistrate is a Magistrate of the 1st Class, who is so appointed by the Local Government, and on account of his appointment under S. 10, he exercises certain powers which are given to him in the Criminal Procedure Code, but his Court is not a Court of a District Magistrate but is a Court of a First Class Magistrate only. Being a First Class Magistrate he can pass a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years under S. 32, Criminal P. C., and if invested by the Local Government with powers under S 30, Criminal P. C., he can try all offences not punishable with death but can only pass a sentence, under S. 34, Criminal P. C, of transportation or imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years. Under S 407, Criminal P. C., a District Magistrate hears appeals and according to S. 408, Criminal P. C., a person convicted on a trial held by a District Magistrate, may appeal to the Sessions Judge, except in the case where the District Magistrate i. e. Magistrate First Class invested with powers under S 30, Criminal P. C, passed any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years or any sentence of transportation, in which case the appeal lies to the High Court. This shows clearly that a District Magistrate as such is not a Court and is only a First Class Magistrate who exercises special powers with which he is invested either by the Criminal Procedure Code or by the Local Government His Court is that of a Magistrate, First Class, and appeals from the appellable sentence of his Court lie to the Court of Sessions.

According to S 195 (3), Criminal P. C., a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appellable sentences of such former Court, and, as appeals ordinarily lie to the Court of Sessions Judge, from the Court of First Class Magistrate, whether appointed a District Magistrate under S. 10, Criminal P. C., or invested with powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., his Court, as it is the Court of a First Class Magistrate is subordinate to the Court of Session, for the purposes of S. 195 (3), Criminal P. C. According to S. 17, Criminal P C., a District Magistrate is not subordinate to the Sessions Judge, except to the extent and in the manner expressly provided in the Code, but as a Court, a District Magistrate's Court, is only a Court of Magistrate, First Class, and is subordinate to the Court of Sessions Judge for the purposes of S 195 (3), Criminal P. C. An appeal therefore under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., will lie to the Court of Sessions Judge, from an order passed by the District Magistrate under S. 476-A, Criminal P. C.

Second Appeal No 25-B of 1925, Decided on 19th December 1928 against decision of 1st Addl Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 27th September 1924, in Civil Appeal No 197 of 1922

 (a) Precedents—Privy Council — Decision is binding—Indian Courts cannot consider whether or not it is in accordance with the personal law of the parties.

It is not open to the Indian Courts to consider how far the principle laid down by the Privy Council is in accordance with either the letter or spirit of any personal law as is expounded in the books or as understood by the parties. The Privy Council decisions are binding on the Indian Courts and the latter are bound to follow them . A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 272 and 32 Bom. 499, Foll. [P 105 C 2]

* (b) Hindu . law — Adoption — Hindu governed by Bombay School dying leaving a widow and widow of predeceased son—The latter cannot adopt after the widow's death although the estate may vest in her.

Where the last male holder dies leaving a nearer heir other than the adopting widow, the latter's power of adoption comes to an end, as soon as his estate is vested in the nearer heir, and is incapable of being revived at any future date. [P 106 C 1]

Where a Hindu governed by the Bombay School dies leaving behind him his widow and a widowed daughter-in-law, the power of the daughter-in-law to adopt to her husband comes to an end by the vesting of the estate in the widow and does not revive again by the death of the widow. An adoption of the son by a daughter-in-law, therefore, although the estate has vested in her, after the widow's death is invalid (Case law discussed.)

Order of Reference

Kinkhede, A. J. C.—The points involved in the case are of very great importance to the Maratha Hindu community, and particularly to those who regard themselves as governed by the Bombay

School of law. There is a divergence of view on the point and it is therefore very desirable that so far as our subordinate Courts are concerned there should be an authoritative decision of a Full Bench settling the question whether the earlier Bombay decisions which have been reaffirmed by the recent Bombay Full Bench decision in Ishwar Dadu v. Gajabai Babaji (1) need be followed in our Courts, as precedents on matters of Hindu law governed by the Bombay School, according to the time-honoured tradition of this Court.

Opinion

Kinkhede, A. J. C—The following geneological tree will facilitate the understanding of the facts relevant to the decision of the question referred to the Full Bench.

The property in suit once belonged to a joint Hindu family consisting of Krishnaji, Ramji and Zaboo. Ramji and Zaboo predeceased Krishnaji leaving their respective widows Baijabai and Bainabai behind them. Krishnaji, who was thus the last surviving male coparcener of the joint family, died in 1907 leaving his widow Sitabai as his heir entitled to inherit his property as such widow. She held the property till her death, which took place in 1909. The inheritance next devolved on Bainabai, the widow of Krishnaji's predeceased son Zaboo, who as the widow of a predeceased sagotra sapinda, was entitled to succeed, under the Bombay School of Hindu law, which is in force in Berar, to the estate of her father-in-law, Krishnaji.

Bainabai died in 1917. It is the plaintiff's case that on her death the estate of Krishnaji devolved on Baijabai the widow of his predeceased brother, Ramji as widow of his sagotra sapinda; that she held it as such till her death in 1919, and then the succession went to Krishnaji's mother's sisters' sons, Gangaram and Janji as his bhinna gotra sapindas. The plaintiff, Uttamrao is an assignee, under an assignment dated 19th January 1920, from Janji, of his moiety of the property of Krishnaji. He alleges that he was wrongfully obstructed by defendant 1 in taking possession of the property purchased by him. Hence he filed the present suit for possession against him

Defendant 1's principal defence is that he has a lawful title to obstruct, as a duly adopted son of Zaboo his adoption having been made, in April 1917, by Bainabai, in whom the inheritance had vested; and that it was consented to by Baijabai the next immediate reversioner. The plaintiff's contention is that, the adoption being invalid, created no rights in favour of defendant 1 The validity is challenged by him on the grounds:

(i) that defendant 1 was an orphan,

(ii) that Bainabai had no authority under law to adopt as she did not take the estate as heir of her husband;

(iii) that Baijabai had no authority to give any consent to the adoption

If the adoption be not invalid for any of these reasons, it is clear that Daulat, by virtue thereof, became the grandson of Krishnaji, and as such took his grandfather's estate, from Bainabai his adoptive mother, in his own right, with effect from the date of his adoption. Thus, there would, or could, be, no succession in favour of Baijabai, or, Gangaram, or of Janji the plaintiff's vendor, in their capacity of the sagotra sapinda, or, bhinna gotra sapindas, of Krishnaji. On the facts found by the Courts below, defendant 1 was not an orphan, and Baijabai had consented to and acquiesced in the adoption and even admitted the title of the adopted son to the property by acting as his guardian till her own death The first ground is thus no longer available, and the third ground is admitted to be immaterial. It is conceded by defendant 1 also that, if his adoption were held to be invalid in law, on the ground of Bainabai's incompetency to adopt him, the succession would go to Janji and Gangaram as the nearest reversioners of the last male holder, Krishnaji.

The Court of first instance held the adoption by Bainabai to be valid under law and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff went up in appeal to the District Judge, who affirmed the dismissal. He has, therefore, come up in second appeal.

Looking to the importance of the question of the validity of the adoption involved in this appeal, and the apparent conflict of decisions on the point, the appellant moved for a reference of that question to a Full Bench; this was done and the point has been ably argued before it.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that Bainabai was legally incompetent to adopt a son to her deceased husband Zaboo, as she did not get the estate directly as heir to her husband. The learned counsel deduces four propositions as laying down the view taken by the Bombay School of Hindu law by which he says this case ought to be governed.

1. That, after the death, without issues, of a full owner, the only person, who can adopt, so as to deviate the succession, is, either his widow, or, if he dies without leaving a widow who can adopt and thus continue the lineage, his mother, or grandmother, subject, however, to the proviso that she takes the inheritance directly from her son or grandson, and, not otherwise.

2. That the widow's power to adopt is limited, that limit being reached immediately there is some one else, nearer in degree than herself, to take the estate of the last full owner, and, able to continue his line. Once this limit is reached the power to adopt is extinguished and can never be revived after such extinction. In other words, the widow's power to adopt never remains in abeyance.

3. That a widow cannot adopt so as to divest another person of the property; but that this does not, in view of other limitations, mean that she can adopt, so long as she does not do this.

4 That a widow of a gotraja sapinda can never adopt so as to deviate the line of succession, even if she succeeds directly to the last full owner, much less can she adopt if some one else has taken the property before she succeeds, the mother and grandmother being exceptions.

In this case it is contended that, as Krishnaji was the last full owner and his widow Sitabai succeeded to him before Bainabai took up the inheritance as his daughter-in-law, the only person who could make the adoption and continue the line of Krishnaji was his widow, Sitabai, and not his daughter-in-law, Bainabai. Reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in Ganpati v. Mt. Salu (2) in support of the first three propositions and on Ramkrishna Ramchandra v Shamrao Yeshwant (3) which in its turn is based on the three Privy Council decisions of Bhooban Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (4), Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards (5) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (6), as supporting all the four propositions The decision of a Bench of this Court in Baswantrao v Deorao (7) where the right of a daughter-in-law to make a valid adoption was affirmed, is sought to be distinguished on the ground that the daughter-in-law succeeded directly to her father-in-law, and, not after the death of her mother-in-law, as in this case It is, therefore, necessary to examine the cases on the subject decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council as well as by other High Courts and this Court in order to find out the principles limiting a Hindu widow's power to make a valid adoption.

The leading case on the subject is that of Bhooban Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (4). The facts of that case were that, one Gour Kishore died, in 1821, leaving a widow Chundrabullee and an only son named Bhowanee Kishore. In 1840, Bhowanee died, leaving no issue, but, his wife Bhooban Moyee Debia who, as his widow, succeeded to the estate left by him In 1843, Bhooban Debia adopted a boy called Rajendro Kishore, and some time after this. Chundrabullee. also, adopted Ram Kishore, as a son, to her late husband, Gour Kishore. The latter filed a suit, as the next friend of Ram Kishore, for possession of the estate left by Bhowanee, against Bhooban Debia and her adopted son Rajendro Kishore In that suit, it was found that, Bhooban Debia had no authority from her husband to adopt, and that, Chundrabullee had been authorized by her husband to adopt a son to him. In view of these findings, it became necessary to consider whether Ram Kishore's adoption was valid, and. whether he was entitled to recover possession of the estate left by Bhowanee Their Lordships held that Ram Kishore was not entitled to succeed, and observed as follows :

" The question is, whether the estate of his (Gour Kishore's) son (Bhowanee) being unlimited, and that son having married and left a widow as his heir, and that heir having acquired a vested estate in her husband's property as widow, a new heir can be substituted by adoption who is to defeat that estate, and take as an adopted son what a legitimate son of Gour Kishore would not have taken. This seems contrary to all reason and to all the principles of Hindu law, as far as we can collect them. It must be recollected that the adopted son, as such takes by inheritance and not by devise. Now, the rule of Hindu law is, that in the case of inheritance, the person to succeed must be the heir of the last full owner. In this case, Bhowanee Kishore was the last full owner, and his wife succeeds, as his heir, to a widow's estate. On her death, the person to succeed will again be the heir at that time of Bhowanee Kishore. If Bhowanee Kishore had died unmarried, his mother, Chundrabullee Debia, would have been his heir, and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. By exercising the power of adoption, she would have divested no estate but her own, and this would have brought the case within the ordinary rule ; but no case has been produced, no decision has been cited from the text-books, and no principle has been stated to show that by the mere gift of a power of adoption to a widow, the state of the heir of a deceased son vested in possession, can be defeated and divested."

The above case is an authority for the proposition that, if a Hindu dies leaving a widow as heir, his mother, although duly authorized in that behalf, cannot, during the lifetime of her son's widow, adopt a son to her own husband, and thereby divest her (the son's widow) of the estate acquired by her by inheritance from her own husband. In this case it was not held, in so many words, that Ram Kishore's adoption by Chundrabullee was invalid.

Sometime after this decision, Bhooban Debia died and the estate devolved according to the Hindu law of succession upon Chundrabullee, the mother of Bhowanee Kishore. After the death of Chundrabullee, the reversionary heirs of Bhowanee brought a suit for possession of his estate, then in the hands of Ram Kishore In this second suit, the question arose, whether Ram Kishore's adoption by Chundrabullee to her husband Gour Kishore was valid, and, whether, as such he was entitled to retain possession of the estate. The Calcutta High Court in Puddo Kumaree Debi v. Juggut Kishore Acharjee (8) held that, Ram Kishore's adoption was valid, and that, he was entitled to succeed to the estate of Bhowanee after Bhooban Debia's death.

With reference to the previous decision of their Lordships in Bhooban Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (4), Jackson, J., observed :

" What has happened, being the death of Bhowanee without having either had sons born to him or given any permission to adopt. If, therefore, Chundrabullee immediately on the death of Bhoobumoyee, had made an adoption and so divested her own estate, there would have been nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council, and nothing that we are aware of in the law, to prevent her doing that which her husband authorized her to do, and which would certainly be for his spiritual benefit and for that of his ancestors and even of Bhowani Kishore. . . . Then, if Chundrabullee might have adopted at the date when Boobunmoyee's death caused the inheritance to devolve on her, with the consequence of divesting her own estate, is there any reason why Ram Kishore, if we suppose him to have been regularly adopted, and those who came before him as heirs to Bhowani Kishore out of the way, should not, in that state of things, take the inheritance which the mother gives up to him, and should not, to use the words of Mr. Mayne, be rewarded by the estate for the services which he renders to the deceased ? We think not. . . . it seems to us, that although as heir to Gour Kishore, he could not displace the widow and heir of a subsequent full owner, and as heir to Bhowani he came after the widow and the mother, he might, without objection, succeed when, by their successive deaths or surrender, he united in himself the capacities of heir of Gour Kishore and heir to Bhowani : Puddo Kumaree Debee v. Juggut Kishore Acharjee (8)."

Against this decision, there was an appeal to the Privy Council, and their Lordships reversed the decision of the High Court and held that, Ram Kishore's adoption by Chundrabullee was invalid and that he was not entitled to succeed to the estate left by Bhowani. In doing so, they referred to their former decision in Bhooban Moyee v. Ram Kishore (4) and observed :

"The substitution of a new heir for the widow was, no doubt, the question to be decided, and such substitution might have been disallowed, the adoption being held valid for all other purposes, which is the view that the lower Courts have taken of the judgment, but their Lordships do not think that this was intended. They consider the decision to be that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow of Bhowani, the power of adoption (given to Chundrabullee) was at an end, and incapable of execution : Padmakumari Debi v. Court of Wards (5)."

A similar question came up for decision before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Thayammal v Venkatarama (6). In that case, one Dorasami died leaving his widow Thayammal and also an only son Kuttisami. Kuttisami married Thangammal and subsequently died without issue leaving his widow Thangammal, who upon the death of her husband succeeded as heir to the property. After Kuttisami's death and during the lifetime of his widow, his mother Thayammal adopted a son to her husband Dorasami with the consent of the sapindas. A question arose whether the said adoption was valid The Madras High Court following the decision in Padamakumari Debi v. Court of Wards (5) held that the adoption was invalid. On appeal to the Privy Council, it was contended on behalf of the adopted son that all that was decided by the Judicial Committee in Bhooban Moyee's case, Bhooban Moyee v Ram Kishore (4), was that the son adopted by the mother could not recover the estate from the son's widow and that it was not held that his adoption was invalid. Their Lordships overruled this contention and observed :

"This appears to have been the view taken by the lower Courts in Padmakumari's case. But this Committee, upon appeal, held that the case went much further. Nothing can be clearer or more explicit than the language used by the Committee in that case."

They also quoted with approval their own observations in Padamkumari's case cited above and following them held that the adoption of a son by Thayammal after the estate had vested in her son's widow was invalid.

It is no doubt true that, in the cases of Padmakumari and Thayammal referred to above, the mother of the propositus had adopted a son to her own husband during the lifetime of her son's widow, but a careful perusal of the judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council in those cases will show that the adoption by the mother was held invalid not on the ground that it was made during the lifetime of the son's widow, but on the ground that the mother's power of adoption came to an end and became incapable of execution upon the vesting of the estate in the son's widow. These cases are, in my opinion, clear authorities for the proposition that a widow's power of adoption is limited, that the vesting of the estate in an heir of the last male holder is the limit of the existence of such power ; that once this limit is reached, the power is at an end and is incapable of execution at any future time, and that, it is not merely suspended and capable of being revived if, after some interval, the widow happens to succeed ultimately as an heir to the last male holder on the death of the immediate heir in whom the estate had vested for the time being.

The above view is fully supported by the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Manikyamala Bose v. Nanda Kumar Bose (9). In that case, one Chandra Kumar Bose died in 1881, leaving his widow Manikyamala and an adopted son Akhoy. Akhoy died in 1893 after having attained majority, leaving a childless widow, Bidhumukhi, who died in July 1898. Shortly afterwards, i. e., on 29th August 1898, Manikyamala adopted a son to her husband, and the question arose whether the said adoption was valid. It was contended that as the same was made after the death of the widow of the last male holder it was valid. The Full Bench overruled this contention and following the two earlier Privy Council decisions, Bhooban Moyee v. Ram Kishore (4) and Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards (5), as also the later Privy Council decision reported in Tara Churn Chatterji v. Suresh Chunder Mukerji (10) to the same effect, held that the adoption was invalid. Mukerjee, J , in his judgment observed as follows at pp. 1315-16 :

"It is contended on behalf of the appellants that, inasmuch as the second adoption was made after the death of the widow of the adopted son and at a time, when the estate was vested in the widow of the original owner, there was no bar to the second adoption as it would divest the estate of the adoptive mother alone. It has been conceded before us, and in view of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bhooban Moyee v. Ramkishore (4) and Padma Kumari v. Court of Wards (5) it could not possibly be disputed, that the adoption would have been invalid, if it had been made during the lifetime of the widow of the adopted son, because during such period, the power of adoption was incapable of execution. The question, therefore, is reduced to this : Whether the power of adoption, vested in the widow of the original owner, which during the lifetime of her daughter-in-law was incapable of execution, became extinguished upon the death of her adopted son, when the estate vested in his widow or, whether the such power of adoption merely remained in abeyance and was revived and became capable of execution upon the death of her daughter-in-law, when the estate reverted to her. The solution of this question depends upon the principles deducible from a series of decisions of the Judicial Committee in which their Lordships had to consider the limits within which a power of adoption may be exercised by a Hindu widow. "

Mukerjee, J , then discussed at length the decisions of the Privy Council and of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts on the subject and observed at p. 1319 :

" Upon a review, then of the authorities, we must overrule the contention of the appellants, that the widow's death is the limit of time within which and the failure of male issue in the male line and the vesting of the estate in the widow, are the only two conditions subject to which, the power may be exercised, no matter whether the estate vests in the adopting widow just after the death of the son or after the death of the widow of the son. "

His final conclusion reported at p. 1321 was as follows :

" On these grounds, we must hold that the adoption of defendant 2 by defendant 1 after she had succeeded as heir to her first adopted son after his death and that of his widow, is invalid. "

(10) [1890] 17 Cal. 122=16 I. A. 166=5 Sar. 379 (P. C.).

A similar view of the Privy Council decisions has been taken by the Bombay High Court also. For example in what is known as Hasabnis's case Krishnarao Trimbak v. Shankarrao Vinayak (11) the said High Court held that an adoption to herself and her deceased husband by a mother who has succeeded as heir to her son after his death and that of his widow, is invalid according to Hindu law. In this case, the mother had adopted on the death of her son and his widow. Again in Shri Dharnidhar v. Chinto (12) it was held that, where a Hindu died leaving a widow and a daughter-in-law (a widow of his predeceased son), adoption by the latter was invalid. Candy, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court observed as follows :

" There is no suspension of the right to adopt [see remarks of this Court in Krishnarav v. Shankarrav (11)]. From the moment that Dharnidhar died, and his estate was vested in his widows, the right of his daughter-in-law Venubai to adopt, for the purposes of inheritance, was at an end : see judgment of West, J., in Keshav v. Govind (13). "

Similarly, in Amava v. Mahadgauda (14), it was held that the authority of a widow to adopt is at an end when the estate after being vested in her son has passed to his widow.

Again, in the Full Bench case of Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (3), it was held that, where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a son and that son himself dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never be revived In that case, Chandavarkar, J., who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench observed at pp. 529-30 as follows :

" If Mr. Chaubal's contention be correct, a widow can adopt without any limit as to the period within which such adoption may be made and her power is never at an end—it is only suspended so long as the estate is vested in others, but directly it comes to her from those others it is revived. The language of the judgment in Bhooban Moyee's case, however, is so explicit that it is impossible to construe it otherwise than as meaning that there is a limit to the period within which a widow can exercise her power of adoption, and that once that limit is reached the power ' is at an end .' That language is repeated and emphasized by their Lordships in their judgments in Padma Coomari's case (5) and in Thayammal's case (6). We agree, therefore with the Division Bench of this Court which decided Hasabnis's case (11), that the language of the Privy Council is 'altogether inconsistent with any idea of the right to adopt being merely suspended during the widow's life.' "

He then discussed at considerable length the test of the principle defining the limit to the period within which a valid adoption could be made by a Hindu widow to her deceased husband, and his conclusion, after a review of the case law, was that a widow's power of adoption comes to an end and can never be revived after the inheritance has vested in some heir of her son other than the widow herself It is significant to observe that the principle enunciated by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has been approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana v Purushothama (15), and this latter decision has since been cited with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pratapsingh Shivsingh v. Agarsingji Rajsingji (16)

The Madras High Court has also followed the view taken in the Privy Council decisions. The case reported in Suryaprakasa v Gangaraju (17) may be referred to on the point In that case A and B were two undivided brothers, A having predeceased B, the family properties vested in B by survivorship, and on B's death descended to his widow After B's death, A's widow adopted a son It was found by the lower Court that the adoption was made with the implied consent of and without opposition from B's widow. The adoption so made was held to be invalid, the consent of B's widow not making it valid in any way, as the estate had already vested in her Wallis, J., after discussing the Privy Council cases on the subject observed as follows:

"These decisions of their Lordships have been interpreted by Full Benches of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts in Ramkrishna v. Shamrav (9) and Manikyamal Bose v. Nand Kumar Bose (9), as meaning that a widow's power is absolutely at an end once the estate has vested in the heir of her deceased son, and is not revived even if the widow herself afterwards succeeds to the estate. If the widow having once lost the right to adopt, when her son's inheritance devolves on another, does not regain it on becoming herself the owner of the estate—if, that is to say, she cannot in these circumstances by her consent as owner validate an adoption made by her as widow, it would seem to follow that the consent of the person on whom the estate has devolved by inheritance from the son is ineffective to validate an adoption made by the widow.

Now it is clear that A's widow might, with proper consent, have validly adopted a son to A during the lifetime of his surviving coparcener B: Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunadha Deo v. Brozo Kishore Patta Deo (18) and Chandra v. Gojarabai (19), but in the last case it was held that such an adoption if made after the death of the surviving coparcener and the vesting of the estate in his widow could not divest the estate, as of course it would if valid "

The Allahabad High Court also appears to have taken in Lachhmi Kunwar v Durga Kunwar (20), a similar view of the Privy Council decisions, though the question of adoption was not directly involved in the said case. Nathmal Das and Pem Raj, who were two brothers constituted a joint Hindu family Nathmal Das died leaving a widow, Lachhmi Kunwar, and, subsequently, Pem Raj died leaving a widow Durga Kunwar Lachhmi and Durga executed an agreement which recited that they were entitled to equal shares in the joint family estate left by Nathmal Das and Pem Raj and the descendants then proceeded to apportion the estate between them Disputes having subsequently arose between the widows, Durga Kunwar sued for a declaration that she had been deceived into executing the agreement, and that it was not binding on her It was contended on behalf of Lachhmi Kunwar that she was proposing to make an adoption, and that the effect of the adoption would have been to divest Durga Kunwar of the estate, or of at least half of it, and that, to avoid this divesting of estate, Durga Kunwar entered into the said agreement. With reference to this plea, the High Court observed as under:

"The plea may be disposed of upon the ground that it does not proceed upon a correct proposition of law. It is sufficient to refer to two cases, Chandra Bin Bhau v. Gojarabai (19), and Advi Suryaprakasa Rao v. Nidamarty Gangaraju (17), as authority for the proposition that any adoption which Mt. Lachhmi Kunwar might make, or might purport to make, to her deceased husband, after the husband and his surviving brother were both dead, could not affect the rights of Mt. Durga Kunwar who had inherited the estate as widow of Pem Raj".

In short, all the four chartered High Courts have taken exactly the same view of the aforesaid Privy Council decisions This Court has also adopted the same view as will appear from the decision of Stanyon, A J. C , in Narayan v Debidas (21). In this local case it was held that:

"where a Hindu son whether natural or adopted having inherited the property of his deceased father, dies leaving a son or widow or any other person as his heir other than the widow of his father, any power to adopt held by his father's widow, comes to an end."

The learned Judge observed that:

"The Privy Council doctrine of limitation of the power to adopt turns upon a second vesting of the estate and upon nothing else: and where such second vesting is in the widow herself her power to adopt will not be extinguished."

It is urged on behalf of the respondent that the position of a daughter-in-law is the same whether she inherits the father-in-law's estate immediately after his death, or, after the death of his widow In either case it is said she inherits the estate as her father-in-law's heir and in neither case can she make an adoption to him (the last male holder) as, under the Hindu law, a widow can adopt to her husband only. That being so, why should she have no power to make an adoption when she inherits her father-in-law's estate after his widow's death, when she may be said to have that power according to some of the decisions if she succeeds to him direct? It is further argued that the lower appellate Court's view that she is as much able to continue her father-in-law's line in the way of providing him with a grandson by making an adoption to her own husband, as her mother-in-law is by providing him with a son, is correct. Moreover, it is contended that the object of an adoption is not merely the due perpetuation of the lineage but to secure for the adoptive father and his ancestors the spiritual blessings "Pindodaka kriya hetoh nam sankeertanaya cha" as laid down by Manu in his text; and that the adoption in question should be upheld as valid at least for spiritual purposes and the vesting of the estate in defendant 1 will follow as a legal consequence thereof as observed in Yado v. Namdeo (22). It is further said that if a son adopted by a daughter-in-law, on the death of her father-in-law's widow, is as much able to confer spiritual blessing on the father-in-law, as a son adopted by her after the death of her father in-law dying without leaving a nearer heir than herself would, why should the power to make an adoption be supposed to continue in the latter case, and deemed to have been extinguished in the former? Since under the Bombay School a sonless widow is said to have an inherent or in any case a delegated right of adopting a son to her deceased husband, it is argued that she can exercise that right at any time during her lifetime subject only to such restrictions and limitations if any, as her husband may have expressly or impliedly chosen to impose on her in that behalf

In reply to these contentions it may be pointed out that if they are carried to their extreme logical conclusions, we shall have to run counter to the earlier Privy Council rulings in Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards (5) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (6), in which it has been distinctly held that an adoption made by a mother on the death of her son and during the lifetime of the son's widow is invalid; and, also to hold that a sonless widow governed by the Bombay School has, subject to the restrictions imposed on her by her husband, an unlimited right of adoption which she can exercise at any time during her life and that an adoption made by her after her son's death but during the lifetime of her son's widow, is perfectly valid. To do so would involve the ignoring of the Privy Council decisions referred to. The reason why this is not permissible is quite plain As remarked in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (23), it is not open to the Indian Courts :

"to consider how far the principle laid down by these cases was in accordance with either the letter or spirit of the Hindu law as expounded in the books or as understood by the Hindus themselves."

The Privy Council decisions are binding on the Indian Courts, and the latter are bound to follow them as the following remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mataprasad v Nageshar Sahai (24), will show :

" In view of the peculiar course adopted by the Subordinate Judge in dealing with this case, and in order to prevent other Courts in India from falling into the same error their Lordships think it desirable to point out that it is not open to the Courts in India to question any principle enunciated by this Board, although they have the right of examining the facts of any case before them to see whether and how far the principle on which stress is laid applies to the facts of the particular case."

In view of these remarks, it will serve no useful purpose to discuss the original Hindu law texts with a view to see whether, and how far the principles as to the limits of a widow's power to adopt laid down by the Privy Council are deducible from them Neither the theory and object which underlies the conception of an adoption by a Hindu male or female to which reference is made in Sri Virda Pratapa Raghunadha Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishoro Patta Deo (18), nor the spiritual apart from the temporal aspect of an adoption, or its validity purely for spiritual purposes, discussed In Yado v. Namdeo (22), on which the lower Courts largely depended, therefore, calls for any comment or treatment here.

We have seen above that the Privy Council decisions Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards (5) and Thayammal v Venkatarama (6), are based on the principle that, where the last male-holder dies leaving a nearer heir other than the adopting widow, the latter's power of adoption comes to an end, as soon as his estate is vested in the nearer heir, and is incapable of being revived at any future date. In my opinion, the words :

" the power of adoption was at an end and incapable of execution."

as used in Padma Coomari v Court of Wards (5), leave no room for doubt that this was the principle on which stress was laid by their Lordships in defining the limit of the widow's power of adoption. It is not, therefore, open to the Courts in India to question the soundness of the said principle It is obviously based on the consideration that, when the last male holder dies leaving a widow capable of continuing the line by adopting a son, and that nearer heir does not care to continue the line, the remoter heir cannot claim to continue the line by making an adoption either during, or after, the lifetime of the former widow ; because, it was the right of the former widow to continue the line, and, if for any reason, she chooses not to do so, it should not be within the power of the remoter heir who succeeds to the estate to claim to exercise that power after it became extinguished.

It seems, therefore, clear to my mind that the principle deducible from the Privy Council rulings on the subject of the power of adoption by a widow as interpreted by all the High Courts and this Court is that, when the adopting widow, in a joint family which has ceased to exist on the death of the last surviving coparcener, or, in a divided family, succeeds direct to the last male holder, her power of adoption remains intact, and she can exercise it by making an adoption to her deceased husband ; where, however, she succeeds on the termination of an intermediate estate, her power of adoption comes to an end, as soon as the estate vests in the immediate heir other than herself, and is incapable of being made use of at any future date. On this principle, the cases decided by the several High Courts in regard to the validity or otherwise of an adoption made by a widow succeeding to the estate of the last male holder either directly or after the termination of an intermediate estate, can, in my opinion, be satisfactorily explained.

It is obviously in accordance with this principle that it has been held that a grandmother succeeding direct to her grandson can make a valid adoption · cf. Narhar Govind v. Balwant Hari (25). This principle also applies to the case of a daughter-in-law succeeding to her father-in-law, direct, and it has been held by a Bench of this Court that an adoption made by such daughter-in-law is valid : Baswantrao v. Deorao (7), similarly, where a Hindu dies leaving a son and a widow and that son dies unmarried or marries and begets a daughter and his wife and daughter die, and after them he also dies, his mother can make a valid adoption as she succeeds to him direct : cf. Maharaja of Kolhapur v. Sundaram Ayyar (26), Tripuramba v. Venkataraman (27), Anjirabai v Pandurang Balkrishna (28) and Sheik Dallu v. Panjab A I. R. 1924 Nag 344.

Where, however, he dies leaving a widow as his heir, and also a mother and predeceased son's widow, neither of them can make a valid adoption, even after the death of his widow, as their power to make an adoption comes to an end, i. e. is extinguished altogether, as soon as his estate vests in his widow, as his heir, and is not capable of being revived at any future date.

It has accordingly been held by this Court that, where a Hindu dies leaving a widow who could have adopted, his mother has no power to do so on her succession to the estate after the remarriage of his widow: Ganpat v. Mt. Salu (2) It is true that there is no case decided by this Court in which it has been held that a daughter-in-law succeeding as a gotraja sapinda to her father-in-law, on the death of his widow, cannot make a valid adoption. I am of opinion, however, that, where she does not succeed direct, she has no such power Her power comes to an end as soon as the widow of her father-in-law succeeds as heir to his estate, and cannot be revived after her death. The Bombay High Court has, however, clearly held that where a Hindu dies leaving a widow and a daughter-in-law, the latter on succeeding to the estate, as a widow of a gotraja sapinda on his widow's death, cannot make a valid adoption: Shri Dharnidhar v. Chinto (12). The same High Court has also gone the length of holding in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (23) that the widow of a predeceased gotraja sapinda succeeding even directly to the last male holder cannot make a valid adoption, a view not accepted in this Court in Narayan v. Debidas (21) and Baswantrao v Deorao (7): cf. Dattatraya Bhimrao v. Gangabai (29), Yeknath Narayan v Laxmibai (30) and Shivbasappa v Nilava (31) It may be noticed that the decision of the case in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (23) was sought to be based on the Privy Council decisions referred to above

In that case Datte Govind v Pandurang Vinayak (20) it was held that a Hindu widow, who succeeds to an estate not her husband's but as a gotraja sapinda of the last male holder under the rule established by Lullobhoy v. Cassibai (32) and in consequence of the absence of nearer heirs, cannot make a valid adoption In that case Pandurang was adopted by Parvati the widow of Sadashiv the undivided predeceased brother of Antaji the last surviving coparcener of a joint family of two brothers. Parvati succeeded to Antaji as the nearest sagotra sapinda then alive. The reversionary heirs of Antaji sued Pandurang after the death of Parvati for possession of the property urging that this adoption was invalid The Courts below held it to be valid in law, on the ground that, though Patvati's adoption was not one to the last male holder, still that would not make it spiritually invalid, and, as her adoption did not divest any estate vested in third parties and was derogatory of no other estate but her own, the adoption was perfectly valid. This decision was sought to be supported by the respondent in the High Court arguing that a power to adopt was inherent in every Hindu widow and she may be temporarily incapable of acting upon it; that it was in suspension during Antaji's lifetime and that it revived when she got the estate as a sapinda when her act of adoption had not the effect of divesting any estate but her own Chaubal, J., repelled this argument by the following observations at p. 504:

"every one of these considerations applied to the case of the grandmother in the case of Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (3). It may also be noticed that this was exactly the argument urged before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee by Mr. Mayne in Thayammal's case (6), and was not acceded to. I do not think there is any authority for the proposition that the right to adopt is a necessary incident of inheritance."

The latest case wherein the view taken in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (23) has been applied by the same Court was in Bassangowda v Rudrappa (33) where a stepmother was held disentitled to adopt a son to her own husband although she got the inheritance as the nearest sagotra sapinda of her stepson, after the death of his own mother who directly succeeded to him.

It is true that, in the present case, Krishnaji died leaving behind a widow, a daughter-in-law, who could both continue his line by providing him with a son and a grandson respectively by means of an adoption. But the right of Krishnaji's widow was superior to that of his daughter-in-law : cf. Gopal v. Vishnu (34). She could by making an adoption have provided Krishnaji with a son, who would have been in a position to offer oblations to him and to his two immediate ancestors. The daughter-in-law Bainabai could by making an adoption bring only a grandson into existence, who could offer oblations to his adoptive father Zaboo, the last male holder Krishnaji, and only one of his ancestors That being so, there can be no doubt that the widow of Krishnaji had a superior right of continuing the line of the propositus by adoption, and when she did not choose to exercise that right, for reasons best known to herself, it was not open to his daughter-in-law Bainabai to make an adoption in order to continue the line, as her power of adoption came to an end, and became incapable of execution as soon as the estate vested in her mother-in-law on Krishnaji's death I am, therefore, of opinion that the adoption of Daulat, defendant 1 by Bainabai, in the present case, must be treated as invalid, because of her incompetency to make one The vesting of the estate in Sitabai, on Krishnaji's death, was the limit of Bainabai's power to make an adoption to her own husband, Zaboo ; and that, the limit having been reached as soon as Krishnaji's widow got the inheritance, Bainabai's power was at an end and became incapable of execution. Consequently the consent of Baijabai to the adoption of Daulat, defendant 1 could in no way validate an invalid adoption

For all these reasons my answer to the reference is that the adoption of Daulat, defendant 1, should be held to be invalid in view of the principles enunciated in the Privy Council decisions of Bhooban Moyee v Ram Kishore (4), Padma Coomari v. Court of Wards (5), and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (6).

Second Appeal No 324 of 1927, Decided on 25th October 1928, against judgment of Addl. Dist. Judge, Balaghat, D/- 15th January 1927, in Civ. App. No 38 of 1926

C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 2—Khudkhast land left under grass—Tenants cannot graze free of charge—C. P. Tanancy Act (1920), S. 2—Agriculture.

Keeping land under grass is " agriculture " within the meaning of that term in the Tenancy Act and therefore where a plot is recorded as khudkhast, villagers are not entitled to graze their cattle free of charge therein merely because it is left under grass.

[P 108 C 2 ; P 109 C 1]

Abdul Razak—for Appellant

M R Bobde—for Respondents

Facts.—The defendant-appellant was the Mukaddam Thekedar of the village of Dhorya-Paraswada On 20th September 1925 he impounded four buffaloes and one she-buffalo belonging to the plaintiffs when they were grazing in plot No 89/2 of the village which was recorded ' khudkhast ' at the last settlement. The plaintiff sued for the recovery, the sum spent for getting the cattle released from the pound, and Rs 2 on account of loss caused by the detention of the cattle on the ground that because the mukadam left the plot under grass, the land fell under the expression " Khali Pad " of the wazib-ul-arz, and that the villagers under the rights conferred by that document had therefore a right to graze in the uncultivated khudkhast field.

Prideaux, A. J C.—The question here is one of general importance, namely, whether the village cattle in this village can graze free in uncultivated khudkhast I would ask for a Bench to decide it.

Opinion.—We have no hesitation in answering the reference in the negative. The land in the present case is admittedly recorded as khudkhast, and as such it is within the power of the malguzar to give it out for cultivation, to cultivate it himself or to leave it under grass, and if he likes to do the last, we do not think villagers are entitled to graze their cattle free of charge therein, though they have a right to do so in the fields specified for that purpose in the wajib-ul-arz, or on the waste tracks of the village The expression "khali pad" does not, in our opinion, apply to land of the nature we are dealing with. Keeping land under grass is "agriculture" within the meaning of that term in the Tenancy Act.

First Appeal No. 83 of 1927, Decided on 12th February 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 30th March 1927 in Civil Suit No. 31 of 1926.

 (a) Civil P. C., O. 3, R. 4—Vakalatnama authorizing second grade pleader to appoint other pleader does not empower him to appoint other pleader for filing appeal after suit ends.

Vakalatnama, given to a second grade pleader and authorizing him to appoint another pleader or barrister in case of emergency, does not empower him to appoint a first grade pleader to file an appeal after the suit ends.

(b) Civil P. C. (amended 1923), O. 3, R 4, —Amended rule does not enable second grade pleader, appointed to conduct suit, to appoint another to file appeal in High Court.

The amendment of the Civil P. C. in 1926 has not extended the power of second grade pleaders who cannot act and plead in the High Court and, therefore, the appointment made under sub-S. (2), O. 3, R. 4 will not enable such a pleader to appoint another pleader to file an appeal in the High Court.

D. N Choudhry and G R. Deo—for Appellants.

P. N. Rudra—for Respondents.

Judgment. — This appeal was filed on 28th June 1927 by a first grade pleader on the authority of a vakalatnama executed in his favour by a second grade pleader who was authorized by Suratram, the appellant, to appear and conduct the case on his behalf, and in whose favour a vakalatnama was executed on 5th October 1926. This vakalatnama does not specifically authorize the pleader named in it, to file an appeal or to authorize some one also to do so. The portion of the vakalatnama, on which the learned advocate for the appellant relied, runs as follows :—

"Wo is vakalatnama ke sariye se wakil mausuf ko ye bhi ikhtiar hasil rahega ke makaddami sadar men wakt sarurat par doosra Wakil ya Barrister makarrar karen."

It was argued that on the authority of the above condition in the vakalatnama, the pleader appointed by the appellant could engage and authorize another pleader to file the appeal. The terms are quite definite and clear and do not allow any such authorization, as is suggested. The pleader could only appoint another pleader or a barrister, in case of emergency and in that suit. There is no authority to appoint another pleader on behalf of the appellant to file an appeal on the termination of the suit. The fact that the appellant appointed a second grade pleader to conduct this case in the trial Court shows that he did not expect the pleader to act for him in connexion with the appeal to be filed in this Court, after the termination of the suit, because second grade pleaders cannot appear and act in this Court We therefore hold that the vakalatnama given to the pleader on 5th October 1926 by the appellant did not contain any authority, authorizing the pleader to file an appeal in this Court.

It was also argued that the appointment of the pleader continued, until all proceedings in the suit were ended, so far as regards the client, and this appeal, according to the amendment of R. 4. O. 3, Sch. 1, Civil P C, as contained in Act No 22 of 1926, was a proceeding in the suit The amendment of the Code has not extended the power of second grade pleaders who cannot act and plead in this Court and, therefore, the appointment made under sub-S (2), O. 3, R. 4, Civil P C will not enable the pleader to appoint another pleader to file an appeal in this Court.

It was next suggested that the pleader appointed on 5th October 1926 was a recognized agent who could engage a pleader on behalf of the appellant. We have already pointed out in para. 1 of this judgment that the pleader had no authority to appoint another pleader. The authorized agent could not possibly have any more authority than what was given to him by the power-of-attorney and as the power-of-attorney did not empower the agent to appoint a pleader to file an appeal, the pleader as a recognized agent, could not authorize another pleader to file an appeal. We therefore hold that the pleader who filed the appeal in this Court, had no authority on behalf of the appellant to file the appeal and, therefore, the appeal was not properly presented.

An application was made, on the date of hearing, asking this Court to condone the delay and to allow the appellant to file a vakalatnama. It appears from the application that the appellant did not sign any vakalatnama to be given to the pleader, who was to be engaged at Nagpur and did not take any steps to see that he had authorized any one to file the appeal on his behalf We do not find any sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation and therefore reject the application The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs. We fix Rs. 100 as pleader's fees in this case.

Y V Jakatdar—for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—In the trial Court the plaintiff's suit for possession of Suit No. 89/1 of mouza Ava Yunaspur and Suit No. 19 of mouza Shewaga Khurda was dismissed on the ground that the sale-deed in his favour, dated 12th May 1920, was bogus and fraudulent. This decision was reversed on appeal, and the present appellants, Laxman Singh and Shankar are now appealing against the decision of the lower appellate Court They have each purchased one of the fields, but their purchases were subsequent to the alleged sale to the plaintiff Binraj.

On the date fixed for hearing, an additional ground of appeal was raised on behalf of the appellants, urging that the sale to the plaintiff should have been held void under S. 64, Civil P. C , on the ground that the deed was registered during the attachment of Suit No. 89/1 ; but the ground was subsequently withdrawn when it was found that the actual fact was that registration was effected before the attachment.

The lower appellate Court has found that Binraj, the plaintiff, purchased the fields from Totaram in good faith and for consideration. The first question is whether its finding of fact can be questioned in second appeal. It is urged that it is not the lower appellate Court's findings of fact that are being attacked but the inferences drawn by it from the facts it has found ; but it seems to me that these inferences are no less findings of fact than the findings on which they are based. It has been held in Ishan Chunder Das v. Bishu Sirdar (1), which, like the present case, was a case under S. 53, T. P. Act, that where the lower appellate Court arrives at a conclusion, which is an inference based upon an erroneous view of law, the judgment is open to question in second appeal. In the present case, the only erroneous view of law that the lower appellate Court can be argued to have taken is as regards the burden of proving the good faith of the sale in favour of the plaintiff All that the lower Court concludes on the point of good faith is that "it has not been proved that the appellant," that is Binraj, "was a party to the fraud, if any, on the part of respondent 2," that is, Totaram

It is urged that Binraj must have known of the other debts owed by Totaram and, as the sale in his favour covered all Totaram's immovable property, he must have known that the sale in his favour would defeat the other creditors. But even assuming that he had that knowledge, it does not follow that he is not a purchaser in good faith. The consideration for the sale to him was part satisfaction of a debt due to him from Totaram, and, in the case I have cited above (p 829), it has been said :

"Where transferee is a creditor of the transferrer, and accepts the transfer in satisfaction of the debt due to him, though with the knowledge that his doing so has the effect of defeating other creditors of the transferrer, the transfer may come within the last paragraph of S. 53, T. P. Act."

In that case the Court was not required to give a more definite finding on the point; but in Lala Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahoo (2) it has been definitely held that a preferential transfer of property to one creditor cannot be declared fraudulent as to other creditors, although the debtor in making it intended to defeat their claims and the creditor had knowledge of such intention, if the only purpose of the creditor is to secure his debt and the property is not worth materially more than the amount of the debt. Accepting that view, I hold that Binraj in the present case is prima facie a transferee in good faith, and that it was for the parties who allege want of good faith on his part to prove it. That being so, there is no erroneous view of law taken by the lower Court which entitles me to interfere in second appeal with its findings of fact The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 3 of 1929, Decided on 4th January 1929, against order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 10th November 1928.

Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Para. 21—Decree in terms of award cannot be challenged in appeal on ground of fraud—Remedy is separate suit—S 151 should not be applied—Civil P. C., S. 151.

A decree passed in terms of award cannot be challenged in appeal on the ground of fraud, nor can it be set aside by the Court by virtue of its inherent powers under S. 151. The remedy of the party lies by a separate suit. A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 212, Appl. [P 111 C 2]

G R. Pradhan—for Applicant.

Order.—I have heard the pleader for the appellant in this case but it seems to me that the present appeal is clearly barred under para. 21, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. Sub-para. 2 thereof only allows an appeal in a case like the present where the decree is in excess of and is not in accordance with the award The applicant's case in attempting to attack the preliminary decree is that it was obtained by fraud. That is obviously not a ground which can be considered under the rule in question ; clearly, the appellant's remedy is by a separate suit. To attempt to invoke S 151, Civil P. C. is an equally futile suggestion I am in full agreement with the decision of Hallifax, A. J. C, in Sadasheo Rao v. Umaji (1), in that connexion

It has been suggested that, in any event, the appeal might be treated as an application for revision. There is no prima facie reason, either technically or on merits, for allowing this to be done and I am wholly unable to see any ground for allowing the appeal to go further. It is clearly barred for the reasons stated above and, if the appellant has any remedy, it is by a separate suit.

The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondent.

Second Appeal No. 710 of 1927, Decided on 12th February 1929 from decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Damoh, D/- 15th September 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1927.

C. P. Tenancy Act, (1920), S. 37—Occupancy rights in malik makbuza acquired before 1884 can be extinguished by S. 37—Such occupancy tenant if not recorded in last settlement before 1920 is a sub-tenant.

Though occupancy rights acquired before the 1st January 1884 were left untouched by Act 9 of 1883 (as amended) they can be extinguished under S. 37 of Act of 1920. The intention of S. 37, as regards occupancy rights under a malik makbuza is that, though a person might have acquired such rights, yet, if he was not recorded in the settlement records of the last settlement made before the Tenancy Act of 1920 came into force, he would be deemed to be a sub-tenant. 6 C. P. L. R. 101; 8 N. L. R. 39 and A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 227, Expl. [P 112 C 2]

N. G. Bose—for Appellant.

R. K. Manohar — for Respondents 1 and 2.

Judgment. — The appellant in this case has been held to be a sub-tenant of the respondents, who are malik makbuza holders, and the latter have been given a decree for ejectment against him.

He claims to be an occupancy tenant and he bases that claim upon the allegation that he held the land as tenant for more than 12 years before 1st January 1884, the date on which the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 9 of 1883, came into force. It has been held in Sheoram v. Raghoba (1) and Tejsingh v. Lalji (2) that under Act 9 of 1883 (as amended with retrospective effect by Acts 16 and 17 of 1889) no person could become an occupancy tenant of a malik makbuza from and after 1st January 1884, but that the status of a person who was already the occupancy tenant of a malik makbuza before that date remained unaffected. The appellant's case is that by his possession prior to 1st January 1884 he acquired a vested right which could not be taken away by subsequent legislation ; and, therefore, that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that he was a sub-tenant, and not an occupancy tenant, because his case falls under the definition of "sub-tenant" in S. 37, Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1920.

I have been referred to Hindusingh v. Mangal (3), in which it is laid down that, unless an intention to the contrary is clear, an act is to be construed as operating only on cases or facts which come into existence after the Act, and not retrospectively on cases which had come into existence after the Act. But this ruling cannot be applied to S. 37, Tenancy Act of 1920. As already pointed out, it has not been possible to acquire occupancy rights under a malik makbuza after 1st January 1884. Though such rights acquired before that date were left untouched by Act 9 of 1883 (as amended), it is clear from the wording of S. 37 of the Act of 1920 that they can be extinguished under that section. If this was not the intention of the legislature, the section would simply have provided that > "any person, who holds as a tenant land from a malik makbuza and who is not an absolute occupancy tenant or an occupancy tenant, shall be deemed to be a sub-tenant of such land."

A reference to the settlement records of the last settlement made before the Act came into force would have been meaningless, and the fact that reference has been made seems to me to show clearly that the intention of S. 37, as regards occupancy rights under a malik makbuza, is that, though a person might have acquired such rights, yet, if he was not recorded in the settlement records of the last settlement made before the Tenancy Act of 1920 came into force, he would be deemed to be a sub-tenant. Even assuming, then, that the appellant had acquired occupancy rights, as he alleges, prior to 1st January 1884, he must now be deemed to be a sub-tenant, because he was not recorded as an occupancy tenant in the last settlement made before the Tenancy Act of 1920 came into force.

The lower Court's decision, is, in my opinion, correct, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Judgment—The judgment in this appeal will govern the disposal of Criminal Appeal No. 266 (Mohanlal v. Emperor), Criminal Appeal No. 271 (Bachhusingh v. Emperor) and of Criminal Reference No. 385 of 1928 (Emperor v. Harilal).

Seven accused were prosecuted for rioting and for offence committed in the course of the rioting. The three applicants have been convicted. Harilal was acquitted by the jury which tried one of the offences, and the Judge disagreeing with the Jury has referred the case ; the remaining accused were acquitted.

The counsel for the appellant and for Harilal do not challenge the finding that a riot took place in Sitabaldi on 5th September 1927. It is urged by the counsel for Bachoosingh that Yusuf (P W. 6) may not have been injured in this riot, but Yusuf did receive injuries and I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that his story of the manner in which he received these injuries is reliabe . Yusuf has all along stated that he received injuries in this riot and it is most improbable that a person who received injuries should, from the beginning, assert he received injuries at a totally different place and time, thereby making no attempt to assist in the conviction of the persons who had injured him. The other counsel who appeared did not contest the finding that the story of the witnesses who have been believed is a fairly correct account of the manner in which they were injured.

I hold, then, that the evidence on which the Sessions Judge relies furnishes a fairly correct account of the manner in which the witnesses received their injuries. I believe also that the witnesses would be certain to mention the names of any of their assailants whom they recognised. It is however, prima facie not improbable that if a witness recognised none of his assailants he might mention the names of persons whom he thought likely to have taken part in the assault, or if he recognised some assailants, might add the names of such other persons.

The question, then, for consideration is whether the witnesses, who mentioned the persons whose cases I am considering, are to be believed on this point. (Here the judgment discusses evidence and confirming the conviction of Ramdayal under S. 147 Penal Code, and setting aside the conviction of Bachchusingh, it proceeds). I next deal with the appeal of Mohanlal. The reasons for Mohanlal's conviction are given in para. 7 of the trial Court's judgment This is based on the evidence of Hasul (P. W. 12) : the learned Judge remarks that there is no independent evidence to corroborate Hasul. There is very strong evidence that Hasul and Mohanlal were on bad terms. In 1919 Harilal's father filed a criminal complaint against Hasul's brother Ex. D-35 shows that Harilal, some three months before the riot, reported that Rasul had encroached upon the public road. Ex. D-36 shows that this complaint which eventually resulted in their having to remove a substantial construction, affected both brothers. It is most probable that at the time of riot Rasul and Hasul knew of the complaint ; Hasul was living with his brother Rasul. The police reports (Exs. P-3 and P-4) and the evidence of Mr Kane clearly shows that there was a heated quarrel between Harilal on one side and Rasul and Hasus on the other on the evening previous to the attacks on Rasul and Hasul. Hasul has not contented himself with stating that Mohanlal caused grievous hurt to him but has also stated that he saw Mohanlal setting fire to the roof of his house and this evidence has been considered to be false for good reasons by the trial Judge. The trial Judge has believed Hasul's evidence because Hasul received grievous hurt, but, as I have stated above, a man who has received grievous hurt may well add the names of his enemies whom he thinks likely to have been concerned in the riot to the names of any persons whom he recognised. The trial Judge is mistaken in thinking that the identification of Mohanlal by Hasul at a parade adds weight to Hasul's evidence when it is clear that Hasul knew Mohanlal well Again while it may well be that the existence of enmity between witnesses and accused renders it more probable that the accused attacked the witnesses than that he is falsely implicated, this is not material. A Judge has not to decide whether the prosecution story is the more probable but whether or not there has been definite and convincing proof The evidence of Hasul is then insufficient to justify the conviction of Mohanlal and I acquit Mohanlal.

I next come to the reference regarding Harilal. Harilal was acquitted by the jury and I see no reason to dissent from the principles laid down in Emperor v. Kankaya (1), that this Court should interfere only when the verdict of the jury is obviously perverse or manifestly wrong or unreasonable The principle laid down in Emperor v. Ram Chandra Roy (2), does appear somewhat different, but it seems clear that the High Court cannot treat a reference under S 307, Criminal P. C, in the same way as it deals with an appeal from a conviction by a Judge sitting without a jury, and with the greatest respect I express my opinion that the principle laid down by the Judges who decided this case results in a most identical treatment of an appeal and a reference The evidence against Harilal is considered in para 6 of the order of reference Rasul was very seriously injured and in a statement made to Mr. Chaoji the day after the assault he has implicated Harilal. There can be no doubt that in that statement he would implicate the persons whom he had recognized, but the prosecution story is that the mob which entered Rasul's house had come to the locality in pursuit of Mahomed Yusuf Many of the persons composing of that mob were strangers to the locality. Rasul has stated that they attacked his house when a neighbour told them that it was the house of a Mahomedan. It is quite possible then that he (Hasul) recognised few or any of his assailants. In such circumstances it is likely that he might mention the name of the person with whom he had a bitter quarrel a night before.

The jury has considered that Rasul is a most unreliable witness and a perusal of his evidence goes far to justify this opinion He says that the report of the previous night's quarrel (Ex. P-3) was wrongly recordsd, he remembers nothing of the statement made to Mr. Chaoji on 6th September 1927, the apparent reason being that in this statement he said that his sons were not present and he now desires that their evidence should be believed. Similarly, he says that he was never examined by a Police Officer

Hasul's evidence does not appear to be more convincing than that of Rasul Hasul has stated that he does not know of any enmity between Harilal and his brother Mohanlal on the one side and Rasul on the other He stated that Mohanlal was setting fire to the roof of his house at the time of the attack on Rasul This statement has been considered to be false by the Sessions Judge. Hasul's statement that Harilal took part in the beating of Rasul does not go far to show that Rasul's statement to the same effect is true It is not the case that each has told a detailed story and there is agreement in the details There is no doubt that Rasul was attacked and if Rasul makes a bold statement that Harilal was in the same, it is naturally easy for his brother to support this statement whether it be true or not

In my opinion then the jury cannot be considered to have come to a manifestly wrong conclusion when they held that the evidence against Harilal was unworthy of belief I, therefore, acquit Harilal.

The trial Judge when charging the jury directed them, if they found that the accused, who was charged with an offence punishable under S. 459 that whilst committing housebreaking he caused grievous hurt, was not guilty under S. 459, to find whether he was guilty of grievous hurt under S. 325. The verdict of the jury was that the accused was guilty of no offence. The trial Judge agreed with the jury that no offence had been comitted under S. 459 but was of opinion that he had committed an offence under S. 325.

Held: that the verdict of the jury on the charge framed included the verdict of the minor offence under S. 325 and so the Judge was entitled to refer the case under S. 307. 41 Cal. 662, Dist. [P 115 C 1, 2]

G. P. Dick —for Applicant

P. S. Kotval—for Non-Applicant.

Judgment —Harilal was charged with an offence punishable under S 459, I. P. C, that whilst committing housebreaking he caused grievous hurt to Rasul. The trial Judge when charging the jury directed them, if they found that Harilal was not guilty under S 459, I. P C., to find whether he was guilty of grievous hurt to Rasul under S 325. The verdict of the jury was that Harilal was guilty of no offence. The trial Judge agreed with the jury that no offence had been committed under S 459, I. P. C, but was of opinion that Harilal had committed an offence under S 325 and submitted the case in accordance with the provisions of S. 307, Criminal P. C, to this Court.

A preliminary objection has been taken that S. 307 does not authorize the submission of the case in respect of Harilal to this Court. The argument is that it is only when a Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors on a charge on which any accused person has been tried that he can submit the case; and in this case the Judge agreed with the verdict of acquittal on the charge framed. Now, S 238, Criminal P C, made it lawful for the jury to return a verdict that Harilal was guilty of the minor offence punishable under S. 325, I. P. C. It was necessary in view of the Judge's charge to the jury that their verdict should include a decision whether Harilal was guilty of the minor offence or not. Their verdict on the charge framed did include such a decision and the Sessions Judge, as he disagreed with this decision disagreed with the verdict of the jury.

The fact that the Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury on the charge framed is made still more clear by consideration of what the result would have been had the jury convicted Harilal of the minor offence and had the Judge been of opinion that Harilal had committed no offence. It is obvious that the Sessions Judge would have had to deal in some manner with the legal verdict of the jury and the Criminal Procedure Code provides no other course than submittal of the case to the High Court.

The counsel for the accused has referred me to Emperor v. Madan Mandal (1), but in that case the verdict of the jury was that the accused had not committed the offence of which he was charged but had committed an offence of which they had no power to convict him. Clearly this was a verdict of acquittal and the opinion of the jury on a point which did not arise had to be ignored.

I have therefore to deal with the reference on the merits. For the reasons given in my judgment in Ramdayal v Emperor (2), delivered to-day, I acquit Harilal

D. N. Choudhry—for Appellants.

G. R. Deo—for Respondent.

Judgment—There are two points for decision in this appeal, the first being whether the plaintiff-respondent's claim to possession of his deceased father's occupancy field is barred by time under Art. 1, Sch. 2 to the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1920, and the second, whether the defendant-appellants are entitled to use the unregistered mortgage deed, executed in their favour by the plaintiff-respondent's father, to prove the amount of the consideration paid by them.

As regards the plea of limitation, the decision of Baker, J. C., in Mt. Kasturi v. Baliram (A I R. 1924 Nagpur 222) has been referred to for the proposition that where an intended conveyance is void from the commencement, the possession taken on the strength of it is adverse; but that case is distinguished from the present as it dealt with an invalid gift, while here it is an usufructuary mortgage that is in question. It has also been argued that at least the appellants' possession became adverse on 21st August 1921, 9 years after the date of the unregistered deed, because that deed gave them possession for 9 years only. I have, however, no hesitation in holding that the deed being unregistered is not admissible in evidence in this connexion. In Narayan Bisnoi v Jaswant Singh (1), it has been held that an unregistered document cannot be used to prove the quality of a person's possession; and it seems to me to follow that, if the deed in this case cannot be used to prove the appellants' possession as mortgagees, it cannot be used to prove that they ceased to hold possession in that capacity on a particular date. But it has been said that the respondent's admission of facts in his plaint is sufficient to establish the case for limitation. This admission is said to be contained in paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint. What those paragraphs say is that after the plaintiff's father's death about 7 years previously, that is, about the middle of the year 1919, the plaintiff came to Borsi to obtain possession of his father's fields, that he found the defendant-appellants in possession and learnt from them that they had been given possession for 9 years, in lieu of interest on a debt of Rs. 200 owed to them by the plaintiff's father and that the plaintiff accepted this position and left them in possession. Para. 6 of the plaint states that in 1926 the plaintiff again asked the defendants for possession, as the period for which they had been given possession had then terminated, and they refused. The suit was brought on 29th July 1926, and clearly the statements made in the plaint do not show adverse possession before that year and, therefore, do not establish the appellants' plea of limitation.

The appellants seek to prove by the unregistered mortgage-deed that the consideration for it was not Rs. 200 as stated in the plaint but Rs. 400. The lower appellate Court has refused to look at the deed for this purpose and has left unaltered the trial Court's decision that the sum payable by the plaintiff-respondent to regain possession is Rs. 240 based on the finding that Rs. 200 was paid to the respondent's father at the time of the mortgage and Rs 40 on a later bond. In Durgai Lodhi v. Ajab Singh (2), the facts were very similar to those of the present case, though it was one of lease and not of mortgage, and the learned Judicial Commissioner, in holding that the decree for possession should be conditional upon a refund pro tanto by the plaintiffs of the consideration paid for the lease, remarked that a separate suit for damages would lie and that in such a suit the unregistered lease might be given in evidence; but in Balaji Teli v. Mt. Bana Bai (3) an unregistered document was held by the same learned Judge to be inadmissible in a suit for damages based on it, though it would be admissible in a suit for damages for breach of an implied contract to execute a lease.

In the ruling already referred to, Narayan Bisnoi v Jaswant Singh (1), it was laid down that an unregistered instrument, though compulsorily registrable, is admissible to prove a collateral fact but that to be collateral the fact must be independent of or divisible from the purpose to effect which the law requires registration, and the same has been laid down in Kalicharan v. Lal Indar Singh (4). Applying this general principle, I find it impossible to separate the consideration for the mortgage from the purpose to effect which registration is required, that is from the mortgage transaction. It seems to me, moreover, particularly clear in this case that the defendants are seeking to use the unregistered document as evidence of a transaction affecting the property covered by it; for by it they seek to establish the amount they are entitled to as compensation for relinquishing possession of that property. I, therefore, agree with the lower appellate Court that the unregistered mortgage deed cannot be admitted to prove the consideration and the amount adjudged by the trial Court to be payable by the plaintiff-respondent will be left unaltered. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

 (b) Damdupat—Rule of damdupat applies up to date fixed by Court in preliminary decree for sale.

G. V. Deshmukh—for Appellants.

M. R. Pathak—for Respondents.

Judgment.—It is unnecessary to deal at length with some of the contentions raised in the memorandum of appeal. On the first three grounds it was urged that the defendants proved that defendant 1 was of vicious character and had incurred debts for immoral purposes. This ground was not strongly pressed and clearly extremely strong grounds were necessary for interfering with the finding of the Judge, who heard the witnesses that they were unworthy of belief. Good reasons were given for disbelieving these witnesses.

The ground regarding rate of interest needs no consideration as the rule of damdupat prevents this consideration affecting the decree. The ground regarding repayment was not pressed

The counsel for the respondents admits that the fourth ground must succeed. The rule of damdupat applies until the date is removed from the domain of contract, that is, until the date fixed by the Court in the preliminary decree for sale. Interest should not have been added for the period between the institution of the suit and this date. The decree, then, should have been to the effect that the amount due to the plaintiff, on account of principal, interest and costs calculated up to 14th January 1928, was Rs. 5,374 plus Rs. 634-15-8. That date has now passed and it is agreed that time should be extended to a date three months after this date, interest on the sum found due at 8 annas per cent. per mensem being added. Costs of this appeal will be borne as incurred. The respondent agrees that it is useless to order that defendant 1, if he wishes to satisfy the mortgage, should pay a larger sum and the decree will not contain any direction to this effect.

Second Appeal No. 598 of 1927, Decided on 21st February 1929, against decision of Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 29th September 1927.

Hindu Law—Alienation by guardian not for necessity—Disposal of consideration for benefit of minor not proved—Transfer cannot be upheld.

In absence of evidence to show as to how the consideration money was disposed of, a transfer of minor's property by his guardian which is proved not to be for necessity, cannot be upheld as benefiting the minor's estate, because there is no presumption that a debt contracted by a manager of a Hindu family is for the benefit of the family : A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 44 and A I. R. 1925 All. 618, Applied.

Judgment. — Malik Makbuja field No. 117, area 1.88, of mouza Balrampur, tahshil Khandwa, originally belonged to defendants 3 and 4. During their minority their mother sold the same to defendants 1 and 2 by a sale-deed dated 26th March 1918 for Rs 200 for alleged legal necessity as specified in the said deed of sale. After attaining majority defendants 3 and 4 sold the same field to the plaintiff on 16th January 1926 for Rs. 300 The plaintiff, therefore, brought the present suit for cancellation of the sale-deed dated 26th March 1918 and for recovery of possession of the field as against defendants 1 and 2, who were in possession. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that, as the sale was for legal necessity and benefit to the minors, it was binding upon them and they could not, therefore, re-sell the property to the plaintiff

Both the Courts below have concurrently held that the legal necessity as specified in the recitals in the sale-deed and the pleadings was not proved, but dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the sale benefited the estate and the minors and was, therefore, binding on them.

In his judgment the learned District Judge states as follows on this point :

"I agree, however, with the argument of the Subordinate Judge in para. 9 of his judgment in support of his finding that the sale was not for necessity, in as much as the debts of the deceased father of the minors, which purported to be the necessity for which the sale-deed was executed were satisfied in other ways and as the other property of the minors was quite sufficient to provide for their maintenance. Nevertheless, prima facie it would be to the advantage to the joint family, consisting of a widow and two minor children to dispose of an old field 20 miles away from their other property, owing to the difficulty in properly managing such field. This fact having been proved by defendant 1 the burden of proof shifted to the plaintiff to show that in spite of the distance, nevertheless, the property was being quite efficiently managed by Mt. Nani Bai, and, therefore, it was not to the advantage of the estate to sell this property. The only evidence on this point is the statement by P. W. 4, Bagwan, the lambardar of Balrampure, who states that, when Hari was sub-tenant of the field he used to pay the rent. As, however, Hari is the son of this witness' wife's brother I do not consider that his statement can be completely relied upon. Hari could, very well, have produced his receipt books to prove that he had paid the rent and not Mt. Nani Bai. Hence, I am of opinion, that he has not discharged this burden. The field was previously sold for Rs. 200 and the minors have again got Rs. 200 from its sale to Hari. It cannot be said that Mt. Nani Bai sold the field for inadequate value. I am, therefore, of opinion that the finding of the Subordinate Judge to the effect that the sale was for the benefit of the minors is correct."

The plaintiff comes up in second appeal and his learned advocate, while not challenging the adverse findings of fact as to legal necessity arrived at by the Courts below, urges that there being no evidence on record that the consideration of Rs 200, which was paid to the mother of the defendants 3 and 4 as manager, was either added to the estate of the minors or spent by her in improving the same the findings arrived at by the two lower Courts that the estate was benefited by the transaction could not be sustained. The learned pleader for the respondents frankly admitted that there was not an iota of evidence to show that Rs 200 received by the mother as consideration went really to benefit the estate, but he asked this Court to presume that which the Courts below evidently did.

In Khazana Mal v. Jagan Nath (1) it has been held that there is no presumption that a debt contracted by the manager of a Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the family. In Jagmohan Agrahri v. Prag Ahir (2) such a transaction by the manager was upheld because it was proved that the consideration received was, as a matter of fact, employed in the extension of the family business which was not of a speculative nature though it had subsequently failed. Admittedly, there being no evidence on the point as to how the consideration of Rs 200 was disposed of by the mother manager, the findings arrived at by the Courts below that the estate of the minors was really benefited cannot be upheld. I, therefore, allow the appeal and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in all the three Courts

Miscellaneous Appeal No 34-B of 1928, Decided on 15th December 1928, against order D/- 3rd November 1928 confirming the ex parte order D/- 31st Octobor 1928, passed in Misc. Judl. Case No. 112 of 1928 by District Judge, Akola.

Guardians and Wards Act (8 of 1890), S. 12—Order appointing a receiver is one under O. 40, R. 1 and is appealable—Civil P. C., O. 40, R. 1.

As an application under S. 12, Guardians and Wards Act, is a proceeding in Court of civil jurisdiction, it is competent to the District Judge to appoint a receiver in such a proceeding under Civil P. C., O. 40, R. 1, and an order passed thereunder is appealable as provided under O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (s) : 36 Bom. 20 and A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 489, Foll. ; A.I.R. 1924 All. 682, Expl. [P 119 C 2 ; P 120 C 1]

G V. Deshmukh and S A. Sohani—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and M N Deshmukh—for Respondent.

Judgment — The appellant is the widowed mother of her minor son Narayan and the respondent is her mother-in-law. While the appellant is a young woman of about 23 years of age, the respondent is a very old woman over 55 It appears that the appellant has a brother Shankar Rao whose word reigns supreme in the management of the affairs of the minor's estate Naturally, Janabai the grandmother of the minor resents it, and, consequently, desires that the minor's estate should no longer remain under the management of her daughter-in-law Godubai Various acts of alleged waste and mismanagement by Shankar Rao which led to the institution of these proceedings for the appointment of a proper guardian for the minor's property have been set forth in the application.

Soon after this application was made by Janabai, the District Judge was moved for appointing a receiver to take charge of the minor's estate, pending the disposal of the application for appointment of guardian. The District Judge made an order appointing Mr. B. C. Thakar, Pleader, as a temporary receiver. It is against this order dated 3rd November 1928 for the appointment of the receiver that the appellant Godubai has come up in appeal to this Court contending that the lower Court acted wrongly and without jurisdiction in passing the same.

I was asked to stay the carrying out of the order, pending the decision of this appeal. I, however, declined to grant an unqualified and unconditional stay of the order, but, directed that, if the appellant without prejudice to her right to press the appeal, be prepared to be accountable to the receiver for the crops or income she would collect pending the decision of this appeal, the Court below should permit her to do so, subject to her giving solvent security for the probable value of the crops and the income she was likely to collect But I understand that she has not chosen to give the necessary security, and consequently, the receiver's management has come into force.

The respondent raises a preliminary objection that the order for the appointment of the receiver heing one purporting to be passed under S. 12, Guardians and Wards Act, there is no appeal against it, under S 47, of the said Act, and that the present appeal should, therefore, be thrown out as incompetent In answer to this contention the appellant's learned counsel urges that the order for the appointment of the receiver must be deemed to have been passed under O. 40, R 1, Civil P C., which must, by virtue of S. 141 of the Code, be read as applicable to proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act, and that, as O. 43, R 1, Cl. (s) expressly provides for an appeal against an order passed under O. 40, R. 1, Civil P C, the present appeal is competent Reliance is placed by the appellant in In re Bai Janabai (1), and Chandra v Wati Jagan Nath Singh (2). I have gone through these cases, and I think that, since, an application under S 12, Guardian and Wards Act (8 of 1890) is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction, it is competent to the District Judge, to appoint a receiver in such a proceeding, under O 40, R 1. The learned Judge who decided the Bombay case has given very good reasons, at pp 26 and 27, in support of his view that a receiver could be so appointed under O. 40, R 1 in proceedings under Guardian and Wards Act The case relied on by the respondent, viz. Chandra Sahai v.

(2) A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 469.

Durga Prasad (3), lends indirect support to the view that the present appeal is competent, because, in that case also, it was laid down that, no right of appeal can be claimed by virtue of S 141, Civil P. C., when O. 43 of the Code makes no provision for such an appeal Here, as we know, O. 43, R 1, Cl (s) makes express provision for an appeal against an order passed under O 40, R 1. For these reasons I overrule the preliminary objection, and hold that, the appeal is competent. In this view of the case, it is not necessary for me to treat this appeal as a revision, and deal with it, under S. 115, Civil P C.

As to the merits, little or nothing need be said at this stage, as the main application for the appointment of the guardian for the minor's property is yet undisposed of, and I do not wish to prejudge the case in any way. I must, however, say that, as between Mr Thakar who is a pleader, and the appellant, Godubai who has to depend upon her brother, the former must necessarily be a better manager There can be no doubt that these proceedings, whether started with a bona fide intention to secure the welfare of the minor, or for self-aggrandizement, seem to be the result of a mere scramble for power to manage the minor's property, between the two opposing widows and their supporters Under these circumstances, the order of the District Judge, putting in a third party as a receiver and manager, of the minor's estate so far as it may come into his hands, is expected to be in the best interests of the minor I, therefore, see no valid reason to interfere with the merits of the order. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25

Ramchandra Shamrao — Judgment-debtor—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 437 of 1928, Decided on 22nd February 1929, against the order of Second Addl. Dist.-Judge, Burhanpur, D/- 26th July 1928.

C. P. Tenancy Act, S. 39—No notice or order of ejectment is necessary.

No notice and no order of ejectment is necessary after the passing of a decree for arrears before actual ejectment under S. 39 as it is under S. 24. [P 121 C 1]

W. R Puranik and Kaskhedikar—for Appellant.

S. B. Gokhale—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The appellant Ramlal, an occupancy tenant, obtained a decree for Rs. 117-15-0 on account of arrears of rent against Ramchandra, the respondent, a sub-tenant, on 3rd February 1929, in Civil Suit No. 282 of 1926. The decree-holder Ramlal filed an execution application on 11th February 1927 and applied for being put in possession of the holding. He was put in possession on 8th March 1927. The judgment-debtor filed an application on 26th March 1927 purporting to be under S. 151, Civil P. C., and prayed :

"that the warrant of attachment and other orders passed by the Court in respect of the fields be annulled and the execution proceedings of the decree-holder be dismissed as fully satisfied."

The learned Subordinate Judge held :

"that looking to the nature of the decree in the present case, the execution of which could be effected, by ejectment of the sub-tenant as laid down in S. 39, Tenancy Act, there was no irregularity or illegality in the proceedings by which the sub-tenant was ejected from the fields in question," and therefore rejected the application. The learned Additional District Judge for reasons given in para 4 of his judgment, held that the sub-tenant was entitled to a notice before ejectment, and that it was necessary to pass a formal order of ejectment before issuing warrant of possession and ordered that the sub-tenant be restored to possession of the fields, as he had deposited the full decretal amount on 15th March 1927.

It is urged in appeal that no notice and no formal order of ejectment was necessary, and a decree for arrears due in respect of the holding of a sub-tenant could be executed by his ejectment under S. 39, Tenancy Act. The learned advocate for the respondent argued that the word "may" in S. 39, Tenancy Act, gave a discretion to the Court, to order ejectment and the Court before exercising its discretion, must issue a notice to the tenant, so that the tenant may get an opportunity of paying the arrears and also may put forward facts, on account of which ejectment of the tenant may be disallowed. It was also suggested that these proceedings after the passing of the decree and before the passing of the order of ejectment, would be under S. 47, Civil P. C., because the question before the Court would be between the parties to the suit and relating to the execution of the decree. There is nothing in S. 39, Tenancy Act, to show that the matter of ejectment is discretionary and can be refused. The section would have been worded differently if any such authority was intended to be given to the civil Court The decree-holder, after obtaining the decree, may execute the decree by ejecting the sub-tenant, or by attaching and selling his property in order to realize the amount decreed or may apply for both. The provision about notice and formal order of ejectment would have been inserted in the section if it was ever intended that the sub-tenant should have a further opportunity of paying rent, after the passing of the decree, if the tenant intended to proceed by ejecting the sub-tenant. The learned Additional District Judge was wrong in thinking that under S 39, Tenancy Act, an order of ejectment must be passed, because under S 24 of the said Act the revenue officer has to issue a notice and then pass an order of ejectment The very fact that such a procedure was laid down in S 24 and was not laid down in S. 39, is a clear indication that no notice and no order of ejectment is necessary in the case of a sub-tenant. Ordinarily an application for the execution of a decree in a civil Court must be made as laid down in O 21, R. 11, Civil P. C., but in the case of execution applications under the Tenancy Act the application must be made as laid down in S. 84, Tenancy Act. The application made in this case is in accordance with law and the ejectment of the sub-tenant, under S. 39, Tenancy Act was correct.

The order, dated 26th July 1928, is therefore set aside and reversed and the order of the Subordinate Judge is restored. The appeal is allowed with costs. I fix Rs 10 as pleader's fees in this case.

Abdul Razak and W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

M. B. Marathe—for Respondents

Judgment. — The plaintiff-appellant, Kulsambi, is the wife of defendant 1, Bilankhan. The other 5 defendants held decrees against Bilankhan and in execution thereof attached the property now in suit, consisting of five fields and some buildings in mouza Adula Bazar, in the Daryapur Taluk. Kulsambi, the plaintiff, preferred objections in the execution proceedings; but they were disallowed and she has now brought her suit under O. 21, R. 63, for a declaration that the property is hers and in her possession and is not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decrees obtained by defendants 2 to 6 against defendant 1.

The plaintiff bases her claim to the property in suit on a decree in her favour passed by the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, on 13th August 1925 in Civil Suit No. 15 of 1925. The circumstances in which this decree came to be passed, according to the plaint, are as follows: At the time of her marriage to Bilankhan Kulsambi's dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000, 100 ashrafis and 50 dinars Subsequently she lent to her husband Rs. 1,000 When she demanded from her husband payment of her dower and repayment of the loan, he raised objections and their dispute was referred to two arbitrators, Mr. Sharfuddin, pleader of Amraoti, and Gulam Dastagirkhan of Kholapur These arbitrators were unable to agree and the matter was referred to an umpire, Syed Muzaffar Husain, pleader of Amraoti. A copy of his award has been filed as Ex P. 6 It shows that the plaintiff and her husband were agreed as to the amount of dower and as to the payment by the plaintiff to her husband of Rs. 1,000, but differed as to the nature of the dower, that is, whether it was prompt or deferred, and as to whether the Rs 1,000 had been given as a loan or a gift. The umpire decided that the dower was prompt and that the Rs 1,000 was a loan and accordingly found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs 53,625. He awarded her the property now in suit in full satisfaction of her claim and directed her to be put in possession as full owner, subject to the right of a mortgagee and to her allowing Rs. 400 annually and a house to reside in to her husband during his lifetime In terms of this award the decree by the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, was passed.

The lower Court has found that the amount of the plaintiff's dower was not as stated by her in the plaint and as admitted by her husband in the arbitration proceedings, but that it was Rs 5,000, 10 ashrafis and 2 dinars. That Court has also found that it was not settled whether the dower was prompt or deferred. It has further found that the award in the arbitration proceedings was not obtained bona fide but fraudulently On these findings the plaintiff't suit has been dismissed.

As regards the amount of the dower, we are not prepared to accept the lower Court's finding Apart from the evidence of the plaintiff herself, three witnesses, Muhammad Azam (P. W. 1), Nur Mohammad (P W. 3) and Mohammad Nazim (P. W. 4), have deposed that the sum fixed was Rs. 50,000 Muhammad Azam says that 100 ashrafis and 50 dinars were also to be paid. Muhammad Nazim apparently does not remember how many dinars were to be paid ; and Nur Muhammad differs as to the number of ashrafis and dinars from the plaintiff and Muhammad Azam ; but we agree that the discrepancies on this point are immaterial and we are not prepared to follow the lower Court in rejecting the evidence because it shows the mehar or dower to have been fixed at an absurdly high figure : it is by no means uncommon for the dower of a Muhammadan wife to be fixed at a figure which is out of all proportion to the husband's means Nor can we accept the evidence of Dulekhan (D. W 1) as sufficient to rebut that of the plaintiff's witnesses. It is on his evidence that the lower Court has found that the dower was settled at Rs. 5,000, 10 ashrafis and 2 dinars, and that it was not settled whether it was to be prompt or deferred. It is true that he is a step-brother of the plaintiff ; but on his own evidence he was only 14 years of age when the plaintiff was married to defendant 1 and his knowledge as to the dower may well be doubted. It cannot be assumed that his evidence is true because it is against the interest of a near relative . as has been pointed out on behalf of the plaintiff, he appears to be at odds with his sister over her claim to a share in their father's property.

We are prepared, then, to accept the evidence that the dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000, 100 ashrafis and 50 dinars. We are also prepared to accept the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses that it was agreed that the dower was to be prompt ; and it is unnecessary for us to examine the question, whether, in the event of there being no stipulation as to the nature of the dower, as the lower Court finds, the whole of it must be regarded as prompt From one point of view the question, whether the dower was to be prompt or deferred, is of minor importance, as there is the authority of Suba Bibi v. Balgobind Das (1) for holding that satisfaction of a deferred dower-debt can be a valid consideration for a transfer between the husband and the wife.

The finding, however, that ostensibly there was valid consideration for the transfer of the property in suit from Bilankhan to Kulsambi does not, however, conclude the case. We have been referred to Raja Seth Gokuldas v. Mt. Jankee (2), Narayan Ganesh v. Bhioraj (3) and Ghunsham Das v. Umapershad (4) for the proposition that, in a suit instituted under O. 21, R. 63, the onus of establishing that the transaction on which the suit is based was entered into in good faith lies on the plaintiff. It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that those decisions do not refer to cases under the Mahomedan Law, but there is no force in that contention, as they are of general application.

The question, then, is whether the plaintiff has proved good faith and for this she has relied almost entirely upon the arbitration proceedings and the award therein given. It has been urged in this connexion that there is no reason to suspect that the award was, as the lower Court has held, not obtained bona fide, and reference has been made to the status of the arbitrators and the umpire. There is, however, no question of the bona fides of these gentlemen; they dealt with the case as it was put before them by the plaintiff and her husband. As far as the matter appeared to them, there was a real dispute to decide and there were admissions by the parties and evidence to support the conclusion that was eventually arrived at. The question is whether the representation of the case to them was bona fide and correct. (The judgment then discussed evidence and proceeded.) We hold, then, that the transfer to Kulsambi by Bilankhan was through collusive arbitration proceedings, which were not justified by the existence of any dispute and in which the award was obtained by misrepresentation and concealment of material facts, that there was no real consideration for the transfer, that it has not been given effect to in the matter of possession and, in fine, that the transfer was not bona fide but fictitious.

This concludes the appeal, but there is one argument put forward on behalf of Kulsambi to which reference must be made. The argument is that a Muhammadan wife is a prior creditor in respect of her dower and has a lien on her husband's property. It is based on the undoubted fact of a widow's lien on her husband's estate which entitles her to retain possession of any property of his of which she has obtained possession lawfully and without force or fraud. As to this argument it is only necessary to say that Kulsambi is not a widow and also that she has not been proved to be in possession.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Non-payment of rent for long period does not raise irrebuttable presumption of rent-free grant.

(b) Landlord and Tenant—Landlord not claiming rent from tenant for number of years does not entitle tenant to refuse rent—Evidence Act, S. 115.

A tenant cannot refuse to pay the rent, because the landlord for a number of years made no claim for rent for the land occupied by the tenant. [P 124 C 1]

G. R. Deo—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The respondent's claim for compensation for the use and occupation of the four sites in the possession of the appellant has been decreed by Sub-Judge, Janjgir, and the decree has been upheld by the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, on 16th December 1927.

The respondent had based his claim for compensation for use and occupation, in case it was found that there was no agreement to pay rent. Nothing was stated why the respondent could not claim rent, though he failed to prove the agreement. Non-payment of rent for a long period will not raise "an irrebuttable presumption that the appellant held the plots under a rent-free grant."

The appellant as a matter of fact never alleged any such grant. The sites over which houses stand are in the abadi of the village Champa of which village the respondent is the zamindar. He is entitled to charge rent for the abadi sites, and the appellant cannot refuse to pay the rent, because the respondent for a number of years made no claim for rent for the land occupied by the appellant. No question of estoppel arises in this case and the claim cannot be time barred.

The respondent has adduced evidence to show that four annas per cubit measured along the road is the rent charged for abadi site in Champa. The appellant has not adduced any evidence on the point. The amount claimed is not excessive The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed under O 41, R 11, Sch. 1, Civil P. C

Nagoji and others— Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 154-B of 1927, Decided on 27th February 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Akola, D/ 10th February 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 62 of 1926.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 120—Dafendant asserting hostile title as permanent tenant for more than six years—Defendants' title recognised by revenue authorities—Plaintiff bringing a declaratory suit to declare defendant as annual tenant—Suit is time barred.

Where a defendant asserted a hostile title as a permanent tenant against the plaintiff six years ago and the same was substantiated by the orders of the revenue authorities, the plaintiff's suit for declaration that defendant was only an annual tenant and not owner as alleged to have been asserted by him is governed by Art. 120 and as such is barred being brought more than six years from revenue Court's order : 31 All. 9, Foll. [P 125 C 1]

(b) Limitation—Question to be decided not inferentially but from facts established.

The questions of limitation cannot be decided inferentially. It is on the facts actually found and not merely upon those alleged in the plaint that limitation has to be computed. [P 125 C 1]

W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde—for Respondents

Judgment.—The plaint in the present case out of which this second appeal arises was filed on 11th November 1925 in the Court of Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Basim. It is of the briefest kind imaginable and states that the field in dispute is the ancestral property of the plaintiff, that he is the present certificate-holder thereof, that the defendants who are in possession of the field are only annual tenants and that because they asserted their title as owners some 1½ months ago it became necessary for the plaintiff to file the present suit for a declaration that the defendants were not the owners but mere annual tenants of the field in dispute.

The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the field had been in possession of their family since over 100 years and long before the Government made a grant of it to the plaintiff's family, and that they had acquired rights of permanent tenants in the field. They further stated that at the Record-of-Rights enquiry in 1914 and later on in 1919 the revenue authorities had rejected the plaintiff's contention and had recognized their status as that of permanent tenants, and had referred the plaintiff, if he was aggrieved, to have the question of title settled by the civil Courts It was, therefore, contended that since a hostile title was asserted by them as far back as the years 1914 and 1919 and not 1½ months ago, as alleged by the plaintiff in the plaint, the present suit for declaration was barred by time

On the strength of Exs. D-1 and D-2, which contain the orders of the revenue authorities dated 6th March 1914 and 29th June 1919 respectively, it is clear that on both the occasions the plaintiff wanted the defendants to be recorded as mere annual tenants but he was not only unsuccessful but was distinctly ordered by the revenue authorities to file civil suits to have the status of the defendants determined. In these orders the defendants were adjudged to be wahiwatdars and permanent tenants.

Both the Courts below have held on the facts above stated, that the present suit was governed by Art. 120 , Limitation Schedule and was barred, having admittedly been filed more than six years after the passing of the last order of the revenue authorities dated 29th June 1919.

The plaintiff has come up in second appeal on the following grounds :

"1 The lower appellate Court erred in holding that plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation and that Art. 120, Lim. Act, applied to the facts of the present case.

2 That on the facts as alleged in the plaint the suit was clearly within time.

3 That further statements should have been taken and parties should have been properly examined."

It is contended that on tha facts alleged in the plaint the suit was within time. But it is on the facts actually found and not merely upon those alleged in the plaint that limitation has to be computed. As I have said above, on both the occasions in 1914 aud 1919 when the question of defendants' status arose they unequivocally asserted the right of permanent tenants to the plaintiff's knowledge and in spite of an adverse decision against him by the revenue authorities and clear directions by them to have the question determined by civil Courts, the plaintiff slept over the matter and brought the present suit on the allegations which are undoubtedly false.

It is also argued that if the plaintiff had sued for possession his claim would have been governed by the 12 years rule under Art. 144 of the Limitation Schedule and if that is so it is not just that the present suit for a mere declaration should be barred under the six years rule of Art 120 ibid. But questions of limitation cannot be decided inferentially. They have to be determined by bringing facts admitted or established within the four corners of a particular article of the Limitation Schedule. All declaratory suits come under Art. 120 because there is no specific article in the Schedule for such suits. The present case is like the case of Akbar Khan v. Turaban (1) wherein a Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the suit was governed by Art. 120, Limitation Schedule

The 3rd ground of appeal has no force. It is not pointed out in what way the headings have been defective, and what further examination of the parties was necessary which would have brought the present claim within limitation.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The appellants Undria and Mahangia have been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., for committing the murder of Kishorilal on 13th September 1928, and have been sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge, Bhandara. This judgment will govern both the appeals.

The facts of the case have been stated at length in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and, therefore, need not be repeated in this judgment. The appellants did not make any statements in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, and were not prepared to make statements on 7th November 1928, in the Court of Sessions Judge, and made statements on 8th November 1928. Undria stated that he was working near the tree, on which the deceased was sitting and that the deceased did not permit the men who were working there to go home to take their meals and, therefore, they became angry and attacked the deceased. He admitted that he was not on bad terms with any of the prosecution witnesses and suggested that they mentioned his name because he was there. Mahangia stated that the deceased did not allow the men to go home and beat some of them with a branch of the tamarind tree, that the deceased went to the place where he and Undria were working and abusing them, asked them to carry on the work, that the deceased fell down as his shoe got entangled in the branches of the tree and the people assaulted and beat the deceassd at the instigation of Karu and Kushan. He suggested that perhaps Kodya, Jairam and Jhingrya had killed Kishorilal, but could not assign any reason why the prosecution witnesses named him as the assailant and admitted that there was no enmity between him and the prosecution witnesses The appellants thus admit their presence at the place where Kishorilal was assaulted, they give different versions of the marpit, and cannot give any satisfactory explanation as to why the prosecution witnesses, 11 in number, who witnessed the assault, implicate them as the assailants.

The offence took place at Tadgaon at about noon and Arjunia the Kotwar who had witnessed the assault, reported at Arjuni at 12 30 p m., that Undria and Mahangia had assaulted Kishorilal with shovels. The distance between Tadgaon and Arjuni is one mile It is impossible to believe that Arjunia would have mentioned the names of the appellants if they had not assaulted Kishorilal.

The deceased had two cuts and two incised wounds on the head and these have been shown in the diagram sent with the post-mortem report. Assistant Medical Officer Ramchandra (P W 21) opined that injury 1 must have been caused by a weapon like kudali and injury 2 by a phaoda or other instrument which would create a broad mark and injuries 3 and 4 by a phaoda, and that injuries 1 and 2 had entered the brain substance and were dangerous to life. On seeing Arts. C and D, he stated that injury 1 could not be caused by Arts C and D, that injury 2 could be caused by either of the instruments, and that injuries 3 and 4 could be caused by Art D and only by Art C In view of the above evidence, the learned pleader for the appellant Undria argued that Undria could not be held responsible for injury 1, as it could not be caused by the kudali Art C, which was said to be in his hand at the time of the assault. This kudali Art. C was seized by the police on 19th September 1928, that is, six days after the murder There is no doubt as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge in para. 8 of his judgment, that Undria had a kudali in his hand on 13th September 1928 and it is likely that the kudali Art. C which was seized six days after the murder, is not the kudali which Undria had at the time of the assault.

A number of persons were working there at that time and most of them had either phaodas or kudalis and it is, therefore, likely that the witnesses made a mistake about the particular instruments which either of the appellants had at that time. The Kotwar reported that both had phaodas, and it is possible that he may have made a mistake about the particular instrument which either of the appellants had It is clear from the medical evidence that injuries 1 and 2 were inflicted by different instruments, and, therefore, it necessarily follows that these two injuries were not caused by one and the same person, and were caused by both the appellants.

The learned pleader for the appellant Undria stated that there was no evidence on record to show that Undria and Budhia were related Arjunia (P. W. 2) and Paikya (P. W 3) stated that Undria was a cousin of Budhia. It was next argued that S. 34, I P. C.. was not applicable to the case. The simultaneous attack shows that the criminal act was done in furtherance of the common intention. The learned pleader cited Gouridar Namasudra v. Emperor (1), Emperor v. Bhola Singh (2) and Emperor v Chandan Singh (3), in support of the contention that the offence committed by the appellant was one under S. 325, I. P. C., and not under S. 302, I. P C In Emperor v Chandan Singh (3) three persons attacked a fourth with lathis and there was no evidence to show which of them struck the blow which fractured the skull of the deceased. In Emperor v. Bhola Singh (2) the facts were similar, and in Gouridas Namasudra v. Emperor (1), several accused persons struck the deceased several blows with lathis, one of which only was fatal and it was not found who struck the fatal blow. None of these cases, therefore, are of any help in this case In this case the instruments used were dangerous instruments, and all the blows were aimed at the head, with the result that two fatal injuries were caused and these injuries were not caused by one and the same weapon. As they were only two assailants, each of them is responsible for one of the fatal injuries and, therefore, both are guilty under S. 302, I. P. C.

(1) [1903] 36 Cal. 659=2 I. C. 841=13 C. W. N. 680.
(2) [1907] 29 All. 282=4 A.L.J. 207=(1907) A.W. N. 51.
(3) [1918] 40 All. 123=43 I. C. 438=16 A. L. J. 11.

The same points were urged on behalf of the other appellant Mahangia, and it was argued, on the basis of the statement, said to have been made by Paikya to the effect that Dhimar had killed the master, mentioned in the first information report, that the appellant Undria only had assaulted Kishorilal and not Mahangia. In the same report it was also mentioned that Arjunia saw Undria and Mahangia both striking Kishorilal with shovels. The point has no force. The evidence of eyewitnesses had established beyond doubt the fact that the two appellants assaulted Kishorilal with Articles like C and D, and caused two fatal injuries, which resulted in his death. The conviction of the appellants under S. 302, I. P C., is correct. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed

S. W. A. Rizvi—for Appellant

D. W. Choudhry—for Respondent

Judgment —The findings of the first Court which I have to consider are. That the first husband of Mt. Umabai is not proved to have been alive during the time of Umabai's connexion with Dayalgir; Umabai, then, as a permanent concubine is entitled to maintenance out of the estate of the deceased Dayalgir; and Rs. 25 per mensem is the proper amount of such maintenance.

It is first urged that it was for the plaintiff to prove that her husband is dead and that she has failed to give such proof. The plaintiff appears to have suppressed evidence She admits that her mother is alive, and that Manrakhan, her near male relation is also alive She states that Manrakhan had told her that she was married to a Rajput and that she never questioned her mother on the point. Clearly it was the plaintiff's duty to find out from her mother and Manrakhan, the name of her first husband and to make a definite statement that he was dead or had disappeared. As she had not produced this evidence, a presumption arises against her. Again S. 107, Evidence Act, is very clear. Umabai gave her age in the plaint as 35 and it appears that her husband was alive 30 years ago The burden of proof that he was dead, therefore, rested upon her S. 108, Evidence Act, has no application as a wife, who left her husband and is in the keeping of another, is not one of the persons who would naturally hear from him if he were alive. I do not follow the reasons for disbelieving the evidence of the defendant, but even if the evidence of the defendant is unworthy of belief and the plaintiff's husband is not Manna Singh, it was for the plaintiff to show that her husband, whoever he may be, is now dead She has failed to do so and it must be presumed that her husband is still alive.

The lower Court was of opinion that unless her husband was dead the plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance. Counsel on both sides consider that the right of the plaintiff to maintenance as a concubine of a deceased Hindu does not differ on this point from the right of a concubine in Bombay. The law in Bombay does not appear to be settled. In Anandilal Bhagchand v. Chandrabai (1), Shah, Ag. C. J., and Crump, J , held that a kept mistress whose husband was alive was not entitled to maintenance on the death of her paramour: but these Judges in Monghibai v. Nagubai (2) had decided another question regarding the right of a concubine to maintenance and this decision was not approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council: Nagubai v. Monghibai (3) Although their Lordships of the Privy Council had not to deal with the question which I am considering, they expressed approval of the case Ningareddi v. Lakshmawa (4) where it was held that even if the connexion was adulterous, the estate of the paramour might be liable for her maintenance

In Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edn., para 450, it is stated that concubines are entitled to maintenance even though the connexion with them is an adulterous one I respectfully think the reasons given by Shah, Ag. C. J., and Crump, J., that a concubine is entitled to maintenance from her husband that she cannot live a chaste life when her husband is alive at the time of her paramour's death are not entirely satisfactory. In my opinion, then, Mt. Umabai is entitled to maintenance although her husband is alive I add that the maintenance in the circumstance should be on a less generous scale than would be awarded to a widow.

It is next urged that the maintenance awarded is excessive The learned trial Judge has stated that a permanent concubine should not receive more than the bare maintenance which would be awarded to unchaste widow reverted to chastity. The estate of the paramour is encumbered with considerable debts and the learned Judge is clearly wrong in stating that this fact does not affect the claim for maintenance. The existence of debts diminishes the estate out of which the maintenance was to be paid. It seems very probable that the liability to pay Rs. 300 per year in cash would be a very heavy burden on the encumbered estate.

(4) [1902] 26 Bom. 169=3 Bom. L. R. 647.

In cross-objection the respondent has stated that the appellant has lost possession of one village and has effected a second mortgage on the other. I am of opinion that Rs. 10 per mensem will provide for the bare maintenance of the respondent in a village in Raipur District and will cast a fairly heavy burden on the estate. It would be well in such cases if provision for maintenance was made by allotment of some fields, but the parties cannot agree to such an allotment. The decree of the first Court will be varied accordingly The direction that the maintenance should be a charge on the two villages Khaira and Kokada will remain as no more satisfactory charge is possible. Costs of the first Court will be borne in proportion to success and failure and the costs of this appeal will be borne as incurred. Costs of the cross-objection with regard to which there was little argument will also be borne as incurred

A. V. Wazalwar and V. R. Dhok—for Appellant.

S. C. Dutt Chowdhry—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The father of Mt. Chhoti, a Gond, was the occupancy tenant of the fields in suit. He died about 1918. In the jamabandis for the subsequent years Mt. Chhoti was shown as tenant through her guardian Anupi. In 1923 Mt. Patoli, the mother of Mt. Chhoti, executed as guardian of Mt. Chhoti a surrender of the fields. The defendant malguzar obtained possession, but proceedings were taken under S. 100, C. P. Tenancy Act, in the Revenue Courts. The Tahsildar reinstated Mt. Chhoti and his decision was upheld in first appeal but was reversed on second appeal and Mt. Chhoti again lost possession on 31st July 1924. The suit was filed on 19th February 1926 and the main defence was that it was barred by time as it was filed more than two years from the date of the dispossession following the execution of the surrender deed. The suit succeeded in the lower Courts.

It is urged before me that, as the plaintiff regained possession under an erroneous order, her subsequent suit to recover possession had to be filed within two years of the date of the original dispossession. The decisions in Motee Singh v. Rajah Leelanund Singh (1). Sayad Nasrudin v. Venkatesh Prabhu (2), Dagdu v. Kalu (3) and Narayanan Chetty v. Kannammi Achi (4) are cited in support of this contention. It is doubtful whether these decisions are correct. In Rustomji's Law of Limitation (4th Edn. p. 777) the opposite view is held. But it is sufficient for the purpose of this case to say that these rulings refer to cases where a plaintiff regains possession under an erroneous order in a decree of the civil Court. It is now settled law that, if the rightful owner obtains possession by a wrongful entry and is again dispossessed, the limitation for a suit brought by him runs from the later dispossession. In my opinion, it is impossible to distinguish a case where possession is wrongfully obtained with the assistance of a Revenue Officer from a case where possession is obtained by a wrongful entry. I hold, therefore, that the suit was within time

It is next urged that Mt. Patoli was a tenant at the time of the surrender: there is a finding based on good evidence that the malguzar accepted Mt. Chhoti as tenant and this ground cannot be urged in second appeal.

It is next urged that Mt. Patoli's surrender put an end to the tenancy even if no consideration passed. The lower appellate Court has held that, in the absence of evidence regarding the law which the Gonds follow, it must be held that Mt. Chhoti's grandmother, who acted as her guardian, was her legal guardian. I disagree with this finding: in the absence of evidence it can be presumed that according to that law the mother is a preferential guardian to the grandmother although the grandmother was acting as guardian. Mt. Patoli's surrender, however, purported to be made for a consideration of Rs. 600 and it has been held that this consideration has not been proved to have passed. The transaction was not effected with a view to further the interests of the minor and cannot take away the rights of the minor. This ground, therefore, fails.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellant.

Judgment.—The appellant had a decree against him and in execution of that decree his property was attached and sold. He made an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., that the sale should be set aside, but that application was dismissed. Instead of appealing against the order dismissing the application the appellant filed a suit against the auction-purchaser and the decree-holder for cancellation of the sale and for a declaration of his title. The suit was ostensibly under S. 47, Civil P. C. The trial Court held that no suit would lie and that finding has been upheld by the Additional District Judge on appeal. The appellant now prefers this second appeal. The only question to be decided is whether this decision of the Courts below that no suit lay under O. 47, Civil P. C., is correct.

The trial Court has followed the ruling in Jaggan Nath v. Daud (1), and that ruling is on all fours with the present case except that in the Lahore case no suit was filed and the judgment-debtor only attempted to prefer a second appeal which was held to be inadmissible under S. 104, sub-S. (2), Civil P. C. In appeal it is now contended that the suit was not barred under O. 21, R. 92, sub-R. (3), that no application under O. 21, R. 90, was necessary and that the suit was maintainable under S. 47 of the Code. Reliance was placed upon the rulings in Bhagwan Das v. Suraj Prasad (2) and Rajagopala Ayyar v. Ramanujachariar (3), whilst reference was also made to the case reported in Godhaji Rao v. Dnyanoba (4). I am of opinion, however, that none of these cases will really support the appellant The learned counsel for the appellant has referred to p. 225 (of 47 All.) of the Allahabad ruling where there is a discussion with regard to the Rr. 89, 90 and 91, O. 21, and the provisions of O 21, R. 92, sub-R. (3). I find, however, that it was held in the Allahabad case that the fraud alleged was not merely a fraud in publishing or conducting the sale but a definite conspiracy also was alleged. I would quote the following passage:

"Rule 90 applies to the case where there has been material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting a sale. It is true that the plaintiff alleged in the plaint that owing to fraud he was kept in ignorance of the proceedings ending in the sale, but that is only a minor part of his case. He does not seek to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. The plaintiff's case has already been stated It may be reiterated in brief. His case is that there was a conspiracy by which the plaintiff was to be deprived of the property which he had properly purchased on payment."

It is clear, then, that there was a definite allegation of fraud outside the actual publication and conduct of the sale. Similarly in the case in Godhaji Rao v. Dnyanoba (4) there was a definite allegation of fraud and collusion apart from the actual publication and conduct of the sale. It may be noted that in this case no question of the applicability of O. 21, R 90, was considered, and the only question considered was whether O. 21, R. 92 applied; with some hesitation Prideaux, A. J. C., held that it did not apply and that the suit was not barred under O. 21, R. 92, sub-R. (3), following the ruling in Mohamad Najibulla v

(1) A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 592=4 Lah. 243.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 146=47 All. 217.

(3) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 431=47 Mad. 288 (F.B.).

(4) [1917] 1 N. L. J. 184.

Jainarain (5). The case in Rajagopala Ayyar v. Ramanujachariar (3) considers the question of notice under O. 21, R. 22, sub-R. (2), and is not therefore, I think, applicable to the present case.

In the present case the only fraud alleged is that no notice was served upon the judgment-debtor under O. 21, R. 66, and that the judgment-debtor was kept in ignorance of the sale. Apart from this fact, though the Court executing the decree has held that the judgment-debtor was served with a notice under O. 21, R. 66, I would hold on the authority of the ruling in Jaggan Nath v. Daud (1) that the failure to issue notice under O 21. R. 66 is an irregularity in publishing the sale within the meaning of O. 21, R. 90. In any case it is clear, I think, that there was no fraud on the part of either the decree-holder or the purchaser as notice was ordered to issue by the Court and a notice was affixed to the house of the judgment-debtor. The executing Court held that service to be good and the responsibility of holding the service good was that of the Court and no blame could attach either to the decree-holder or to the purchaser. I am clear, then, that no fraud could be alleged against the decree-holder or the purchaser, and even the plaintiff has not alleged, as far as I can see, any fraud apart from the publication of the sale. The rulings quoted by the lower appellate Court in para 3 of the judgment, namely, Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (6), Harihar Kanta v. Rama Pandu (7), Sadho Chaudri v. Abhenandan Prasad (8) and Gaya Prasad v. Randhir Singh (9), do not appear to me to apply to the present case, and I would also point out that all those cases were decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882; and at p. 245 of the ruling in Jaggan Nath v. Daud (1) it has been held that the ruling under the old Code that an application made on the ground of fraud could come only under S. 244 (corresponding to S. 47 of the present Code) must be regarded as obsolete. I fail to see the reason, therefore, for the Additional District Judge quoting those rulings. I have, however, been referrred to another case by the learned counsel for the respondents, namely, Brahmayya v. Appayya Sastri (10), which is a clear authority for holding that no suit would lie on an allegation of fraud and irregularity in the publication or conduct of an auction sale. The present case is even stronger than the Madras case, because it is admitted that in this case an application was, as a matter of fact, made under O. 21, R. 90, and was dismissed. The plaintiff's remedy, therefore, was to appeal against that order, but instead of availing himself of that remedy he chose to let the period of appeal expire and then filed a suit ostensibly under S. 47, Civil P. C.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below that no suit lies is correct and dismiss the appeal. All costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellant. I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 25 Costs in the Courts below as already ordered.

First Appeal No. 79 of 1927, Decided on 12th February 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 24th March 1927, in Civil Suit No. 34 of 1925

(Obiter.)—Where the question, whether there was partition between the ancestors of the parties or not, is in issue, the statement made by the deceased ancestors of the parties to the effect that there was partition are admissible in evidence as they are statement against the proprietary interest of the person making them. (b) Hindu Law—Partition—Cessor of commensality does not conclusively prove partition and so it has to be considered whether other evidence supports or negatives theory that cessor was adopted with view to partition in legal sense.

Cessor of commensality is an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there has been partition of the joint family property but it is not conclusive. It is further necessary to consider whether the evidence in other repects supports or negatives the theory that the cessor was adopted with a view to partition in the legal sense of the word ; 14 M. I. A. 412 (P.C.) and 31 Cal. 262 (P.C.), Rel. on.

(Obiter).—Partition had taken place between the parties 50 years ago and in accordance with it they were in possession of their respective shares. Then a document was executed by them which did not decide anything new but simply maintained the status quo ante of the parties.

Judgment.—Gambhir had two sons, Thakurram and Lahuri, and Thakurram had two sons Sardharam and Adli. This suit was filed on 5th November 1925, by a son of Adli, six grandsons of Adli and a daughter-in-law of Adli Mt. Bindramati against the descendants of Lahuri and Sardharam, for a declaration that they were not bound by the agreement dated 29th December 1923, and for being put in joint possession of the villages Malda, Gundru, Turridih, Nagridih and Barekel to the extent of their four-annas share. Defendants 5 to 8 are the great-grandsons of Lahuri and defendant 9 is Lahuri's grandson. They stated that a partition had taken place between Thakurram and Lahuri about 50 years ago and that in that partition Thakurram was given five villages Kaitha, Pison, Deogaon, Basin and Marghati, and the other five villages were given to Lahuri. This statement was adopted by defendants 1 to 3 and defendant 11 also. The learned Additional District Judge held that there was a partition 50 years ago, in which Kaitha, Pison, Deogaon, Basin and Marghati fell to the share of Thakurram, that the agreement Ex. 1 D 1 was not executed by the plaintiffs under fraud, that Ex. 1 D 1 was invalid for want of registration, that the defendants have made improvements in the villages which fell to their share, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The appellants in this appeal pressed the following two points:

(1) There was no partition 50 years ago as alleged by the respondents.

(2) The document Ex. 1 D 1 was obtained by making fraudulent misrepresentation.

The statement of Girdhari (D. W. 1): "my grandfather used to say that at a partition between Thakurram and Lahuri, each of them got five villages" and the statement of Pyarelal (D. W. 2) "I used to hear from my ancestors that there was a partition" were attacked as inadmissible in evidence, on the ground, that they were only hearsay The learned advocate for the respondents relied on sub-S. (3), S 32, Evidence Act, and argued that the statements of dead persons against their proprietary interest, disclaiming all rights in the other five villages, were admissible in evidence. These statements are not very material for the decision of the point under consideration, because apart from these statements, there is other evidence, which proves satisfactorily that there was a partition more than 50 years ago. It seems to us that the statements are admissible under S. 32 (3), Evidence Act, as they are statements against the proprietary interest of the persons making them.

It is an admitted fact that the two branches, that is, Thakurram's descendants and Lahuri's descendants have been residing separately, messing separately and managing the villages separately for a very long time. The partition having taken place more than 50 years ago, it was impossible to adduce direct evidence to prove the partition. There is no doubt that the parties have been living separately for a long time and the fact to be found is, whether this separation was on account of partition or not. Cessor of commensality is an element which may properly be considered in determining the question whether there has been a partition of the joint family property but it is not conclusive: Mt Anundee Koonwur v. Khedoo Lal (1). As pointed out by Sir Andrew Scoble in Ganesh Dutt Thakoor v. Jewach Thakoorain (2), it is necessary to consider whether the evidence in other respects supports or negatives the theory that the cessor in this case was adopted with a view to partition in the legal sense of the word. The following facts tend to corroborate the defendants' plea of partition:

(1) [1871] 14 M. I. A. 412=18 W. R. 69=2 Suther. 591=3 Sar 50 (P.C.).

(2) [1904] 31 Cal. 262=31 I. A. 10=8 C.W.N. 146 (P.C.).

(1) Payment of land revenue separately by the defendants for the five villages in their possession.

(2) Improvements effected at considerable cost by the defendants in their villages.

(3) Mutation effected in the names of females, after the death of their husbands.

We have carefully considered the evidence adduced by the parties about partition and agree with the lower Court that the plea of partition set up by the defendants is correct. The plaintiffs relied on the entries in the mutation proceedings which indicate that the descendants of both the branches have been recorded as proprietors in all the villages and contended that these entries pointed to a statement of jointness and negatived partition. It also appears from the mutation entries, particularly Ex. P-12, that the names of Mt Bisahin and Mt. Renuka were recorded as proprietors. Their names would not have been so recorded, if the parties were joint. One of the plaintiffs in this suit is Mt. Bindramati, who has succeeded Parasram. These mutation entries do not, therefore, afford a definite and proper guidance in the matter.

Our attention was drawn to the evidence of Jaitram (P. W. 1), Rajaram (P. W. 2) and Jailal (P. W 3) and we were asked to hold on the authority of their statements that the document Ex. D 1 was obtained by the defendants by misrepresentation and fraud. It is difficult to believe that Jaitram and Rajaram signed the document without reading it and on being assured that it was an agreement to have the partition effected by Panchas. On a careful consideration of the evidence on the point, we hold that the agreement Ex. 1 D 1 was not executed by the plaintiffs, on account of any misrepresentation made to them or on account of any fraud practised on them.

In view of the finding that there was a partition 50 years ago between Thakurram and Lahuri, it is not necessary to decide the question, as to whether the agreement is admissible in evidence or not, for want of registration. As there was a partition effected in the family, 50 years ago, the document was not a partition deed. The learned advocate for the appellants argued that it was a relinquishment deed, but as the property was already divided and the parties were in possession of the villages which fell to their share, out of which they did not give up anything, the deed could not be styled a relinquishment deed also. Plaintiffs and defendants 10 to 23 had applied to the Revenue Officer for an imperfect partition of two villages Malda and Kaitha, and this agreement which really did not decide anything but maintained the status quo ante, was executed and signed by the parties. There was no transfer by one party to the other nor was there any creation of fresh title. It only embodied the settlement of a bona fide dispute, each party recognizing an antecedent title in the other. In this view of the circumstances, we are of opinion that there was no necessity to have the document registered. Ex. D 1 is admitted by the plaintiffs and has been signed by all the plaintiffs including Mt. Bindramati, except the minor Bhagwan Dayal, whose eldest brother Kanhaiya has signed it. This document shows that the parties settled their dispute and agreed to abide by it Having done so, the plaintiffs cannot ask for joint possession of the villages, which fell to the share of the defendants. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. We fix Rs. 500 as pleader's fees in this case.

Criminal Revn. No 173 of 1928, Decided on 8th October 1928, against order of Sub-Divl. Mag., Mungeli, D/- 4th January 1928, in Criminal Case No. 136 of 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 494—Though reasoned judgment not necessary, Court must record reasons for supporting that discretion was rightly exercised.

Although a reasoned judgment establishing the propriety of the order, as required by S. 367, is not necessary in the case of the order, passed under S. 494, still there must be something on record to show why the Magistrate consented to the withdrawal. The Court should record its reasons in order that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised : 22 C. W. N. 69 ; A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 382 ; A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 259 ; A I. R. 1923 Nag. 260 ; *A. I. T. G. Chobbs—for Applicant.

D. N. Chaudhry—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a revision application from an order dated 4th January 1928, of Mr. Purshottam Lal, Magistrate, 1st Class Bilaspur, whereby the accused persons, in Criminal Case No 136 of 1927, were discharged. The order was recorded in the order-sheet and was as follows :

All accused in custody. Prosecuting Sub-Inspector for prosecution and defence by Mr. Agnihotri. The Prosecuting Sub-Inspector puts in an application applying for permission to withdraw this case under S. 494, Criminal P. C. The permission is granted and the accused persons discharged. The witnesses present be discharged."

The first ground in the application is to the effect

"that the trial Court has given no reason for giving its consent to the withdrawal of the prosecution and as such has not properly exercised the discretion vested in the Court by S. 494, Criminal P. C".

There is a conflict of opinion, regarding the interpretation of the words "with the consent of the Court" which appear in S. 494, Criminal P. C. The learned pleader for the applicant drew my attention to the following cases : Umesh Chander v. Satish Chandra (1), Jagat Chandra v Kalimuddi Sardar (2), Rajani Kanta Shaha v. Idris Thakur (3), Suganchand v. Chhunnilal (4) and the learned pleader for the non-applicants relied on the following : In re Sadayan (5), Mul Singh v. Emperor (6) and Gulli Bagat v. Narain Singh (7).

In re Sadayan, Wallis and Adbur Rahim, JJ., in a very brief judgment, observed the following :

"neither the Public Prosecutor nor the Judge is called on to give any reasons for his action and this Court has no means of ascertaining what the reasons were."

It was a case in which a revision application, against an order of acquittal was filed and the learned Judges thought that they had no power to interfere. The case, Mul Singh v. Emperor (6) does not really support the non-applicant, on the contrary shows that Abdur Kadar, J., was inclined to the view, that the Magistrate ought to have recorded his reasons for giving his consent, and did not consider that case, a fit case for exceptional treatment, so as to justify the setting aside of an acquittal on revision. The case Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (7), was also a case in which a revision application was filed against an order of acquittal, passed under S 494, Criminal P. C. In this case the Magistrate had heard the parties and gave his consent after duly considering the matter and the learned Judges, who decided the revision application, expressed the opinion that there was no provision of law, which required a Magistrate to draw up a judgment, such as was prescribed by S. 367, Criminal P. C . and record his reason for allowing the withdrawal. I am in respectful agreement with the view expressed by the learned Judges that

"a reasoned judgment establishing the propriety of the order", as required by S 367, Criminal P. C., is not necessary in the case of the order, passed under S. 494, Criminal P. C., but it seems to me that there must be something on record to show why the Magistrate consented to the withdrawal. This aspect of the case was not considered in Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (7).

The other view was expressed in Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satish Chandra Roy (1), by Teunon, and Shamshul Huda, JJ., in the following words :

"It is clear to our minds that in either withholding consent or in according consent, the Court is acting in a judicial capacity and for its order as for every order judicially made, it ought to give and record its reasons. We are fortified in this view by a consideration of the provisions of Ss. 494 and 437, Criminal P. C. If the consent has been improperly accorded, it is clear that the consequential discharge must also be looked upon as improper. for these reasons we are of opinion that when a Court acting under S. 494 of the Code, gives its consent to a withdrawal from the prosecution, it should record its reasons in order that this Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised,"

This exposition of the law was quoted, with approval in Jagat Chandra Roy v. Kalimuddi Sardar (2), Rajani Kanta Shaha v. Idris Thakur (3), Saganchand v. Chhunnilal (4) and Abdul Gani v. Abdul Kadar (8).

(5) [1909] 5 M. L. T. 216=4 I. C. 1126=11 Cr. L. J. 193.
(6) A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 163.
(7) A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 283=2 Pat. 708.
(8) A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 168=1 Rang. 756.

I have no doubt that the view expressed in Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satish Chandra Roy (22 C. W. N. 69) is correct. Neither the order of discharge nor the order of acquittal can be passed unless the Magistrate trying the case, gives his consent to the withdrawal of the case, suggested by the Public Prosecutor. The section certainly does not lay down, that the consent must be given ipso facto, soon as application for withdrawal is made by the Public Prosecutor. The Court may either give its consent or refuse to accede to the request made by the Public Prosecutor. The Magistrate certainly cannot form his opinion unless some reasons are put forward, why it is proposed to withdraw the case and he cannot arbitrarily give his consent or withold his consent. The order, giving his consent, must be passed like any other order, which, a Magistrate has to pass under the Criminal Procedure Code, and need not fulfil all the requirements of a judgment, as laid down in S. 367, Criminal P. C.

In this case, the application filed by the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector is missing, and the order dated 4th January 1928 does not contain the reasons, which influenced the Magistrate in giving his consent, to the withdrawal. The order of discharge passed by the Magistrate, can be revised under S 436, Criminal P. C., but there is no material before this Court to enable it to consider the matter and to determine whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised.

I, therefore, set aside the order, of Mr. Purshottam Lal, granting consent to the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector's withdrawal from the prosecution in question and the consequent order of discharge. The accused will now be replaced upon their trial and the case against them heard and disposed of in accordance with law

Second Appeal No. 29-B of 1928, Decided on 4th February 1929, against decree of Dist Judge, Amraoti, D/- 30th September 1927 in Appeal No. 26 of 1927.

M. R. Bobde—for Appellants.

D. T. Mangalamurti — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—On 26th June 1916 Narsingh defendant 1 mortgaged certain property to the plaintiff Nathuji for Rs. 800 and a few days later he mortgaged the same property to one Kisni Bai for Rs. 900. A suit was brought on a puisne mortgage It was filed against Narsingh and his minor son Narayan, but Narayan was given up and discharged because the plaintiff thought it unnecessary to make him a party. Nathuji was also impleaded: he stated that he was a prior mortgagee and was willing to redeem. A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed and Nathuji paid the decretal amount. Nathuji filed a suit against Narsingh and Narayan for recovery of the amount paid but was allowed to withdraw it with permission to bring a fresh suit: he was ordered to pay the defendants' costs in that case before instituting a fresh suit.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed on 23rd March 1925 and the costs in the previous case were paid five months later. In this suit the plaintiff sought to recover the amount paid in satisfaction of the puisne mortgage and the amount due on his own mortgage. It has been found that only part of each mortgage debt was incurred for legal necessity. A preliminary decree for foreclosure has been passed on the basis of the second mortgage and a preliminary decree for sale on the basis of the first mortgage. The defendant Narayan has been allowed to redeem his half-share on payment of sums which have been calculated by excluding the portions of the mortgage debts for which there was no legal necessity.

It is first urged that as the plaintiff did not comply with the condition on which he was allowed to bring a fresh suit, that suit should have been dismissed. I am referred to Fischer v. Nagappa Mudaly (1). In that case a time was fixed for the performance of the condition and that time had expired when a fresh suit was instituted The learned Judges who decided the case distinguished the case of Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (2) where the facts were similar to those of the present case. Geidt and Mookerjee, JJ., in the latter case held that the failure to pay the costs before the institution of a fresh suit was an irregularity, but that the law did not require that a fresh suit should be dismissed if the payment was made after its institution. I am in respectful agreement with this view. In Seshayya v Subbayya (3) it is stated that, as O 23, R. 1 (3) definitely precludes a Court from entertaining a second suit when no permission has been granted, failure to comply with the condition on which permission was granted necessitates the dismissal of a fresh suit : but with due respect, I think that the provisions of O. 23, R. 1 (3) apply only when the plaintiff withdraws from a suit without the permission referred to in sub-R (2), R. 1. In the present case, the plaintiff had obtained a qualified permission and his failure to make full compliance with the terms on which the permission was granted does not render Cl. (3), R 1 applicable I hold, therefore. that the trial Judge had power to allow the suit to proceed after the plaintiff had paid the costs of the former suit.

I add that I respectfully disagree with the reasoning in Mahomed Afzal v. Lachman Singh (4) where it appears to be held that in every case where the plaintiff obtains permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit provided he pays costs, the suit remains pending until costs are paid. The plaintiff has power to withdraw his suit. When a Court grants him permission to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, the ordinary course is for him to withdraw at once. In the present case, the plaintiff admitted in his rejoinder, dated 24th August 1925, that the suit was at once withdrawn. I can see no reason for holding that the suit remained pending until the costs had been paid.

It is next urged that the plaintiff, a prior mortgagee, could not, by redeeming the subsequent mortgage, claim subrogation to it. Now O. 34, R 1, states that all persons having an interest in the mortgage security shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. There is an explanation which appears to be of the nature of an exception that a puisne mortgagee can sue for foreclosure or sale without making prior mortgagee a party to the suit : and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage. But this explanation appears to allow the puisne mortgagee to make the prior mortgagee a party if he chooses. This procedure is convenient if the puisne mortgagee desires to be paid, and the prior mortgagee desires to settle accounts and pay him, in order to avoid the necessity of impleading him in a subsequent suit. After the prior mortgagee had decided that it was convenient for him to be joined in a suit and had allowed himself to be so joined he was bound to redeem the subsequent mortgage : he can, therefore, claim subrogation.

The next point urged is that Narayan, defendant 2, was not a party to the suit brought by the puisne mortgagee and his interest could not be affected by the payment made by the plaintiff. It seems clear that Narayan was discharged because a suit against Narsingh alone would be deemed a suit against Narsingh in a representative capacity After the discharge, then, Narsingh represented the appellant.

Ground 5 is said to be based on misapprehension and is abandoned. Ground 6 must fail in view of the ruling in Narayan v. Nathmal (5). No objection has been raised to the way in which the decree has been framed, permitting defendant 2 to redeem only half the property on payment of certain sums. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellants.

Respondent 1 files a cross-objection. It is urged that as the parties lived at the same place the mortgagee was justified in placing confidence in the statements of Narsingh. The learned District Judge has given reason for holding that necessity for the loan of Rs 185 was not established, and there is no particular reason why the mortgagee should have placed implicit reliance on the representation of Narsingh. The cross-objection, therefore, fails and is dismissed. Costs on objector.

S B Gokhale for Appellants.

Abdul Razak for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit which the appellant had filed on 23rd June 1927 against the respondent, Tarachand for Rs 3,365-8-6. Sub-Judge 1st Class, Khandwa, passed a decree for Rs. 2,965-8-6 in favour of the appellants, as the respondent had paid Rs. 400 in Court. The learned Additional District Judge held that the suit was premature and dismissed the suit.

The first point which the learned advocate for the appellant urged was that the suit ought not to have been dismissed as the respondent in his written statement did not ask for the dismissal of the suit, though he had stated in para. 4 of his written statment that the suit was premature. The respondent by taking the plea that the suit was premature, certainly meant that the suit should be dismissed, if the Court found that the cause of action had not accrued when the suit was filed. The dismissal, under the circumstances was quite proper.

It was next urged that the two plaintiffs, Mulchand and Gendalal were not partners and it was suggested that they were co-owners. Reference was made in this connexion to Lindley on Partnership at p. 27, Hyder Ali v. Elahee Bux Maloom (1) and to the Illus. (b), (d) and (e) under S. 239, Contract Act. A perusal of the chapter on co-ownership does not show that there cannot be partership in a case of the nature under consideration, Lindley on p. 29 writes the following:

"If several persons jointly purchase goods for resale, with a view to divide the profits arising from the transaction, a partnership is thereby created. But persons who join in the purchase of goods, not for the purpose of selling them again and dividing the profits but for the purpose of dividing the goods themselves are not partners and are not liable to third parties as if they were. Coope v. Eyre (2) is a leading case in support of this proposition."

The money lending business is carried on by the appellants with no other object except to divide the interest arising from the transaction and the parties are therefore partners. Hyder Ali v. Elahee Bux Maloom (1) was a case in which the plaintiff had filed a suit against the defendant, in his capacity as the owning manager of a river brig, and it was held that the fact that several persons were co-owners of a ship, did not make them partners. The facts of the case reported in I. L. R. 8 Cal 1011 and the present case are quite different, and, therefore, the Calcutta case cited does not afford any help in deciding this case. The illustrations appended to S. 239, Contract Act, make the difference between partners and co-owners quite clear, and the position of the plaintiffs in this case is similar to that of A and B as pointed out in Illus. (a) and (c). Plaintiffs alleged in para. 1 of that plaint that they carry on money lending business at Attar and Khandwa in the name of Mulchand Gendalal and, therefore, no further statement on the point was necessary. The plaintiffs were rightly held to be partners.

Lastly, it was urged that

"the alleged undertaking of Gendalal not to file suit till the next following season was one without consideration and for that reason the same was not binding on any of the two appellants."

According to S 63, Contract Act, a promisee can extend the time for the performance of the promise, which Gendal did in this case. The learned advocate for the appellants relied on Trimbak Gangadhar v. Bhagwan Das (3) and argued that time could not be extended under S. 63, Contract Act. In that case there was not an extension of the time for the performance of the promise but there was an agreement to refrain from exercising for a stated period the right of sale arising from non-performance. An agreement simply extending the time for performance of a contract is exempted under S. 63, Contract Act, from any requirement of consideration to support it The appeal therefore fails and is dimissed with costs

Abdul Razak—for Respondent.

Order.—This is an application filed by the respondent Tarachand praying that the ex parte order passed by this Court, staying proceedings under S 144, Civil P. C., pending in the Court of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Khandwa, be cancelled.

The doctrine ef restitution is based on the principle that the Court will not permit an injustice to be done by reason of an erroneous order made by it, when that erroneous order has been reversed and the Court will restore the parties to the position which they would otherwise have occupied.

The question to be considered in this application is whether the restitution proceedings should be stayed, till the decision of the appeal, which is pending, against the judgment of the lower appellate Court, which varied the judgment of the first Court. It seems to me that the language of S 144, Civil P. C., is not capable of any such interpretation An application for restitution can be made as soon as a decree is varied or reversed and it seems to me that it ought not to be stayed under O 41, R. 5, Civil P. C , because an appeal has been filed. According to O. 41, R. 5, Civil P. C , an appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order, but restitution proceedings are not proceedings under the decree, of the kind contemplated under that order. It therefore seems to me that there is no justification for staying restitution proceedings because an appeal has been filed against the decree which varied the decree of the first Court. The order passed by this Court on 4th July 1928 is therefore withdrawn and cancelled.

The order passed on 25th June 1928 also requires modification. It does not seem necessary that the appellant should furnish security for Rs. 2,000. Execution of the decree for costs will be stayed on the appellant furnishing security for such an amount, as may be fixed by the Court executing the decree.

The costs of these proceedings will be paid by the appellants who applied to this Court for stay of proceedings. I fix Rs. 10 as pleader's fees.

First Appeal No. 73 of 1927, Decided on 11th December 1928, against decree of Addl Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 31st March 1927 in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1926.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 80 (3)—Wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of granting proprietary rights not restricting them—Restrictions in a subsequent wajib-ul-arz are incorrect—Proprietor was not deprived of any rights ordinarily due.

In 1903, inferior proprietary rights were conferred on the malik makbuza holder of mouza Deosur in Amagarh Chowki which was transferred from Chanda to Drug District in 1907. The wajib-ul-arz of 1904 prepared about the time when the inferior proprietary rights were granted does not record restrictions on the rights of the inferior proprietor.

Held: that the entries in a subsequent wajib-ul-arz which curtail such rights are incorrect and that it could not be presumed that the inferior proprietor was deprived of any rights, which are ordinarily enjoyed by inferior proprietors. [P 140 C 1, 2 ; P 141 C 1]

B. K. Bose, V. Bose, and Abdul Razak —for Appellants.

D. N Chaudhary—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was filed on 23rd January 1926 by the plaintiffs-appellants who are inferior proprietors of mouza Deosur in the Amagarh Chowki Zamindari of the Drug District, for a declaration that they as inferior proprietors have full rights over the forest and the banjar in their village, and that the conditions contained in sub-Cls. (1), (2), (3), (5), (6) of Cl. 6, (A) and (B) of Cl. 7 and Cl. 18 of the wajib-ularz-of 1925, which take away thair rights are not binding on them They claim the right to realize grazing dues in respect of the banjar and the jungle of the village, to appropriate the income from the minor forest produce, and to collect and sell timber. The defendant who is the zamindar of Amagarh Chowki and the superior proprietor of this village, stated that the plaintiffs never enjoyed the rights which they now claim, that the rights now claimed were not recognized in the settlement of 1902-03, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the rights claimed because these rights were not conferred on them when they were made inferior proprietors.

The trial Court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the rights they now claim on account of the entries in the settlement wajibularz of 1904 and of 1925, that though plaintiffs enjoyed these rights occasionally, they have not enjoyed them as a custom for a sufficiently long time to be entitled to them and that they were bound by the entries made in the previous settlement and could not claim the rights now claimed.

The status of the inferior proprietor in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, was defined in the following words by the Sudder Board of Revenue in 1854 :

" In landed properties where superior proprietary right of Talookdars or other persons of influence is clearly established to be co-existent with right of inferior land-owners, and the contract of settlement is accepted from the latter, malikana allowance in money only not exceeding 10 per cent on the revised jama shall be an additional item in the contract, payable, by the parties engaging, into the Government treasuries on behalf of the superior proprietors :" Nicholl's Law of the Central Provinces, para. 15, p. 398.

Secretariat letter No. 3784-175 dated 14th November 1874, affirmed the title of every sub-proprietor, in the Bilaspur District,

" not over a due proportion of the village waste but over the whole area, whether cultivated waste or jungle, comprised within the traditional boundaries of the village and over this area the sub-proprietor was declared to possess the same rights as the zamindar himself enjoyed over the rest of his estate."

This decision of the Local Government was challenged by the Zamindar of Lapha in a civil suit and was affirmed by this Court in Daharaj Singh v.

Tribhuan Singh (1). An inferior proprietor in the Chanda District must be presumed to have same rights and privileges as an inferior proprietor in the other districts of the province enjoys, unless it could be shown that at the time of the grant, his rights were defined and he was not given the rights which he is now claiming Amagarh Chowki was formerly in the Chanda District and was transferred to Drug in 1907. The first regular settlement of the zamindari was made in 1862-69 by Col. Lucie Smith. It appears from the following pages, on page 4 of the final report on the re-settlement of the Raipur and Drug Zamindaries in 1921-24 that no inferior proprietors were created in 1862-69 :

"Enquiries into proprietary rights were made but no inferior proprietors were created though considerable areas were given malik-makbuza status, the grantees being mostly thekadars who had held for many years or who had made substantial improvements. Unfortunately in the absence of records, and maps, these grants were lost sight of, so that when survey took place in 1895-96 these holdings were, if cultivated by the thekadar recorded as sir and if cultivated by tenants as occupancy land. This mistake was set right so far as possible by Mr. Henmingway in 1903."

In 1903, inferior proprietary right was conferred on the malik makbuza holder of Deosur as appears from the following passage, on p. 21 of the Drug and Raipur Zamindari Settlement Report:

"Twenty-three villages in eight zamindaries are held in inferior proprietary right. Of these, ten in Kaursa are held by a Gond family, the head of which is called the Shikmi Zamindar of Bhurkoni. These villages were originally grants for worship, service or maintenance but at first settlement the holders were found to occupy such strong positions that they were made inferior proprietors. Mouza Deosur in Amagarh Chowki is an exceptional case. Over the whole area of this village malik makbuza rights had been conferred at Col. Lucie Smith's Settlement."

Apart from the wajib-ul-arz of 1904, there is nothing on record to show that at the time of the grant of inferior proprietary right in this village. any conditions were imposed, which curtailed or cut down the rights which an inferior proprietor ordinarily enjoys The appellants have urged that the Settlement Officer could not override the rights of the plaintiffs as inferior proprietors by an entry in the Record-of-Rights (wajib-ul-arz), but before us it is admitted that if the waji-bul-arz of 1904 prepared about the time when the inferior proprietary rights were granted, records restrictions on the rights of the inferior proprietors this will justify a finding that by the grant the inferior proprietor was not given all the rights and privileges which the inferior proprietors usually enioy. The question which we have to consider is, therefore, whether the wajib-ul-arz of 1904 clearly recorded any restrictions on the rights of the inferior proprietor of mouza Deosur. If this question is answered in the negative, the presumption that the ordinary rights of an inferior proprietor were granted in the case of mouza Deosur will take effect.

The first point to be considered in this appeal is whether the wajib-ul-arz of 1904 placed any restrictions on the rights of an inferior proprietor or defined them properly in view of the new right which was conferred in that settlement. The following remarks about the wajib-ul-arz of 1904, which are to be found on p 44, para. 42 of the recent settlement report, give some idea of entries in that record :

"The stereotyped wajib-ul-arz of last settlement has been abandoned. It did not accurately describe village customs and on many points was a dead letter."

A study of the wajib-ul-arz of mouza Deosur shows that it is to a large extent stereotyped, for example Cl. 11, Sub-Cl. (2) gives details of rights of a patel who is not an inferior proprietor, whereas such a statement was not necessary in a wajib-ul-arz prepared expressly for mouza Deosur.

The heading to Cl. 19, Part 2, wajib-ul-arz for mouza Deosur, which defined the relations of the zamindar with the thekadars patels and ryots ran as follows :

"Rights of inferior proprietors, maktadars and mokasdars over the village waste and forest profits."

Nothing hat been recorded under this heading. If the inferior proprietor was not going to exercise any rights over the village waste and the forest profits, the entry in this column would have clearly mentioned that fact. In the absence of such an entry, it cannot be presumed, that the inferior preprietor was deprived of any rights, which are ordinarily enjoyed by inferior proprietors.

The learned Sub-Judge made a mistake in reading words into the wajib-ul-arz which do not exist there and in drawing an inference from certain figures, which do not mean anything. In Ex. P-8 the following figure " * * * " appears while in Ex. D. 7, a line like this—appears. None of these can be said to mean 'nil.' If the Settlement Officer wanted to say that the inferior proprietor had no rights, he could have easily used the word (नहीं) instead of leaving the entry blank and not writing anything under that heading. Another mistake which the learned Sub-Judge made was regarding the interpretation he put on Cl. 2, sub-Cl. 2, of the wajib-ul-arz regarding village waste The clause runs as follows :

"Waste land may not be enclosed by other patels or tenants except for purposes of cultivation, and provided there has been no express prohibition on the part of the zamindar. An enclosed plot which is not cultivated within six months of its enclosure reverts to the village waste. But patels may enclose waste land for the planting of groves or the formation of fodder reserves or grass birs with the approval of the zamindar, and tenants may do so with the permission of the patel, subject to the veto of the zamindar if the patel does not hold the village as inferior proprietor."

This entry does not mean that the inferior proprietor can reserve land for grass with the permission of the zamindar. According to this entry, the zamindar has got the right of veto, if the necessary permission was given by the patel, but he has not such right if the inferior proprietor gave the permission. The entries in Cls. 2 and 19, wajib-ul-arz of 1904 do not curtail the ordinary rights of the inferior proprietor and therefore the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of 1925, which curtail the ordinary rights of an inferior proprietor are incorrect.

The learned advocate for the zamindar argued that the jurisdiction of the civil Court is barred under S. 220 (h), Land Revenue Act, as the plaintiff in this suit questions the validity of an agreement entered into, in the sub-settlement. The other side asserted that they are not challenging, in this suit, their liability to pay Rs. 90, which they are willing to pay. No question as to the validity of any engagement with the Government for the payment of land revenue or of any agreement entered into by superior or inferior proprietors in a settlement or sub-settlement arises in this case and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the civil Court is not excluded.

We therefore hold that the plaintiffs as inferior proprietors are entitled to the declaration claimed by them. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and in its place, a decree will be passed in plaintiffs' favour, holding that the plaintiffs have full proprietary rights over the forest and waste lands and the zamindar has no right to them.

The appeal succeeds and is allowed with costs. We fix Rs 400 as pleader's fees in this case.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's father, a malgujar, permitted the defendant to build temples on a plot in the plaintiff's village. The lower appellate Court has found that the plaintiff's father granted on express license to build the temples and as the defendant on the faith of that license constructed work of a permanent character and spent about Rs. 1,500, the license cannot now be revoked. The suit for possession of the plot was, therefore, dismissed.

In appeal it is first urged that the defendant pleaded a gift and there was no issue regarding a license. There was a clear issue:

"Did the defendant construct the temples on the site with the consent of plaintiff's father ?"

This ground, therefore, fails.

It is next urged that the plaintiff by a notice, dated 6th August 1923, revoked the license, at a time when the defendant had done little work and the plaintiff was entitled to revoke the license, but it is quite clear that the defendant had incurred considerable expense on the work of building the temple before the notice was given. The reasoning in Vithaldas v. Goma (1) will apply when part only of the work is completed at the time the licensor desires to revoke the license. The appeal fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellant.

" the first four rules of O. 22 cannot apply to a case in which the death of the defendant occurs between the passing of preliminary and final decrees in a suit, as there is then no right to sue surviving."

My learned brother followed the Calcutta High Court in this view : see Surendra Keshub Roy v. Khetter Krishto Mitter (2). I have doubts as to the correctness of this case ; for it seems to me that O. 22, R. 4 applies where a defendant dies after the preliminary decree and before the final decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership or for accounts or a suit on a mortgage. In Ali Bahadur Beg v. Rafiullah (3) two Judges disagree with the ruling in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) and in support of their opinion they mention Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Ayyar (4), Subbarayudu v. Ramadasu (5).

I would ask for a Full Bench decision on the question whether R. 4, O. 22 or R. 10 of the same order applies in a case in which the death of the defendant occurs between the passing of the preliminary and final decrees in a suit.

Opinion.

Kinkhede, A. J. C.—The point referred for the decision of the Full Bench by the order of reference made by Prideaux, A. J C., is whether R. 4, O. 22, Civil P. C., or R. 10 thereof, applies in a case in which the death of the defendant occurs between the passing of the preliminary and final decrees in a suit. This Court's reported decision in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) favours the view that R. 10 applies and that there is no abatement of the suit in such a case.

The point has been discussed at great length before the Full Bench. Having considered the cases cited by the counsel on each side, I am of opinion that the view taken by this Court in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) is good law, as it has the support of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lachmi Narain v. Balmukund (6) and is in accord with the view taken in Lukhpati Kuar v. Daulatsingh (7) and in the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Perumal Pillai v. Perumal Chetty (8) where the whole case law has been discussed.

My reply to the reference will, therefore, be that the view of law taken by this Court in 17 N. L. R. 81 is sound, inasmuch as where the death of a party to a suit takes place after the passing of the preliminary decree, there can be no abatement of the suit for the simple reason that the right to sue merges in the decree and the decree conclusively determines the rights of the parties thereto.

decree for foreclosure was passed on the 30th October 1920 in favour of Sobhagmal, Ramaji, Krishnaji, Venkappa and Narayan against Sadasheo. The decree-holders Narayan, Ramaji and Sobhagmal died and the names of the first two were struck off from the record as they were represented by the decree-holders already on record. Upon Sobhagmal's death his widow Tulsabai was brought on record and the decree-holders then remaining were Tulsabai, Krishnaji and Venkappa. Sadasheo paid part of the decretal amount and time was extended up to December 1923. No further payment appears to have been made. Meanwhile Tulsabai died and the judgment-debtor Sadasheo also died. On 7th September 1925 Gulabchand, who claimed to be the legal representative of Tulsabai, Krishnaji and Venkappa, made an application for making the decree final and also made another application that Gulabchand should be brought on the record in place of the decree-holder Tulsabai, and that the present appellant Bapu should be brought on the record as the judgment-debtor in place of his deceased father Sadasheo The trial Court held that, as Sadasheo died on 4th November 1924, i. e, more than three months before the application was made, the suit had abated against his legal representative Bapu. The trial Court further held that the suit should be deemed to have abated as far as Gulabchand, the legal representative of Tulsabai, was concerned, as Tulsabai died on 3rd April 1924 The Sub-Judge based his findings on the view that the case was governed by O. 22, R. 4, sub-R (3), and referred to the ruling in Narayan v. Mt. Dhudabai (9). On appeal, however, the District Judge has held that that ruling had no application and followed the ruling in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) holding that O. 22, R. 10 applied and not O. 22, R. 4; and that therefore the application was not barred, nor did the suit abate against the legal representative of Sadasheo

The only point to be decided now in this reference is whether O 22, R. 4, should apply in a case of this kind, where the death of a party takes place after the passing of the preliminary decree but before the decree is made absolute; or whether O. 22, R 10 should apply. It may be noted that there is now no room for the contention that R. 10 cannot apply in the case of the death of one of the parties to a suit; and the view taken in the two Bombay cases referred to in Tularam v. Tukaram (1), namely Rajaram Bhagwat v. Jibai (10) and Jamnadas Chabildas v. Sorabji Kharsedji (11), cannot now be considered as correct. The only point in dispute is whether, after the preliminary decree has been passed, it can be held that the right to sue subsists so as to bring the case within R. 4, O. 22 or not. At p 83 of the ruling in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) Hallifax, A. J. C has held that, after the passing of the preliminary decree there is no further right to sue in the plaintiff; and this view, in our opinion, appears to be correct. It is true that the matter is one upon which there is a conflict of authority, and many rulings can be cited on either side. The matter, however, appears to be decided by the ruling in Laehmi Narain Marwari v. Balmukund Marwari (6), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that, after a decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal. Their Lordships at p. 66 of that ruling state :

"The parties have on the making of the decree, acquired rights or incurred liabilities which are fixed, unless or until the decree is varied or set aside."

In our opinion, their Lordships have made it clear that after a decree has once been made, the right to sue does not subsist and the suit cannot abate. It may be noted that after this decision of the Privy Council the Madras High Court, which formerly took the opposite view, as may be seen from the rulings in Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Ayyar (4) and Subbarayadu v Ramadasu (5) has now adopted the view that a preliminary decree determines the rights of the parties This has been laid down by the Full Bench of that Court in Perumal Pillay v. Perumal Chetty (8), which overrules Subbarayudu v. Ramadasu (5) We would especially refer to the opinion of Coutts-Trotter, C. J., at pp. 709, 710 and 711 of the later ruling. It may be noted that the ruling in Ali

Bahadur Beg v. Rafiullah (3), which has been quoted by Prideaux, A. J. C., in his order of reference, relied upon Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Ayyar (4) and it must be held that that ruling has been overruled by Perumal Pillai v. Perumal Chetty (8). In the ruling reported in Lakhpati Kuar v Daulat Singh (7) it has been held that no question of the right to sue can subsist in a suit after a decree is delivered by the Court in that suit. We would quote the following passage from that ruling :

"Decisions of almost all the High Courts in India were cited in support of the view that proceedings after the preliminary decree and before the final decree are proceedings in the suit. We are of opinion that the precise question which arises for determination in the present case is not answered on the view of the rule of procedure taken in those decisions. The question which we have to decide is whether the provisions of sub-R. (3), R. 4, O. 22, Civil P. C., applies to a suit in which a decree of the Court preliminary in its legal characteristics has come into existence and death occurs in the rank of the defendants subsequent to such a decree. According to our judgment the said sub-rule has no application to such a case. The word "suit" in O. 22 must be given a restricted meaning. We think it means only such proceedings as are antecedent to the passing of a decree, preliminary or otherwise. This interpretation is supported by the language and import of the several rules of the said order. The first rule is that the death of a plaintiff or a defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives. Obviously no question of "the right to sue" can subsist in a suit after a decree is delivered by the Court in that suit. As soon as the Court pronounces judgment the plaintiff's original right to sue disappears if he has failed and it merges in the decree if he has won : transit in rem judicatam."

The view taken, then, by Hallifax, A. J. C , in 1920 is correct according to the later decision of the Privy Council in Lachmi Narain Marwari v Balmukund Marwari (6) and that decision has now been followed by the Madras High Court and the Chief Court of Lucknow. So far, then, from seeing any reason to dissent from the view taken by Hallifax, A. J. C., in Tularam v. Tukaram (1) we are of opinion that it is correct and that it should be followed. We therefore answer the reference made to this Full Bench by saying that R. 10, O. 22 applies in a case in which the death of the defendant occurs between the passing of the preliminary and final decrees of the suit, and not R. 4 of that order.

Civil Revn. No 214-B of 1928, Decided on 31st January 1929, against order of Sm. C. C. Judge, Darwha, D/- 3rd July 1928 in C. S. No. 385 of 1927.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Art. 35 (ii)—Suit for money—Plaint alleging that wrong figure was inserted in acknowledgment in order to bring suit on previous transaction — Suit does not come under Art. 35 (ii).

A suit was brought for money claim. There was an allegation in the plaint that the defendant had got a wrong figure inserted in the acknowledgment, but that was only made a ground for bringing the suit on the previous account and not on the subsequent acknowledgment.

Held. that the case did not fall under Art. 35 (ii). [P 144 C 2]

V. R. Dhok—for Applicant.

Order.—The Judge of the Small Cause Court, Darwha, after hearing the case and taking evidence returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court instead of delivering judgment. The procedure, in any case, seems to be incorrect, and further the order returning the plaint is, in my opinion, wrong. The suit was brought for a money claim, and not for compensation on account of any offence or wrongful act. It is true that there was an allegation in the plaint that the defendant had got a wrong figure inserted in the acknowledgment, but that was only made a ground for bringing the suit on previous account and not on the subsequent acknowledgment. No compensation or damages of any kind were claimed for the wrongful act of the defendant, and only the amount due on the original transaction was claimed. The view taken by the lower Court, that the case fell under Art. 35 (ii) of the Small Cause Courts Act, is clearly mistaken and cannot be upheld. The order of the lower Court returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court is therefore set aside and instead the Small Cause Court is directed to take back the case on its own file and to dispose of it according to law. Costs of this application will be borne by the non-applicant; but as he did not appear and contest the case I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 10 only.

Order of Reference:—

Kolhatkar, A J. C.—This is a reference under O. 46, R. 1, Civil P. C., made by the 2nd Class Sub-Judge of Chandur, invested with powers of a Small Cause Court. A creditor instituted a suit in his Court against the surety alone for recovery of the debt due on a pro-note without impleading the principal debtor. On the date of suit claim against the principal debtor was in time, but when the question of the defendent's liability for the debt came for consideration, the said claim against the principal debtor was barred by time. He has therefore referred the following legal point to this Court :

(1) Whether the creditor can sue the surety alone in absence of any provision in the guarantee to the contrary, and is the surety liable in law ?

The Judge who has made this reference observes that the decisions in Mahomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1) and Abde Ali v. Askaran (2) are conflicting and cannot be reconciled, and that in his opinion a creditor can sue the surety alone even though his claim against the principal debtor is barred by limitation.

The head-note in Abde Ali v. Askaran (2) regarding creditor's omission to sue the principal debtor within the statutory period of limitation and discharge of the surety is rather misleading. The matter involved in that portion of the head-note was neither considered nor decided in that case. The observation in regard to them was only incidentally made in the following sentence appearing at p. 141 while dealing with the question of limitation :

"Although the omission of a creditor to sue the principal debtor within the statutory period may not discharge the debtor and the surety under S. 134, Contract Act,: see Subramania Aiyar v. Gopal Aiyer (3), yet it seems to me that the payment of interest by the debtor within limitation under S. 20, Lim. Act does not give a fresh starting point for limitation against the surety."

It will be quite clear from the above sentence and the absence of any reference in any other part of the judgment to the question whether the creditor's omission to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation does or does not discharge the surety, that the said question was neither raised nor considered by the learned Judge who decided the case, and that consequently the part of the head-note referred to above cannot be regarded as having reference to a considered decision.

As at present inclined, I find myself in full accord with the view taken in Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (3) and the several reasons given therein for supporting the view. That view is in direct conflict with that taken in Mohomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1), a published ruling of this Court. The first and foremost reason for the view that a creditor's omission to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit to be instituted against a debtor does not discharge the surety is that the said omission cannot have the legal consequence of discharging the principal debtor. It is only if the said omission can have such a legal consequence that the surety will be discharged under the provisions of S. 134, Contract Act. It is quite manifest from the provisions of S. 28 Lim. Act that the only rights which are extinguished by virtue of the determination of the period of limitation are those concerning property, possession of which is claimed. It is only in the case of such property that limitation not only bars the remedy by action, but also extinguishes the rights in regard to such property. It has not this double effect in the case of personal actions, such as an action for recovery of a debt. In case of such personal actions, only the remedy by action is barred by limitation. But the right forming the basis of the action remains unaffected. This view finds material support from S. 60, and Cl. (3), S. 25, Contract Act. The former section speaks of a debt barred by limitation as a lawful debt and as a debt actually due and payable to the creditor towards which a creditor can legally appropriate a repayment. Limitation cannot therefore be regarded as having had an effect of extinguishing the debt. It is only on the extinguishment of a debt that a principal debtor will be discharged. So long as the debt continues to have a legal existence no question of the discharge of a principal debtor can arise. Again under Cl. (3), S. 25, Contract Act, a barred debt constitutes good consideration for a written promise to pay, signed by the party liable to be charged therewith, and cannot consequently be regarded to have been extinguished after the expiry of the period of limitation.

(1) [1906] 2 N. L. R. 42.
(3) [1910] 33 Mad. 308=7 I. C. 898=20 M. L. J. 693.

The second reason is furnished by S. 137, Contract Act. The said section provides that mere forbearance on the part of the creditor to sue the principal debtor does not, in absence of any provision in the guarantee to the contrary, discharge the surety. The word "forbearance" is not qualified by a phrase limiting the period of such forbearance. In absence of such a qualifying phrase forbearance may be exercised for any length of period. It may be either for a period of limitation or for a period exceeding it. The mere fact of the illustration to the section mentioning one year as the period of forbearance does not seem to me to involve the implication that the forbearance is to be exercised for a period short of the period of limitation. Had the legislature intended to thus limit the period of forbearance, it would have expressed that intention in the section itself.

The decision in the Madras case rests on both these reasons; while those in Hajarimal v. Krishnarao (4), Sankana Kalana v. Virupakshapa Ganeshapa (5) and Krishto Kishori v. Radha Roman (6) in which the same view is expressed rest on the second reason. There are thus on the one hand the three High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras in favour of the view that in such circumstances the surety is not discharged from liability to the creditor; while the contrary view is maintained by the Allahabad High Court in Radha v. Kinlock (7) and Ranjit Singh v. Naubat (8) and it is adopted in Mahomed Shareef v Chaitu (1).

For the reasons set forth above I find myself unable to agree with the view taken in Mahomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1) a published ruling of this Court. My disagreement necessitates a reference to a Bench of the legal question involved. I would therefore refer the following question to a Bench and would request the Judicial Commissioner to constitute a Bench for the purpose and to refer the said question to it:

"Whether the omission of a creditor to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit against the debtor does not discharge the surety under S. 134, Contract Act."

Opinion.

The question referred to the Bench is this:

"Whether the omission of a creditor to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit against the debtor does or does not discharge surety under S. 134, Contract Act."

In a published ruling of this Court Mahomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1) the question has been answered in the affirmative. In that case Drake-Brockman, then A. J. C., gave full reasons for his decision and these reasons require careful consideration.

At the date of the decision of the case the view that the legal consequence of such omission by the creditor was a discharge of the principal debtor had been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Radha v. Kinlock (7) and in Ranjit Singh v. Naubat (8). Sir Frederick Pollock in "The Indian Contract Act." p. 398, considered that this view was correct. The Bombay High Court in Hajarimal v. Krishnarao (4) did not think it necessary to decide this point. The Calcutta High Court in Krishto Kishori Chowdharain v. Radha Roman (6) followed the Bombay case, and it appears that in Cunningham Shephard on "The Indian Contract Act,"

(4) [1880] 5 Bom. 647.
(5) [1882] 7 Bom. 146.
(6) [1886] 12 Cal. 880.
(7) [1889] 11 All. 310=(1889) A. W. N. 94.
(8) [1902] 24 All. 504=(1902) A. W. N. 166.

9th edn, the reasoning of the Bombay and Calcutta rulings was approved. There was, therefore, authority for this view and the opposite view was not held by any High Court or approved in any text book.

The main basis of the decision of Mahomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1) is that this view is correct and that it follows from the plain words of S. 134, Contract Act, that the surety is discharged. There are, however, very strong reasons for holding that the omission of the creditor to sue the principal debtor within the statutory period has not the legal consequence of his discharge. These reasons are well expressed in Subramania Aiyar v Gopala Aiyar (3), (at p 310). It is there stated :

"Does the running of the statutory period of time extinguish the debt as well as bar the remedy? Mr. Mitra in his 'Tagore Lectures on Limitation,' 4th edition, says at p. 14, 'as to rights in personam, it has been held that a right to receive payment of a debt does subsist even after the remedy by action has been barred.' The decisions in Mokesh Lal v. Busun Kumaree (9) are clear authority in favour of this view. See also the learned discussion of the question by Holloway, J, in Valia Tamburatti v. Vira Rayan (10). There is hardly any room for doubt in the face of the express language of S. 23, Lim. Act, 15 of 1877, which merely extinguishes the right to property when the period is determined for suits for recovery of such property. Whenever personal actions are barred, the rights themselves are not extinguished. That the principal debtor is not discharged by lapse of time may also be gathered from S. 25, Cl. 3, and S. 60, Contract Act, 9 of 1872. A barred debt is a good foundation for a written promise to pay signed by the party liable to be charged therewith. It is impossible to regard a debt as discharged by limitation when S. 60, Contract Act, speaks of a barred debt as a lawful debt, actually due and payable to the creditor. Unless a law of limitation operates as well as a law of extinctive prescription, omission to sue cannot discharge the debtor. Limitation which merely bars the remedy is never spoken of in works of jurisprudence as a mode of discharging an obligation. Holland, enumerating the modes of termination of rights in personam, does not refer to limitation as one of them: see Holland's 'Jurisprudence,' 10th edition, pp. 303 to 311. Anson in his work on 'Contracts' treating of the 'discharge' of contracts says: 'at common law lapse of time does not affect contractual rights. Such rights are of a permanent and indestructible character unless either from the nature of the contract, or from its terms, it be limited in point of duration. But though the rights possess this permanent character, the remedies arising from their violation are, by various statutory provisions, withdrawn after a certain lapse of time. The remedies are barred, though the rights are not extinguished' : (see Anson's 'Law of Contract,' 11th edition, p. 343)."

We agree with this reasoning and hold that the omission we are considering is not such an omission as is contemplated by S. 134, Contract Act. We remark that Sir Frederick Pollock has himself taken part in the preparation of the 5th edition of his work on the Contract Act (Contract and Specific Relief Acts by F. Pollock and D. Mulla) and on p. 577 of this edition it is stated that apparently the opinion opposite to that taken by the Allahabad High Court must be accepted as correct.

If S. 134, Contract Act, does not decide the question under reference, there appears no reason why great weight should not be given to the English decisions on the point and to the opinion of commentators on the English Law. The law in England appears to be settled. We again quote from Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (3) (at 310) :

"Does the omission of the creditor to sue the principal debtor within the statutory period discharge the debtor (sic. probably 'surety is intended)? We think not, says Lindley, L. J., in Carter v. White (11), (at 672). 'Is it the law that a creditor who neglects to sue his debtor till the statute has run will thereby discharge his surety? There is no decision to that effect. On the contrary the true principle is that mere omission to sue does not discharge the surety because the surety can himself set the law in operation against the debtor.' Cotton, L. J., expressed himself to the same effect, and Fry, L. J. concurred. This statement of the law has been accepted without question. See 'Chitty on Contracts,' 14th edition, p. 465, and 'Darby and Bosanquet on Limitation,' 2nd edn. p. 177."

Drake-Brockman, A. J. C. considers it to be settled that in ordinary cases it is the business of the surety to see that the principal pays, not that of the creditor ; but he thinks that this principle cannot be extended to cover a case where the creditor has allowed his claim against the principal debtor to become time-barred as such an extension would be difficult to reconcile with S. 135, Contract Act, which discharges the surety if there is a contract between the creditor and the principal debtor whereby the creditor promises to give time to, or not to sue, the principal debtor. Now the reason of the rule laid down in S. 135 is thus stated by Lord Eldon:

(10) [1877] 1 Mad. 228.
(11) [1883] 25 Ch. D. 666=54 L.J. Ch. 138=50 L.T. 670=32 W.R. 692.

" The surety is held to be discharged for this reason, because the creditor, by so giving time to the principal, has put it out of the power of the surety to consider whether he will have recourse to his remedy against the principal or not; and because he, in fact, cannot have the same remedy against the principal as he would have had under the original contract " Samuell v. Howarth (12).

Under the original contract the surety could, at any time after the debt became due, call upon the principal to liquidate it and if he neglected to do so himself pay the debt and at once have recourse to his remedy against the principal debtor. By the contract to give time, this right is impaired. The omission of the creditor to sue the principal debtor has no such effect: there is no variation of the original contract to the detriment of the surety's rights. We are therefore respectfully of opinion that the provisions of S. 135, Contract Act, furnish no guide to the decision of the question referred to us.

The basis of the decisions in Hajarimal v. Krishnarau (4) and Krishto Kishori Chowdharain v, Radha Roman (6) was that S. 137, Contract Act prevented the application of S. 134. We do not need to consider whether this is the case as, in our opinion, there is no inconsistency between the provisions of S . 137 and those of S. 134. It is hardly possible to discuss the question: What would the framers of the Act have intended by the statement that mere forbearance on the part of the creditor to sue the principal debtor does not discharge the surety if they had stated in a previous section that by such forbearance in some cases the surety was discharged? We state, however, that the arguments of Drake-Brockman, A. J. C. appear to us to have great force: there is difficulty in holding that S. 137 was intended to override S. 134 especially as S. 137 appears designed to explain and amplify S. 135.

We respectfully disagree with the decision in Mahomed Shareef v. Chaitu (1). As we have indicated Drake-Brockman, A. J. C. received no encouragement from existing text books or rulings to reach the decision we consider correct. We consider that, apart from the provisions of S. 137, Contract Act, it must be held that the omission of a creditor to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit against the debtor does not discharge the surety under S. 134, Contract Act. There is no difficulty in holding that S 137 deals with such an omission when this interpretation is entirely consistent with the other provisions of the Contract Act. We add that our opinion is in full agreement with the view taken in English cases and the provisions of the Contract Act so far as they affect this question do not appear to differ in any way from the principles on which the English decisions are based.

Second Appeal No. 426 of 1927, Decided on 11th March 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Chanda, D/- 11th April 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1927.

 (a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 11 (2-j) (v)—Rateable distribution is not a form of execution—Civil P. C., S. 73.

An application, praying only for rateable distribution is not a valid application for execution. Civil Procedure Code does not recognize an application for rateable distribution as such. A decree-holder, to obtain rateable distribution under S. 73, must make an application for execution praying for execution of his decree in one of the ways mentioned in O. 21, R. 11, before the receipt of assets by the Court: *A. An application which does not specify the way in which the assistance of the Court sought for executing the decree according to O 21, R. 11 is not an application for execution according to law, even though it may be application, which can be considered as a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation. [P 150 C 1]

A creditor, claiming rateable distribution on the strength of a money decree, must himself ask for attachment and sale of the property or for execution of his decree by one of the modes specified in O. 21, R. 11 : *A. ## Opinion.

(Dated 8th February 1929.)

In this appeal a reference has been made by Prideaux, A. J. C., in the following terms :

"The question is whether the view expressed by Kotval, A. J. C., in Dwarkadas v. Ghasiram (1) is not too narrow. Is it necessary for a creditor, claiming on the strength of a money-decree rateable distribution from the proceeds of a sale of his debtor's property about to take place at the instance of another creditor, to ask himself for attachment and sale of that property, or is it sufficient to merely ask for rateable distribution? The question is of general importance and I would ask for a Bench to decide it."

The facts of the case have been fully stated in the judgments of the lower Courts and are not disputed. It is admitted that the respondent Gopal was executing his decree against Sakharam in Civil Suit No. 170 of 1924 and that he had attached immovable property belonging to Sakharam, and an auction-sale was held on 22nd May 1925. On the day of the sale the appellant Balaji, who had obtained a decree against Sakharam in Civil Suit No. 217 of 1924, made an application for rateable distribution before the sale proceeds actually reached the Court. It may be noted that the Court, which tried both the Civil Suits Nos 170 of 1924 and 217 of 1924, was the same, namely the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Warora. The Subordinate Judge allowed the application for rateable distribution, and Balaji was awarded a sum of Rs. 198 out of the sale proceeds by way of rateable distribution. Gopal, thereupon, filed a suit for recovery of this amount plus Rs 16-3-0, costs in the proceedings for rateable distribution, on the ground that rateable distribution was wrongly allowed and that this sum should not have been paid to Balaji. The Sub-Judge, 2nd Class, Warora, who tried the suit, decreed the claim in favour of the plaintiff and that decree was upheld by the Additional District Judge, Chanda, on appeal. In second appeal to this Court a reference has been made as stated above.

The only point to be decided is whether the application by the appellant for rateable distribution can be held to be an application for execution within the meaning of S. 73, Civil P. C. In the ruling in Dwarkadas v. Ghasiram (1) (at p. 144) Kotval, A. J. C., has held that "one of the conditions which must exist before a decree-holder may be entitled to a rateable distribution is that he must, prior to the receipt of assets, have applied to the Court by which the assets are held for execution of his decree : Chuni Lal v. Jugal Kishore (2)."

"such an application must be in the form prescribed by O. 21, R. 11 (2)."

In the reference an opinion is called for as to whether this view is too narrow, i. e, it is questioned whether the application for execution must actually ask for attachment and sale of the property, which is already attached, or whether it is sufficient to ask for rateable distribution only. Kotval, A. J. C., has held that the application for execution must be in the form prescribed by O. 21, R. 11; and according to that order it must be stated in the application the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required; namely, whether :

"(i) by the delivery of any property specifically decreed ;

(ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property ;

(iii) by the arrest and detention in prison of any person ;

(iv) by the appointment of a receiver ;

(v) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require."

It would seem, then, that, for an application for execution to be a valid application, there must be an application for some definite form of execution. Rateable distribution as such is not a form of execution; nor do we think that it can be included in Cl (j) (v) "otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require." It may be noted that, under the Civil Procedure Code, there is no application for rateable distribution as such. S. 73 only lays down that the assets shall be rateably distributed among all persons who have made applications to the Court for the execution of their decrees. It is not even necessary, according to that section, for the decree-holders to make an application for rateable distribution. All that is necessary is that the decree-holders shall have applied to the Court, which holds the assets, for execution of their decrees before the receipt of the assets. It may further be noted that the particulars given in sub-Cl. (a) to (i) O. 21, R. 11, Cl. (2), are only particulars which can be obtained from the register of civil suits and which can be supplied by the reader of the Court. It is with regard to these particulars that applications have to be checked by the readers and returned for amendment, if found to be incorrect. There can hardly ever be a case of an application being amended with regard to the particular mode of execution sought. There is, we think, then, no force in the argument now put forward by the learned counsel for the appellant that the application asking for rateable distribution should have been returned for amendment.

We are of opinion, then, that an application that only prays for rateable distribution is not a valid application for execution within the meaning of O. 21, R. 11, that Civil Procedure Code does not recognise an application for rateable distribution as such and that, in order to obtain rateable distribution under S. 73, a decree-holder must have made an application for execution to the Court, praying for execution of his decree in one of the ways mentioned in O. 21, R. 11, before the receipt of assets by the Court. The learned counsel for the appellant has referred to Art. 182, Cl. 5, Lim. Act, and contended that it has been held that an application, even though it did not mention the way in which the decree-holder sought the assistance of the Court in executing his decree, is a step in aid to save limitation. This point seems to be one of some difficulty and there have been conflicting rulings in the matter; but, in any case, it seems that an application must at least ask for notice to be issued to the judgment-debtor to save limitation. We would refer in this connexion to two rulings of this Court in Mukund Ram Sukal v. Harnarain (3). The analogy, however, of what might or might not be done to save limitation under Art. 182 cannot, we think, be applied to an application for execution according to S. 73, Civil P. C. In the ruling in Mukund Ram Sukal v. Harnarain (3), Ismay, Offg. J. C., did not decide whether the application was made according to law for execution or only to take some step in aid of execution. We are of opinion that an application which does not specify the way in which the assistance of the Court is sought for executing the decree according to O. 21, R. 11, is not application for execution according to law, even though it may be an application which can be considered as a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation. We would refer to the ruling in Arunachellam Chettiar v. Haji Sheek Meera Rowthar (4) which has been referred to by Kotval, A. J. C., in the ruling in Dwarkadas v. Ghasiram (1), and would quote with approval the following passage from pp. 26 and 27 of the Madras ruling:

"But there is no authority for the view that a mere application for rateable distribution is an application for execution as contemplated by S. 295. On the other hand, it has been held that it is not: see Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen (5). S. 230 of the Code provides for an application for execution and S. 235 specifies the form and contents of that application. The mere application for rateable distribution, therefore, which does not comply with the requirements of S. 235 in form or substance can not be treated as the sort of application for execution falling within the scope of S. 295."

We are of opinion, then, that the question referred to this Bench must be answered in the negative, that the view expressed by Kotval, A J. C., in Dwarkadas v. Ghasiram (1) is correct and that a creditor claiming rateable distribution on the strength of a money decree must himself ask for attachment and sale of the property or for execution of his decree by one of the modes specified in O. 21, R 11 (j), Civil P. C.

Judgment.—(11*th March* 1929). In view of the opinion now given by the Bench, to which a reference was made, this appeal must fail. The view taken by the Courts below is correct and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed. All costs will be borne by the appellant.

SUBHEDAR, A. J. C.

Chandrashekhar—Applicant.

v.

Rajaram—Non-applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 404 of 1928, Decided on 20th March 1929, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Raipur, D/- 5th October 1928, in Criminal Appl. No 163 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 421 (1)—Appellate Court should give appellant reasonable op- portunity of being heard in support of his appeal.

The provisions of S. 4212 are mandatory. Before an appeal, filed under S. 419, is dismissed S. 42, (1) requires that the appellate Court should give the appellant before him or his pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same. [P 151 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 421 (1)—Judgment need not be elaborate but must show that the evidence on record has been fully considered.

Judgment, dismissing the appeal summarily under S. 421 (1), need not be elaborate but must be such as to show on the face of it that the appellate Court has applied its mind to the consideration of the evidence on record and the pleas raised by the accused both in the Court below and in the memorandum of appeal : 33 All. 338 ; 13 N. L. R. 169 ; 36 All. 496 ; 8 N. L. R 84, Ref. [P 151 C 2]

K. A. Potey—for Applicant.

Order.—In this case upon a complaint of non-applicant Rajaram the applicant Chandrashekhar was convicted by the Additional Tahsildar and Magistrate 2nd Class, Mahasamund, of an offence under S 384, I. P C. and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100.

Against this conviction and sentence an appeal was filed on 5th August 1928, in the Court of the District Magistrate, Raipur, and the memorandum of appeal, which is signed by two legal practitioners (Mr. Deshmukh, Bar-at-law and Advocate and Mr. Nalgundwar, pleader), attacked the judgment of the trying Magistrate on the following grounds :

" 1. That the lower Court erred in law in holding that the facts on record were sufficient to make out a case under S. 384, I. P. C. 2. That the lower Court was wrong in convicting the appellant on the mere statement of the complainant without any corroboration. 3. That the lower Court should have held that no injury as required by the I.P.C. was caused so as to bring it under S. 384, I. P. C. 4. That the lower Court should have believed the defence story."

The order-sheet of the appellate Court, as reproduced below, would show that the usual procedure of fixing a date for hearing applicant was intended to be followed in the beginning when the appeal was received in office. But the learned District Magistrate did not think it obligatory on his part to follow the same and rejected the appeal summarily.

" 5-10-28.—Appeal received. Record of the lower Court be put up. The Magistrate has brought out clearly the evidence for the conviction and it is fully justified. The penalty inflicted is not excessive. The grounds of appeal put forward do not justify any alteration of the finding. Appeal is summarily dismissed. D. J. N. Lee."

Against this order the applicant has come up to this Court in revision. In obedience to the order of my learned predecessor, an affidavit of the applicant and a letter of Mr. Nalgundwar addressed to Mr. Deshmukh stating that they were not given an opportunity of being heard by the District Magistrate before he rejected the appeal, have been placed upon the record of this Court. On the rule issued to him to show cause, Mr. Lee, who was the District Magistrate responsible for the summary rejection of the appeal, furnished the following explanation :

" I have the honour to say that I have no recollection whether the counsel was present, but I imagine his statement is correct. The appeal was dismissed after a full perusal of the record and as recorded in the order dismissing the appeal it is clear that the grounds of appeal (such as they were) were considered (see third sentence of the order)."

After hearing the parties and giving my best consideration to the case, I have not the slightest doubt in holding that there has been no disposal of the appeal by the learned District Magistrate according to law, and therefore the case must go back to the lower appellate Court for fresh disposal. In the first place the learned District Magistrate has contravened the mandatory proviso to S. 421 (1), Criminal P. C, This was admittedly an appeal filed under S. 419, Criminal P. C., and before it could be dismissed the aforesaid proviso required that the appellate Court should have given the appellant before him or his pleader "a reasonable opportunity" of being heard in support of the same. Not only no "reasonable opportunity" was afforded by the appellate Court in this case, but none whatsoever was given as the learned District Magistrate, upon receiving the memorandum of appeal and the record of the case, proceeded to and disposed of the appeal at once : Emperor v Gurshida (1)

Secondly, although the rejection of the appeal was under S. 421 (1), Criminal P. C., which does not require writing of an elaborate judgment, as contemplated by S 424 ibid, still the learned District Magistrate should not have disposed of the appeal otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that he had applied his mind to the consideration of the evidence on the record and of the pleas raised by the accused both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal : Emperor v. Lal Bihari (2). In Ramrao v Emperor (3), this Court has summed up the position in these words :

" A Court of criminal appeal is not bound, when dismissing an appeal summarily under S. 421, Criminal P. C., to write a judgment as defined in S. 367 of that Code. It is, however, advisable that it should give, as concisely as possible, at least the main reasons which govern its order.

In the latest Allahabad decision Emperor v. Kundan (4), following two earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court, it was considered expedient to have the reasons for summary dismissal to assist the High Court in dealing with a possible application for revision. But I would add that another equally good argument is this, that the presence of reasons gives information to the appellant that his appeal has received such consideration as it is entitled to have from the appellate Court. So far, the principle advanced by me in Jairam v. Emperor (5), at pp. 85 and 86 applies."

Applying the principles laid down in the above cases to the order of the lower appellate Court it is manifest that it falls short of the minimum requirements imposed by precedents upon an order passed under S. 421, Criminal P. C. Grounds 1, 3 and 4 of the memorandum of appeal before the lower appellate Court could not be said to have been legally disposed of by the third sentence of the order as suggested by the learned District Magistrate in his explanation to this Court.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Magistrate dismissing the appeal and direct that he do re-hear the appeal and dispose of it according to law

v.

Ramdularey—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 407 of 1928, Decided on 28th February 1929 from decision of 2nd Class Magistrate, Bilaspur, D/- 25th September 1928, in Criminal Case No. 121 of 1928.

(a) Cattle Trespass Act, S. 22—Grazier of cattle is agent within S. 22.

A grazier is entrusted with the charge of the cattle during the period the cattle are with him for the purpose of grazing and therefore he may be presumed to be an agent of the owners of the cattle during the time the cattle are in his charge. Such an authority must be presumed from the circumstances of the case. The person personally acquainted with the circumstances can only be the person in charge of the cattle when seizure is made and therefore comes under the category of " an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances " mentioned in S. 21 : A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 156, Ref. [P 153 C 1]

(b) Cattle Trespass Act, S. 22—Compensation may be awarded to owner of the cattle and not to agent filing complaint.

Where the complaint is lodged by an agent, the Magistrate can award reasonable compensation, which will be paid to the complainant (owner of cattle and not to the agent who filed the complaint. [P 153 C 2]

D. N Choudhry—for Applicant.

S. T. Bhave—for Non-applicant.

Order.—The applicant, Manohar who is a grazier of mouza Deori filed an application under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, against the non-applicant, Ramdularey for illegal seizure of cattle which were in his charge on 23rd August 1928. The complaint was filed in the Court of Mr. C. F. Cleophas, 2nd Class Magistrate, Bilaspur, on 1st September 1928, and the learned Magistrate after examining the complainant ordered that a summons be issued to the accused Ramdularey. On the next date of hearing, which was on 18th September 1928, an objection was raised by the pleader for the accused about the valid presentation of the complaint on the ground that Manohar not being the owner of the cattle, could not file a complaint under S. 21, Cattle Trespass Act, as he was not an agent of the owners of the cattle. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that Manohar could not file the complaint as he was neither the owner nor the agent, and acquitted the accused under S 5275, Criminal P. C., as process was already issued to the accused who had attended the Court in obedience to the orders of the Court.

The question for consideration now is whether Manohar can be considered to be an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances, within the meaning of S. 21, Cattle Trespass Act. Proceedings under Chap. 5, Cattle Trespass Act, are quasi-civil in their nature, a Magistrate being empowered to assess and enforce, in a summary manner, compensation for an injury for which a civil action might be brought. There is no doubt that a complaint under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, can be lodged either by the person whose cattle have been seized or by an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances. Manohar is certainly not a person whose cattle have been seized and therefore it must be found whether he is an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances The word "agent" has not been defined anywhere in the Cattle Trespass Act. An agent, as defined under S 182, Contract Act, is a person employed to do any act for another or to represent another in dealings with third persons. The authority of an agent may be express or implied. An authority is said to be implied when it is to be inferred from the circumstances of the case and things spoken or written, or the ordinary course of dealing, may be accounted circumstances of the case A grazier is entrusted with the charge of the cattle during the period the cattle are with him for the purpose of grazing and therefore he may be presumed to be an agent of the owners of the cattle during the time the cattle are in his charge. Such an authority must be presumed from the circumstances of the case. It is clear from the wording of S. 21, Cattle Trespass Act, that the legislature intended to authorise some other persons besides the owner of cattle to file complaints under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act The person personally acquainted with the circumstances can only be the person who is in charge of the cattle when the seizure is made, and therefore it seems to me that the person who is in charge of the cattle at the time of seizure is the person to be included in the class of persons who come under the category of mentioned in S. 21, Cattle Trespass Act. I am fortified in this view of the matter by a decision of Hallifax, A. J. C., who, in Tuka Ram v. Ganpat (1), held that one of the owners of the cattle which were seized could file complaint on behalf of the other owners.

"an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances"

It was pointed out on behalf of the non-applicant that compensation can only be awarded to the complainant under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, and could not in this case be awarded to Manohar who did not incur any expense in procuring the release of the cattle It seems clear from a perusal that the compensation is to be awarded to the complainant and, in a case where the complaint was lodged by an agent, the Magistrate can award reasonable compensation which will be paid to the complainant, and not to the agent who filed the complaint

In view of the fact that the case was not enquired into on its merits and the complaint was thrown out on a technical point, though an order of acquittal had to be passed because summons was issued to the accused, this is a fit case in which this Court must interfere in revision with an order of acquittal and set it aside. The order is accordingly set aside and It is directed that the case should be tried on its merits.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Nagpur —Applicant.

Radhakishan Ramnarain — Non-applicant.

Miscellaneous Judl. Case No 39-B of 1928, Decided on 15th February 1929, referred by Commissioner of Income-tax, on 10th September 1928

 (a) Income-tax Act, S. 24 (1)—Actual losses incurred must be proved—Mere showing figures of purchase and sale is not sufficient.

An assessee is entitled to have his losses set off against his income in any year, but he cannot claim that right unless he proves the losses , and the losses cannot be held to be satisfactorily proved by merely showing the figures for purchases and sales during the year without showing the opening balance in hand at the beginning of the year. [P 155 C 2]

 (b) Income-tax Act, S. 24 (1)—Burden of proving losses is on assessee, who alleges them—Opening balance must be shown.

When [redacted] income has been admitted, the burden of proving losses is on the assessee, who alleges them and the losses cannot be said to be satisfactorily proved unless all the particulars with regard to them are clearly shown ; and a very important particular with regard to such losses must be the opening balance at the beginning of the financial year in which the losses are said to have occurred : A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 937, Dist. [P 155 C 1, 2]

D. N. Choudhry—for Applicant.

W. B. Pendharkar—for Non-applicant.

Order.—The Commissioner of Income-tax has stated this case according to the order of Kinkhede, A. J. C. passed in Misc. Judl Case No. 8-B of 1927 on 25th June 1928. The facts have been stated at some length in the reference and need only be briefly repeated. There is a firm at Akola styled "Raghunathdas Rampratap" of which the owner is Radhakisan Laxminarayan. That firm keeps accounts from Diwali to Diwali and submits returns accordingly for the purpose of income-tax. For the year ending in Diwali 1924 the return shown was :

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Income ... | ... | 10,473 | 12 | 6 |
| Loss ... | ... | 5,034 | 13 | 9 |
| Total income | ... | 5,438 | 14 | 9 |

The income-tax officer not accepting this return called for accounts and submitted a report to the Assistant Commissioner who, after hearing Radhakisan and examining the accounts, assessed the income at Rs. 44,847-6-0. Radhakisan made an appeal to the Commissioner of Income-tax and some reduction was made by the Commissioner ; but otherwise the assessment was upheld. The assessee then applied for a reference under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act to the High Court, but his prayer was rejected by the Commissioner on the ground that no question of law arose out of the facts of the case. On an application then being made to this Court, Kinkhede, A. J. C. held that the case involved questions of law and directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state the case and make a reference.

The only point really in dispute now is whether the item of Rs. 24,528-1-9 shown as loss in the cotton business for the year under assessment is wrongly disallowed by the Assistant Commissioner making the assessment and by the Commissioner in the appeal. The matter has been stated at some length in the order of the Assistant Commissioner, dated 17th December 1925, making the assessment, a copy of which is now on the re-record as Ex. A. The point seems to be that in the previous year cotton business was carried on in the name of Dongulal Ghisulal. When the books of the firm were called for, Radhakisan produced books of the firm of Raghunathdas Rampratap, but did not produce the books of Dongulal Ghisulal. He stated that he could not find those books and appears to maintain in his appeal and in his application to this Court that the accounts of Dongulal Ghisulal were incorporated in the books of the main firm Raghunathdas Rampratap. The Assistant Commissioner, however, held that he could not accept the loss of Rs. 24,528-1-9 because the closing stock and the sale proceeds of the preceding year were not shown. In the appeal the Commissioner also held that, as the accounts of the business in question, i. e., of Dongulal Ghisulal, were not produced, it could not be known whether there was any opening stock from the preceding year or not. The Commissioner therefore held that the appellant failed to prove that he sustained this loss, and did not allow it.

In his order of reference the Commissioner has pointed out that the grounds given in the application to the High Court under S. 66 (3) of the Act were distinct from the grounds given in the application to the Commissioner under S 66 (2), and contends that no reference upon a question of law not raised by the applicant before the Commissioner can be obtained, referring in this connexion to the case decided by this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Nagpur v. Jainarayan Motiram of Shegaon (1) and to the case decided by the Madras High Court In the matter of the Income-tax assessment of P Thiruvengada Mudaliar A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 889, decided on 14th December 1927, and also to the decision of the Allahabad High Court In the matter of Lall Mal Hardeodas Cotton Spinning Mills p. 266 of the Income tax cases, Vol. I and In the matter of Makham Lal Ram Sarup (p. 416 of Vol. I of the same reports). The question whether an assessee can obtain an order of reference from the High Court upon a point of law not raised in his application to the Commissioner under S 66 (2) of the Act need not, we think, be gone into in disposing of the present reference, because, although the grounds given in the application to the High Court were different in form from the grounds given in the former application to the Commissioner, the real point at issue is the same, viz., whether the Assistant Commissioner was right in disallowing the losses amounting to Rs. 24,528-1-9 alleged by the applicant during the year under assessment. The question of the interpretation of the Assistant Commissioner's order does not, in our opinion arise, because the Assistant Commissioner's order is really clear and, in any case, the order of the Commissioner when deciding the appeal is as clear as possible and can leave no room for doubt that the losses were not allowed because they were held to be not proved, and not on account of any imaginary profits or gains which were supposed to have occurred during the year under assessment or the previous year.

The facts of the case are simple as stated above and, in our opinion, the only point of law involved is the question on whom the burden of proof lies to prove losses alleged to have been sustained : on the party alleging the losses or on the Income-tax Department. The Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner contend that the burden of proving losses is upon the assessee, who alleges them ; whilst the argument put forward by the applicant is that proving losses is proving a negative, and that therefore on the principle of the ruling in Bishnu Priya Chowdhurani, In re (2) the burden of proving the negative should not have been cast upon the applicant. This contention is, in our opinion quite incorrect. There is a considerable difference between proving a negative, i. e.,proving that there is no income during a year, and proving that there were, as a matter of fact, actual losses incurred. The applicant in the present case has not denied that there was income during the year under assessment. He has admitted income, but has pleaded that the expenditure exceeded the income and that a loss was sustained. He, however, only stated the figures of purchases and sales, and when asked to give the opening balance, which was surely necessary so as to determine the net income for the year, he has failed to do so. We consider that, when once income has been admitted, the burden of proving losses is upon the assessee who alleges them, and the losses cannot be said to be satisfactorily proved unless all the particulars with regard to them are clearly shown; and a very important particular with regard to such losses must be always the opening balance at the beginning of the financial year in which the losses are said to have occurred.

Under S. 24 (1), Income-tax Act, an assessee is entitled to have his losses set off against his income in any year, but he surely cannot claim that right unless he proves the losses; and the losses cannot, we think, be held to be satisfactorily proved by merely showing the figures for purchases and sales during the year without showing the opening balance in hand at the beginning of the year. Nor are we pressed by the argument that in the present case there is really an assessment for additional income during the preceding year, which view seems to have been taken by Kinkhede, A. J. C., in his order directing the Commissioner to state the case. The income for the preceding year was assessed under S. 23 (4) of the Act as the assessee did not produce his books of accounts. In the year now under review books were produced, but it has been held that those books, although they have been accepted as far as they go, are not sufficient to prove the losses alleged to have been sustained because the opening balance has not been shown. There is no attempt now made by the Income-tax Department to increase the assessment for the preceding year, nor has any action been taken under S. 34 of the Act with regard to the previous year. All that is now held by the Income-tax Department is that during the year under assessment the applicant has really enjoyed income considerably more than the income shown, because the losses which he has alleged in his cotton business have not been proved.

The actual terms of the reference are:

(1) Was the Commissioner of Income-tax right in interpreting the Assistant Commissioner's order to mean that the loss was not proved notwithstanding the facts disclosed by the Assistant Commissioner's order dated 17th December 1925 ?

(2) Was the Commissioner of Income-tax right in interpreting the Assistant Commissioner's order to mean that no imaginary profits from a supposed stock were added in order to set off the loss of Rs. 24,528 sustained by the assessee ?

(3) If not, was not the addition unjustified and bad in law as based on mere suspicion or irregular and hearsay information in the case of the assessee's statement denying the new and imaginary source of income ?

With regard to the first, we are of opinion that the Commissioner of Income-tax was right in his interpretation of the

(2) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 887=50 Cal. 907.

Assistant Commissioner's order. In para. 2 of his order, a copy of which is filed as Ex. B, the Commissioner has quoted a passage from the order of the Assistant Commissioner and has then pointed out that there was some slight confusion in the latter order. The Commissioner has then gone on to show that the assessment in the preceding year was made under S. 23 (4), as accounts were not shown, and in the year under assessment, as the opening stock had not been shown, the Assistant Commissioner refused to admit the loss of Rs. 24,528. The Commissioner has further explained that the addition of this loss to the income return is not really an assessment of additional income but is only a refusal to accept losses, which were alleged, but not proved. We cannot see that there is anything wrong or illegal in the Commissioner's interpretation of the Assistant Commissioner's order or in his findings.

As regards the second question, which is largely a repetition of the first, we would again hold that no imaginary profits from a supposed stock have been added either by the Assistant Commissioner's order or by the Commissioner's interpretation thereof. All that has been held in both orders is that, as the opening stock was not shown, the losses which have been alleged as a result of the sales and purchases for the year under assessment could not be allowed No imaginary profits or additional income have been assessed. The figures as given by the assessee have been accepted with the exception that the losses shown have been disallowed as not proved.

From these findings it follows that the addition was not unjustified or bad in law. It was not really an addition of income, but only a refusal to allow the alleged losses. Nor has it been shown that these losses have been disallowed on account of any hearsay information, and there is no question of any new or imaginary source of income. All that has been held is that in the ordinary cotton business, which was admittedly carried on by the assessee, the losses shown have not been proved, because the opening balance at the beginning of the year was not shown and only sales and purchases during the year were shown.

We are of opinion, then, that the case now stated for decision should be answered as indicated above and that there are no legal grounds for interfering with or reducing the assessment as made by the Commissioner of Income-tax. Costs of this application will be borne by the applicant. We fix pleader's fees at Rs. 300.

Judgment.—The respondent Chunnilal brought a suit against the appellant Gulabchand, his mother Mt. Goridulaiya and a third party Khalaksingh upon a bond, executed by the appellant Gulabchand, and on previous accounts. The trial Court passed a decree for the claim against the appellant only, discharging the other two defendants. An appeal preferred by Gulabchand was dismissed by the District Judge and he now appeals to this Court. The facts of the case are for the most part admitted, and the only question to be decided in the appeal is whether the appellant is estopped from pleading minority as a defence to the claim, as he had represented himself to be of full age when he signed the bond in suit.

The dealings between the parties began in July 1918 and continued up till 1920. All these dealings were effected by the mother Mt Goridulaiya as guardian of her son Gulabchand, and it is alleged that Khalaksingh, who was her agent, also took part in the transactions. In August 1922 the accounts between the parties were made up and then the bond in suit (Ex. P 1), dated 7th Angust 1922, was executed by Gulabchand in his own name for the amount due on the previous bonds and pledges and for a further sum of Rs. 214-3-6 taken in cash, the total coming to Rs. 1,575. The respondent alleged that Gulabchand and the other defendants respresented to him that Gulabchand had attained majority and was looking after his own business and therefore he had the bond executed by Gulabchand in his own name and not by his guardian. Gulabchand denied any such representation on his part, but both the Courts below have held that the representation was made and that on that representation the respondent took the bond from Gulabchand. As regards Gulabchand's minority it is to be noted that it has been proved that he was born on 20th April 1903 and therefore was over 19 years at the time the bond was executed. His estate, however, had been taken under management under the Guardian and Wards Act and Goridulaiya had been appointed guardian of the property and person of the minor by the District Judge on 1st April 1910. The minor was not discharged until 21st November 1923 when the District Judge found that he appeared to be 21 years of age and capable of managing his affairs Under S. 3, Indian Majority Act, the ordinary age of majority is 18 years, but in the case of a person for whom a guardian has been appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act the age of majority is 21 years. It appears then that Gulabchand had not even attained the age of 21 when he was discharged by the District Judge, and that he was only 19 and was still a ward under the Act when he executed the bond in suit. There can be no doubt then that he was a minor at the time the bond was executed, and this has been found by both the Courts below.

As already noted above, however, both the lower Courts have held that, although a minor at the time of the execution of the bond, Gulabchand is now estopped from pleading his minority as he had represented himself to be a major, and on that representation the execution of the bond was accepted by the respondent It is now to be determined whether this view of the law, which has been taken, is correct.

The first point to be borne in mind is that there is a published ruling of this Court in Mt. Muliabai v. Garud (1) in which the view has been expressed, following the decisions in Mahommed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark and R. Leslie, Ltd. v. Shiell (3), that an infant who had obtained money by falsely representing his age would not be liable on a contract, nor would he be liable for money had and received. The lower appellate Court has referred to this ruling in para 13 of its judgment and has brushed it aside somewhat hastily on the ground that the discussion of the point of estoppel in the case really only amounted to obter dicta. I would draw the attention of the learned District Judge to the fact that he is bound to follow the published rulings of this Court and may not set up his own opinion in the matter or follow the rulings of other High Courts, which express a contrary view. I would also differ from the view expressed by the District Judge that the discussion of the question of the estoppel under S 115, Evidence Act, was in any sense an obiter dictum in the case referred to In that case, as in the present case, the question of estoppel had been directly pleaded; and, though as a matter of fact, the finding of the lower appellate Court there was that the minor had not falsely represented himself to be of age, misrepresentation had been distinctly pleaded and was again urged in second appeal I would therefore strictly draw the attention of the District Judge to the published ruling and to the obligation, under which he rests, of following such rulings in future.

Apart from this, I am of opinion that the view expressed in Mt. Muliabai v. Garud (1) is correct, and I see no reason whatever to differ from it. The law of estoppel is the same in India as in England, and it may be laid down as a general rule that, where there is a definite piece of statute law, such as S 11, Contract Act, it would not be defeated by a rule of evidence such as S 115, Evidence Act In England it has been distinctly held that in such a case a minor, who falsely represents himself to be of full age, will not be liable on the contract, nor will he be liable to refund money obtained on the contact. I would refer to the cases of Levene v. Brougham (4) and R. Leslie, Ltd v Shiell (3) The same view has been taken in India in Brahmo Dutt v Dharmo Das Ghose (5) and Mohori Bibi v. Dharmo Das Ghose (6). It is true that the Calcutta ruling in Brahmo Dutt v. Dharmo Das Ghose (5) was passed on an interpretation of the word "person" in S. 115, Evidence Act, which can hardly be sustained ; but even if that interpretation be given up the view may still be held that a minor is not estopped from pleading his minority when he has entered into a contract misrepresenting himself to be of full age. The Madras, Rangoon and Patna High Courts have also repelled the plea of estoppel in such cases I would refer to Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Authimoolam Chettiar (7), Arumugam Chetti v. Vellaichami Tevan (8), Maung Tin v. Ma Lun (9) and Ganganand Singh v. Rameshwar (10). The Bombay High Court, on the other hand, has taken the contrary view and has held that a minor would be estopped from pleading his minority when he entered into a contract by misrepresenting himself to be of full age. I would refer to Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (11), Dadasaheb Dasrathrao v. Bai Nahani (12) and Jasraj Bastimal v. Sadashiv Mahadev (13). The lower appellate Court has relied principally on Surendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Sakhi Dasi (14) and Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (15) Both those cases have this similarity to the present case that the minor was over 18 years of age, but was only a minor as a guardian had been appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act I do not, however, think that that point makes any difference, and the fact that minority is extended in the case of a person for whom a guardian has been appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act does not render him any the less a minor for the purpose of entering into a contract under S. 11, Contract Act. As regards the two cases relied upon by the lower appellate Court, I would point out that Surendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Sakhi Dasi (14) appears to have been dissented from in Golam Abdin v Hem Chandra (16), whilst Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (15) must be held to be definitely overruled by the recent case of Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (17). In the latter case, where the matter has been dealt with most exhaustively and all the authorities have been reviewed, it has been held by all the Judges constituting a Full Bench that a minor is not estopped from pleading his minority to avoid a contract even though he has falsely represented himself to be a major and has thereby induced the other party to enter into the contract. I would say that I am in full and respectful agreement with the judgment of Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., as regards S. 115, Evidence Act, and the question of estoppel. It has thus been definitely decided in England that a minor is not estoppel and can plead his minority to avoid a contract even though he had falsely misrepresented his age at the time of the contract; and in India the balance of authority is strongly in favour of the same view. I would therefore again affirm what has been held in Mt Muliabai v. Garud (1), that a minor is not estopped from pleading his minority as a bar to a contract entered into even though he had falsely represented himself to be of age and thereby induced the other party to enter into the contract.

The question, however, of equitable relief that may be awarded against a minor, even though the contract is held to be void, is one that arises and presents considerable difficulty. In Mt. Muliabai v. Garud (1) (at 152) the following passage occurs and then a passage is quoted from R. Leslie, Ltd v. Shiell (3):

"A distinction must be drawn, of course between a case like the present where cash passed and a case in which particular property e. g., a horse or a motor car passed to a minor. In the latter class of cases where restitution is possible, it can, of course, be decreed by the Court. But the position is entirely different when mere money passes."

There have been a number of decisions on this point in England which are reviewed in the judgment of Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., and Tek Chand, J. in Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (17) It seems that it would be difficult, if not absolutely impossible, to reconcile all the decisions, but the principle would seem to be that, on the contract failing and being declared void by reason of the minority of one party, the parties should be put, as far as possible, in the status quo ante at the time of the contract. Where, however, the contract consists merely of a loan of money it is difficult to see how the parties can be put back into their respective positions prior to their contract except by a return of the money. My opinion, however, is that such a return or refund cannot be made against the minor defendant apart from the contract; nor can the tort, if any of the fraudulent misrepresentation be distinguished from the contract. Sir Shadi Lal, C. J, has held that the equitable relief may take the form of a refund of money borrowed under the contract, but I would respectfully differ from that view and prefer to follow the dissenting judgment of Harrison, J., on this point. This is the view that has been taken in Mt. Muliabai v Garud (1). Following the view expressed in that case I would hold that a contract entered into with a minor is void ab initio, and that the question of rescinding the contract under S. 39, or of cancelling the instrument under S. 41, Specific Relief Act, does not really arise in such cases, and no relief can, therefore, be granted under either of those sections.

The only relief, therefore, which the Court could grant in such case would be an equitable relief and, in particular, as already indicated in Mt. Muliabai v. Garud (1), where specific property has been taken by a minor, restitution can be decreed by the Court In Lempriere v. Lange (18), a lease entered into by a minor, of a furnished house was declared to be void and the minor was ordered to give back immediate possession to the owner, and an injunction was also granted to restrain him from taking away any of the furniture in the house. Stocks v. Wilson (19), went further and held that a minor defendant, who had purchased furniture from the plaintiff by representing that he was of full age, was bound not only to restore the furniture but even to account for sums received by him by sale of the furniture: that is, it was held that not only should the furniture be recovered from the possession of the minor but that, as he had disposed of the furniture, the sale proceeds also could be followed. This seems, in my opinion, difficult to distinguish in some respects from a case where money has been borrowed, though in R. Leslie Ltd v. Shiell (3), it was clearly held that the money could not be followed and that the plaintiff, who had lent money on a fraudulent representation to a minor, could neither claim damages nor sue for money had and received. This point, however, need not be pressed and it will be sufficient to hold that, where a minor by fraudulent representation has obtained a specific object or property, he can be ordered to make restitution upon the contract being declared void, though, when only money has been lent, no decree can be passed against the minor either on the contract of loan or for money had and received to his use.

In the present case it is claimed that, if the bond fails by reason of the appellant's minority, the appellant not being estopped from pleading minority, an equitable relief should be decreed against the appellant and that the appellant should be ordered to make restitution with regard to any benefit which has accrued to him on the void contract. It was argued that the benefit to the appellant consisted of the extinction and cancellation of the former bonds executed by his guardian and the actual return of ornaments that had been pledged to the respondent Chunnilal. As regards the first point, viz., the cancellation of the prior bonds, it is I think clear that no relief can now be granted. Even if the old bonds have been delivered to the appellant, as stated in para. 3 (A) of the plaint, all that could be ordered would be that the appellant should restore those bonds to the respondent Chunnilal; but even if those bonds could, as a matter of fact, now be recovered from the appellant, it is clear that the claim upon those bonds would now be long time barred and the bonds themselves would be worthless. An order, therefore, directing the appellant to return the old bonds to the respondent Chunnilal would be of no avail.

As regards the ornaments, too, there is, I think, considerable difficulty. It is true that the respondent has led evidence to prove that at the time of the execution of the bond (Ex P-1) the pledged ornaments were returned to the appellant, but I hardly think it can be said that those ornaments were properly obtained by the appellant by fraudulent misrepresentation. In the first place, the ornaments admittedly belonged to the appellant himself and were only pledged with the respondent and they were returned to the appellant upon the fresh bond (Ex. P-1) being executed The appellant then got back his own property, and I am very doubtful whether he can now be ordered to make restitution by again returning that property, which had been pledged to the respondent. Nor do I think that Chunnilal has really any very strong claim in equity. He had bonds executed by the appellant's guardian, but instead of choosing to sue upon those bonds, possibly because he may have thought that the appellant would not be liable, as legal necessity could not be proved, he elected to get a fresh bond executed by the appellant himself thinking that by so doing the question of the appellant's liability could not then be disputed. It would seem, therefore, that in equity Chunnilal could have no stronger claim upon the fresh bond than he could upon the original bonds, and his case cannot be strengthened by the fact that the fresh bond has been declared void by reason of the appellant's minority. It may be noted that the trial Court on issue 4 (a) has found that the amount due under (Ex. P-1) was due under old accounts, but that the old debt was not borrowed for legal necessity or for the benefit of the minor. That finding has not, as far as I see, been challenged, nor has the respondent put forward any cross-objection with regard to it. The finding then will stand and on that finding it is clear that the appellant Gulabchand would not be liable upon the old bonds; nor could Chunnilal withhold the ornaments belonging to the appellant that had been pledged to him on those old bonds I am of opinion that even in equity no relief can be given to the respondent.

The defendants Mt. Goridulaiya and Khalaksingh were discharged by the trial Court and no attempt has been made to hold them liable either in the first or in the second appeal. No decree can now be passed against them, as the former bonds, even if they could be produced, would be now time barred, as already stated above. The claim on the bond (Ex. P-1) must fail by reason of Gulabchand's minority and no claim can now be put forward on the strength of the old bonds. As a result, the appeal must succeed. I set aside the decree of the Courts below and instead pass a decree dismissing the suit of the plaintiff-respondent Chunnilal. Chunnilal will bear all costs of the appeals in both Courts and also of the original suit.

Criminal Revn. No. 292-B of 1928, Decided on 5th March 1929, on report by Sess. Judge, Akola.

 Criminal P. C., S. 403 (4)— Persons jointly tried—Some acquitted and some convicted—Appeal against conviction but no appeal against acquittal— Appellate Court declaring trial as void and ordering fresh trial—Acquittal also becomes void—Persons acquitted can be tried for any other offence —Any person added at the fresh trial is not affected by previous acquittals of some accused.

On a complaint against 11 persons, the Magistrate tried them for offences under Ss. 147 and 379, I. P. C. He acquitted 5 of them and convicted under S. 147 the remaining 6 who appealed to the Addl. Sess. Judge. In the appeal it was held that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction and the whole trial was void. A retrial before a competent Court was ordered. At the fresh trial, the complainant applied for processes to be issued against the 5 accused acquitted at the original trial. On the Magistrate's refusal, he filed a fresh complaint under S. 396, I. P. C., adding one more accused. The Magistrate summarily rejected the complaint on the ground that it could not be entertained as the acquittal of the persons named in the complaint had not been set aside.

Held : that as the whole trial was held to be without jurisdiction and void, the acquittal of the non-applicants was also void. [P 162 C1]

Held further : that a person acquitted or convicted of any offence may, notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction, be subsequently charged with and tried for any other offence which he may have committed, if the Court, by which he was first tried, was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged : 7 Mad. 557, Ref. [P 162 C 1]

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge, Akola The facts are briefly these : On a complaint by one Manji Bhate, eleven persons were tried by Mr J. E Solomon, a Subordinate Judge exercising the powers of a 1st Class Magistrate at Akola for offences under Ss 147 and 379, I. P. C. The trial resulted in the conviction of accused 1, 3, 6, 7, 9 and 10 of an offence under S. 147 and in the acquittal of the remaining five accused. The convicted persons preferred an appeal which was heard and disposed of by Mr. M. A. Amraotkar, Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, who set aside the convictions on the ground that inasmuch as the evidence recorded at the trial disclosed an offence of dacoity, an offence admittedly not triable by Mr. Solomon, the whole trial was without jurisdiction and void. Accordingly the learned Additional Sessions Judge directed a retrial of the appellants before him in the Court of a Magistrate of the 1st Class who also exercised the powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C.

The fresh trial accordingly proceeded in the Court of Mr. M A. Subhankhan and an application was put in by the complainant on 3rd October 1928 asking for processes to be issued also against the five persons who were acquitted at the original trial. The learned Magistrate, however, rejected the application on the ground that since there was no appeal preferred against their acquittal, these acquitted persons could not be retried in spite of the fact that the original trial was held to have been void. This order was passed on 3rd October 1928.

The complainant then presented a fresh complaint on 18th October 1928 before the same Magistrate against the aforesaid five accused, who were acquitted at the original trial, and another new person by name Chagganlal and prayed for their trial of an offence under S. 395, I. P. C. On the next day the learned Magistrate without registering the case and without any examination of the complainant passed the following order :

"As these accused were already acquitted of the offence and as that acquittal has not been yet set aside, it is impossible in law to entertain this fresh complaint. The complaint is therefore returned to the complainant."

Against this order the complainant moved the Sessions Judge, Akola, in revision, and the learned Judge has made the present reference to this Court under S. 438, Civil P. C with a recommendation that the Magistrate should be directed to entertain the complaint This reference has been registered in this Court as a criminal revision and the complainant is described as an applicant and the six persons who figure as accused in the petition, of the complainant, dated 18th October 1928 as non-applicants.

In showing cause against the said recommendation of the Sessions Judge the learned advocate for the non-applicants urged that since his clients were not parties to the criminal appeal preferred by the convicted persons the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, the findings given in the appellate judgment are not binding upon them and that the order of acquittal of offences under Ss. 147 and 379, I. P C. passed by Mr. Solomon was a bar to their prosecution for an offence of dacoity on the same facts. I have no doubt that the above contention is not sound and that the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge on the facts stated above is a perfectly correct one. When once it was held that the original trial by Mr. Solomon was void as being without jurisdiction even the acquittal of the first five non-applicants went also by the board.

The words of S. 403 (1), Criminal P C., leave no room for doubt that it is only when a person who has been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and acquitted of such offence that he could not be retried for the same offence so long as the acquittal remains in force. Sub-S. (4) of the section is clearer still for it says that a person acquitted or convicted of any offence may notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction be subsequently charged with and tried for any other offence which he may have committed if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged. The case of Virankutti v Chiyamu (1) quoted by the learned Sessions Judge in his order is a sufficient authority for the above proposition. In the present case there was admittedly no trial before Mr. Solomon for offence under S. 395, I. P. C., and it is conceded that he had no jurisdiction to hold a trial for such an offence. It was on this account that the trial held by Mr. Solomon was held by the learned Additional Sessions Judge to have been without jurisdiction and void. Moreover, as the learned Sessions Judge points out along with the non-applicants who is figured as accused at the last trial, there is another accused added in the new complaint and no order of previous acquittal stands as a bar against him.

I, therefore, hold that the previous acquittal of the non-applicants 1 to 5 cannot stand in the way of their fresh trial for the alleged offence falling under S. 395, I. P. C. I accept the reference and setting aside the orders of the Magistrate dated 3rd October 1928 and 18th October 1928, direct him to receive the complaint dated 18th October 1928 and proceed to dispose of the same according to law.

First Appeal No. 23 of 1928, Decided on 22nd February 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 16th November 1927, in Civil Suit No 8 of 1926

 (a) Mortgage—Construction—Two interpretations as to rate of interest—Decree should be given at lesser rate—Interest.

Where the words used in a mortgage-deed are capable of two different interpretations in regard to the rate of interest, the mortgagee is entitled to a decree with interest, at the lesser rate, if it is uncertain which of the two rates is allowed by the document. [P 163 C 2]

(b) Deed—Construction.

Interpretation, which renders the terms of the document probable, is to be preferred to an interpretation which renders the conditions most unlikely. [P 163 C 2]

(c) Interest—Post diem—Presumption is in favour of post diem interest.

Where a mortgage-deed does not refer to payment of interest after the date fixed for the payment of the principal, it must be presumed that interest was intended to run until the principal should be paid. [P 164 C 1]

Judgment.—The suit for foreclosure out of which this appeal arises is based on a mortgage-deed, dated 1st May 1889. The consideration of the deed was Rs. 600. The mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged property since the date of the mortgage. Nevertheless he claimed that the amount due on the mortgage at the date of the suit was over Rs. 39,000. Mr. Amardekar in dealing with this case held that the deed provided for interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and it was provided that the usufruct was to be taken in lieu of interest. He directed that the parties should state what the profits were in each year from 1889 onwards. It is admitted before us that in view of the finding that profits were to be taken in lieu of interest accounts were not necessary for the years preceding the date on which the mortgage money became payable. Mr. Bhagade succeeded Mr. Amardekar. He held the deed provided for interest at 2 per cent. per mensem; the usufruct of the property was to be taken as equivalent to interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and the remaining interest was to be paid in cash at the end of 25 years. No accounts were therefore necessary. He found that over Rs. 50,000 was due on the mortgage and passed a preliminary decree for foreclosure accordingly. The defendants appeal to this Court.

The points urged before us are. (1) That the mortgage-deed provided for interest at 1 per cent per mensem only. (2) That if it provided for payment at 1 per cent. per mensem compound interest in addition to the usufruct, the mortgage was a hard and unconscionable bargain which should not be enforced by the Court. (3) That the plaintiff was liable to render an account of the profits after the date on which the mortgage debt became payable.

The first point relates to the interpretation of the mortgage-deed. The provisions of the mortgage-deed do not seem to be consistent: the deed commences by stating that the mortgagor has borrowed a sum of Rs. 600 and will pay interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. It is then stated that the mortgagee has been placed in possession of the mortgaged property but will not be accountable for the profits. The next clause is:" (In lieu of the profits 1 per cent. per mensem interest has been remitted). The next sentence has been translated :

"Now I shall resume possession of fields after 25 years subject to the payment of the amount at Re. 1 per cent. interest."

There is a further clause that:

"however much the debt might amount to at the end of 25 years owing to the taking of yearly accounts, that is, giving interest on principal and interest it would be a charge on the fields."

The difficulty in the interpretation arises from the fact that if profits are set off against interest, there would be no question of adding interest to the original amount and no necessity for provision for this contingency. Mr. Bhagade has considered that the deed, read as a whole, shows that the mortgagor agreed to pay 1 per cent. per mensem in addition to allowing the mortgagee to enjoy the usufruct of the fields which was to be considered in lieu of another 1 per cent. per mensem interest.

We are of opinion that the interpretation given by Mr. Amardekar is the most natural meaning of the deed. The deed states clearly that interest is to be paid at 1 per cent. per mensem. In our experience it is by no means rare to find that, although a mortgage states that possession of the mortgaged property has been delivered, possession, as a matter of fact has remained with the mortgagor. It was not, then, an impossible contingency that interest would be added to the principal, and the statement that such interest would be paid may merely mean that if such interest became due, it would be paid. We do not think it possible to draw any strong inference from the word "now" in the sentence.

We do not state that the words of the document could not bear the interpretation put upon them by Mr. Bhagade, but this is only a possible interpretation. The plaintiff, who is suing the defendants on the basis of this document, is entitled to the decree with interest at the lesser rate if it is uncertain which of two rates is allowed by the document. Again, the interpretation which renders the terms of the document probable is to be preferred to an interpretation which renders the conditions most unlikely. It is clear from the document that the mortgagee considered the property to be worth at least Rs. 600, for there is a clause that if the mortgagor does not pay he will not be personally liable. The usufruct of the property, then, must have been considered a fair equivalent to the interest on Rs. 600, and there is no reason why the debtor should agree to pay heavy interest while the mortgagee enjoyed the usufruct. The evidence produced by the plaintiff shows that he appreciated the fact that the deed provided for an unnecessarily high rate of interest for he suggests in the pleadings that the mortgagor intended to put it out of his power to redeem the property as he would have sold the property but for the opposition of the landlord. We agree with the trial Judge that the plaintiff has not shown that the mortgagor had any such intention.

We hold, therefore, that the mortgage deed provided for interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and contained an agreement that the mortgagee should enjoy the usufruct in lieu of such interest.

In view of this finding it is unnecessary to consider whether the terms of the mortgage-deed would be unconscionable if they provided for interest at 1 per cent. per mensem in addition to the usufruct. We are, however, clearly of opinion that the bargain would be such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand and no honest and fair man would accept on the other: as we have stated, the usufruct was obviously at least a sufficient return for the use of the sum lent. We consider that the contract is such that a Court of equity would give relief.

The remaining point urged is that, although it must be presumed that interest was intended to run on after the expiry of 25 years the provision that the profits should be taken in lieu of interest had no application after that period. The deed does not refer to payment of interest after the date fixed for payment of the principal and it is settled law that in such a case it must be presumed that interest was intended to run until the principal should be paid. Now, the main provision of the deed regarding the amount of interest is that profits should be taken in lieu of interest. If the mortgagee remains in peaceful possession, the rate of interest is immaterial. Had the rate of interest not been mentioned it would, in our opinion, have been presumed that the intention of the parties was that the profits should be taken in lieu of interest so long as the principal sum was not paid off: for the reasons which lead to an inference that the parties intended interest to run at the same rate after the date fixed for payment lead to the conclusion that they intended interest to be paid in the same manner as heretofore. We do not consider that the mention of the rate of interest prevents this presumption: the object of this mention is apparently only to provide a method of calculation if the mortgagee does not get, or does not remain in, actual possession. The whole tenor of the deed is to the effect that the land is to be retained in lieu of the sum advanced, primarily for a term of 25 years, but possibly, if the mortgagor does not pay, for ever We hold, therefore, that the intention of the parties was that the mortgagee should receive profits in lieu of interest until the actual date of payment.

There is, then, no necessity for taking any accounts. The decree of the lower Court is varied by fixing the sum due to the plaintiff as principal and interest at Rs 600. The date for payment will be three months after this date. The defendants will pay to the plaintiff costs calculated on a claim at Rs 600 that was due but the plaintiff must pay to the defendants the excess counsel's fee allowed by the lower Court in view of the fact that the fee allowed by the lower Court is liberal. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Laxminarain and another — Decree-holders—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 77-B of 1928, Decided on 12th March 1929, against decision of First Class Sub-Judge, Akola, D-/ 1st September 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3 — Compromise decree in money suit passed — Defendant agreeing to transfer certain property to plaintiff on a certain day—Plaintiff to pay conveyance costs—Decree was held not void and merely declaratory — No separate suit was necessary, the decree being executable.

In a suit for money based on simple money bonds, a compromise was arrived at between the parties, whereby, it was agreed among other things, that in lieu of the amount of the claim and plaintiff's costs and interests, the defendant should execute a sale-deed in plaintiff's favour in respect of certain fields free of all incumbrances on 1st November 1926 and deliver possession of the same on 1st March 1927 and that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the execution of the sale-deed. When the plaintiff applied for the execution of the compromise decree, the defendant objected to the execution on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction under O. 23, R. 3 to embody in its decree, matters extraneous to the claim and that the decree was therefore, a nullity or at best a declaratory decree not executable and that the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was by a separate suit.

Held that the compromise decree was not ultra vires or void or merely declaratory in nature, that it was executable and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff (decree-holder) to institute separate suit for relief granted by the said decree : 34 Cal. 456 ; A. R. 1925 Nag. 239, Appr. [P 167 C 2, P 169 C 1]

(b) Contract Act, S. 54 — Where agreement has become rule of the Court and passed out of domain of contract, S. 54 does not apply.

Where a judgment-debtor pleaded that no relief in execution of the compromise decree should be granted to the decree-holder because the latter committed a breach by his default in paying the costs of conveyance as directed by the decree and that he was relieved of performing his part of the agreement as embodied in the decree under S. 54 on account of the decree-holder's default.

Held ; that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to invoke the aid of the provisions of the Contract Act and say that because the decree-holder committed the default first he was entitled to avoid his own obligations under the terms of the decree especially when those terms were independent of each other. [P 168 C 1]

(c) Contract Act, S. 55—If time is not of the essence of the contract, contract does not become voidable.

Ordinarily in agreements for the sale of property time is not of the essence of contract, but it is open to a party, if it was not originally of the essence, to make it so by service of notice. Unless the parties to a contract have therefore, expressly or impliedly by their conduct, made time the essence of the contract, delay by itself can never be a valid plea in a suit for specific performance unless the delay on the part of one party, coupled with reasonable notice given to him by the other, disentitles the party delaying from claiming any relief in equity. [P 168 C 1]

Where although by the decree 1st November 1926 was fixed for the execution of the sale-deed, the decree itself was not drawn up and signed up till that date.

Held : that under the circumstances time was not of the essence of performance of the obligations created by the decree and that the judgment-debtors were not therefore entitled to avoid them under S. 55 ; *A. (d) Civil P. C., S. 148—S. 148 is no bar to extending time of decree with independent and separately enforceable terms.

Where the terms of a compromise decree are not interdependent and each direction stands by itself and is separately enforceable, the fact that the decree-holder and judgment-debtor have been guilty of failure to perform their respective obligations under the decree, does not disentitle one party from compelling the other to perform his obligations in execution proceedings and in such a case S. 148 does not debar the Court from extending the time fixed by the decree : *A. Judgment —This and the connected First Appeal No. 78-B of 1928 arise under the following circumstances :

In Civil Suit No. 28 of 1926 on the file of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Akola, the plaintiffs' claim based on 4 simple money bonds to recover from the defendants Rs 5,361-8-0 was compromised by the parties and a decree, in the following terms, was passed on 26th October 1928 :

" It is ordered and decreed in terms of the compromise arrived at between the parties that

(1) in lieu of the amount of the claim and plaintiff's costs and interest up to date at 2 p. c. p. m. the defendants 1 and 2 to execute a sale-deed in favour of plaintiff in respect of the fields Nos. 22/1 and 31 of mouza Lonsan on 1st November 1926 free from all incumbrances and after taking the crop of 1926-1927 give possession of the same to the plaintiff on 1st March 1927.

(2) That plaintiff do pay the costs of the execution of the sale-deeds.

(3) That defendants do pay off the mortgage of the fields in favour of Bhagwandin Ramlal and hand over his receipt of full satisfaction to plaintiff and obtain his attestation to the plaintiff's sale-deed.

(4) And that defendants 1 and 2 do pay their own costs of suit.

(5) Defendants 1 and 2 do pay land revenue for 1926-1927. "

It is unfortunate that although there were two plaintiffs the decree in some places describes them as one Similarly in civil suit No. 8 of 1926 on the file of the same Court the plaintiffs' claim to recover from the defendants Rs. 5,400 due on a simple money bond was compromised and a decree passed, on the same day, in plaintiffs' favour on exactly identical terms as the one passed in civil suit No. 28 of 1926 with the only difference that the property to be conveyed in this case consisted of fields Nos. 15 and 24 of mouza Lonasan. By two separate applications dated 29th June 1927 the plaintiffs decree-holders sought to execute the aforesaid decrees but in each case the defendants judgments-debtors resisted execution on identical grounds and their objections were registered in the lower Court separately, the one arising out of execution case No. 28 of 1926 as Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 84 of 1927 and that relating to execution case No. 8 of 1926 as Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 85 of 1927. Exactly identical issues were framed for trial in both these cases.

A very fair idea of the contentions of the parties as advanced in the pleadings will be formed by reproducing the following issues that were fixed for trial by the lower Court :

"1 Whether the decree-holders are not entitled to ask for sale-deed and delivery of possession of the fields from judgment-debtors by way of execution and whether it is necessary for decree-holders to file a separate suit for the purpose ?

2 (a) Whether the term regarding execution of sale-deed and delivery of possession of property could not be embodied in the decree as being matter extraneous to the suit and is this portion of the decree therefore not executable ?

(b) Was it necessary for the judgment-debtors to press the above objection at the time of the passing of the decree and is not the above objection open to them now ?

3 (a) Whether the decree-holders are not entitled to ask for a sale-deed from the judgment-debtors owing to their failure to perform their parl of the contract as embodied in the decree ?

(b) Whether the decree-holders did not purchase stamp for the sale deed owing to judgment-debtors unwillingness to execute the sale deed ?

4 (a) Whether decree-holders allowed judgment-debtors to perform the summer operations and sow the fields on an assurance that they would take a sale deed on Hangam ?

(b) Are the decree-holders on account of the above conduct debarred from asking for a sale deed by the present application which is filed before the expiry of the Hangam ?

(c) Whether the judgment-debtors made over possession of the fields to decree-holders who accordingly did summer operations and whether judgment-debtors subsequently obstructed decree-holders in the cultivation of the fields ?"

In an elaborate order recorded in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 84 of 1927 the learned Subordinate Judge answered issues 1, 2 and the first part of issue 3 in the affirmative and the second part of issue 3 and the first and last parts of issue 4 in the negative. No finding was recorded on issue 4 (b). On these findings the lower Court ordered execution of the decrees to proceed. Two separate appeals challenging the correctness of the decision of the lower Court have been filed by the defendants judgment-debtors in this Court and registered as first appeals Nos. 77-B and 87-B of 1928. As the points for decision in both the cases are identical, one set of arguments was addressed by the counsel for the parties, and therefore this judgment will govern both the appeals.

The appellants' learned advocate argued that the subject-matters in the two suits being merely claims for moneys due under simple money bonds the Court had no jurisdiction under the provisions of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., to embody in its decrees, as it actually did, matters extraneous to the claim, and therefore the decrees were nullity or at best declaratory ones and not executable and the plaintiffs' remedy, if any, was by separate suits.

It is contended that the last words of the aforesaid rule "so far as it relates to the suit" exclude the possibility of all matters which are not the subject-matter of the suit and Jasimuddin v. Biswas Bhuban Jellini (1) and Hemanta Kumari Debi v Midnapore Zamindari Co. Ltd. (2) have been cited in support of the contention. In the first case cited it appears that a regular suit based on the agreement embodied as part of the decree upon a compromise entered into in the previous suit, was filed and the only question for decision before the Court was if the terms of the solehnama could not be proved on the ground of its being unregistered and the Court held that they could be proved. In the Privy Council case the same question was in issue and their Lordships held that the unregistered agreement which was a part of the compromise decree could be received in evidence. In dealing with the question, whether the decree could be given in evidence to affect matters not coming within the scope of the suit for want of registration, their Lordships no doubt remarked that it may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the scope of the suit, but that it did not prevent its being received in evidence of its contents. The question involved in the present case was not, however, raised or decided in either of the above cases and therefore they cannot be regarded as authority to be followed in the decision of the present case.

In a later case before the Privy Council the question was if a compromise arrived at between the parties in a suit, which embraced within its terms matters extraneous to the subject-matter of the suit could be recorded and given effect to in a decree under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., and their Lordships answered both the questions in the affirmative: vide Mehdi Ali Khan v Ghanshiam Singh (3). The principle laid down in this case was followed with approval by a Bench of this Court in the case of Naraindas Bhagwanai and Co. v. Kalyanji (4) in preference to the observations contained in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumari v. The Midnapur Zamindari Co. (2) and it was held that it was competent to the Court not only to record the entire compromise but to pass a decree in accordance therewith by even including in its operative parts the operative directions thereof, in spite of the suit being merely declaratory in its nature.

Exactly the same view was also expressed by the Madras High Court in the case of Ramaswami Naidu v. Subbaraya Tevar (5) where the learned Judges held that a decree passed on a Compromise cannot be regarded as ultra vires simply because it goes beyond the subject-matter of the suit and contains other conditions. It was further held in this case that if the terms of the compromise decree which do not relate to the suit appear either directly or indirectly as consideration on which the settlement of the plaint claim was based then such terms may be considered as part of the decree executable with it.

In Shashi Bhusan Shaw v. Hari Narain Shaw (6) it was observed that where a suit is merely for the recovery of specific properties, the distinction between property in suit and property extraneous to the litigation may be adequate and will be equal to the distinction between matters which relate to the suit and matters which do not, and that in those cases where suits are not for recovery of property but to establish particular claims, facts have to be looked at as a whole to ascertain whether matters have been introduced into the suit which do not relate to the suit. Mr. Mulla in his Commentaries on the Civil P. C., Edn. 8 at p. 773, observed that as a general rule all terms which form the consideration for the adjustment of the matters in dispute, whether they form the subject-matter of the suit or not, become related to the suit and can be embodied in the decree. The ratio decidendi of the case of Mehdi Ali Khan v. Ghanshiam Singh (3) also is that where a compromise completely disposes of a suit and the terms agreed to are such as to be susceptible of specific performance being granted, no party to such a compromise can refuse to be bound by its terms and to escape from his obligation thereunder In Mt. Sarjabai v Dhanraj (7) where a decree was passed in terms of a compromise which directed that in case of failure in payment upto a certain date, by the judgment-debtor, of the decretal amount, the amount was to be a charge on certain properties of the judgment-debtor, this Court held that the charge was enforceable in execution of that decree and no separate suit was necessary.

On the question whether the decrees were nullity the learned advocate for the appellants frankly admitted that he found no authority in support of his contention Applying the principle discussed above to the facts of the present cases, I have no hesitation in holding that the compromise decrees in Civil Suits Nos. 28 of 1926 and 8 of 1926 dated 26th October 1928 were not ultra vires or void, that the same were not merely declaratory in nature, that the same are executable, and that it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to institute separate suits for the reliefs already granted by the said decrees.

It was next contended on behalf of the appellants that assuming that the decrees could be enforced specifically, no relief should be granted to the plaintiffs because they committed a breach by their default in paying the costs of conveyance as directed by the decrees and the defendants are, therefore, relieved of performing their part of the agreement embodied in the decrees S. 54, Contract Act, was relied on in support of this contention. The respondents' learned advocate, however, met this contention by arguing that the provisions of the Contract Act did not come into play in cases where the agreement between the parties had become a rule of the Court and passed out of the domain of the contract and this argument has my entire concurrence. I hold, therefore, that it is not open to the appellants to invoke the aid of the provisions of the Contract Act and say that because the plaintiffs committed the default first, the appellants were entitled to avoid their own obligations under the terms of the decree.

Assuming, however, that the law governing contracts could be applied to the terms of a decree the next question for consideration is whether time was of the essence of the obligations created by the terms of the present decrees Ordinarily, in agreements for the sale of property time is not of the essence of the contract, but it is open to a party, if it was not originally of the essence, to make it of such essence by service of notice : see Jamshed Khodaram v Burjorji Dhunjibhai (8) referred to with approval in this Court's judgment ih Shahabuddin v. Vilayat Ali Khan (9). Unless the parties to a contract have, therefore, expressly or impliedly by their conduct made time the essence of the contract, delay by itself, can never be a valid plea in a suit for specific performance unless the delay on the part of one party, coupled with reasonable notice given to him by the other, disentitles the party delaying from claiming any relief in equity : see Kissen Gopal v. Kally Prosonno (10), Jamshed Khodaram Irani v Burjorji Dhunjibhai (8) and Suryaprakasarayadu v. Lakshminarasimhacharyulu (11)

It is significant to note that although by the decrees in these cases the 1st November 1926 was fixed for the execution of the sale deeds the decrees themselves were not drawn up and signed up till that date, and I agree with the lower Court in thinking that, under the circumstances, it does not seem at all probable that the particular date mentioned above was of the essence of the contract. I, therefore, hold that time was not of the essence of performance of the obligations created by the decrees in the present case and that the appellants are not, therefore, entitled to avoid them under S. 55, Contract Act.

I am further of opinion that since the decrees contain specific directions as to what each party had to do, these directions must be read as independent of each other For instance had the defendants paid all the costs of conveyance themselves and executed the sale deeds, could they not enforce, by coercive process of execution proceedings, the obligations of the plaintiffs under the decrees of reimbursing them for those expenses? Could the plaintiffs then be heard to say that because they could not find the money in the first instance and pay it over to the defendants, the latter had no business to incur the costs of the sale deeds and ask for reimbursement? I think under the express terms of the decrees each party has to do his bit failing which the other party has a right to have it performed through the machinery provided by the execution proceedings.

Another ingenious argument advanced on behalf of the appellants was that as the date fixed in the decrees for the execution of the sale deeds has passed by, on account of the default of the plaintiffs in paying the costs of conveyance beforehand, the decrees have become incapable of execution, the Court having no power in decrees based upon compromises to extend the time for performance under S. 148, Civil P. C. Reliance was placed on the following two cases of this Court : Ambadas v Laxman (12) and Dawlat v. Kashirao (13). The first was a case of pre-emption in which there is always an alternative direction given in the decree that if the money is not paid by a particular date the suit would be dismissed. The second was of a consent decree in a mortgage suit where special period of one year was fixed for redemption with an alternative of foreclosure and this Court, under the circumstances rightly held that no further extension of time could be granted. In the present cases the decrees contain no alternative directions that if by the particular dates mentioned therein any party failed to carry out his part of the obligations he would be relieved completely of all obligations imposed upon him by the decrees and the other party would be precluded from enforcing them against the party in default It is, therefore, clear that the cases cited above have no application to the facts and circumstances of the present cases. As I have already said the terms of the present decrees appear to me to be not interdependent, but each direction stands by itself and can, therefore be separately enforced.

There is a clear finding contained in the last portion of the lower Court's judgment, with which I fully agree, to the effect that in the present cases both the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors are guilty of failure to perform their respective obligations created by the decrees, but for the reasons given above this cannot disentitle one party from compelling the other to perform his obligations in execution proceedings. To disallow the plaintiffs decree-holders to execute the decrees would be doing manifest injustice to them under the circumstances of the case

For the reasons set forth above I uphold the orders passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in these cases and dismiss the appeals with all costs. As the subject-matters in dispute in both the cases are valued at more than Rupees 10,000, I fix the counsel's fees in this Court in each case at Rs. 150.

Judgment—The plaintiffs who are malguzars of patti No. 2 of mouza Usgaon in the Sakoli Tahsil of the Bhandara District sued defendant 1 for possession of sir field No. 76 comprised in the said patti. Various defences were raised in the trial Court but they failed and the plaintiffs' claim was decreed on the ground that defendant 1 being merely a subtenant was liable to be ejected. Defendant 1 appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara, who recorded further pleadings and admitted fresh documentary evidence and ultimately allowed the appeal dismissing the plaintiffs' suit holding that the notice to quit dated 3rd February 1926 (Ex A. D-2) which was given by the plaintiffs to defendant 1, was not a valid and legal notice, because it required the defendant to quit the field at once on receipt of the notice.

The plaintiffs have now come up in second appeal and the only point pressed for them is that the notice (Ex. A. D-2) was a perfectly valid notice and the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding it otherwise. It was argued that the learned District Judge erred in applying the provisions of S. 106, T. P. Act, to the case because by S. 117 agricultural leases were exempted from the operation of Chap. 5 ibid.

It was however, conceded that reasonable notice was necessary to be given in the present case as the subtenancy was from year to year. Reliance was placed upon the following cases to show that the notice to quit so far as the agricultural leases were concerned need not be 6 months notice terminating with the end of the year of the tenancy, and that it is enough if it requires the tenant to give up possession at a time when there are no crops standing in the field : Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Chund Chungo (1), Radha Gobind v. Rakhal Das (2), and Ambabai v. Rajaram (3).

In the first Calcutta case a three months notice to quit was given though it did not expire with the end of the year of the tenancy and it was found that there were no crops on the land at the date of the expiry of the time stated in the notice. In the second case from the same High Court the notice required the tenant to quit after one month and under the circumstances of those cases the period of one and three months were considered reasonable The Bombay case referred to laid down that in cases before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation a tenant other than a monthly tenant, holding over on the terms of his lease was entitled to reasonable, that is to say, in the case of lands and in the absence of usage or stipulation to the contrary to six months' notice to quit. None of these cases is, therefore, any authority for holding that a notice demanding an agricultural tenant from year to year to quit the land immediately or forthwith on receipt of the notice is a proper and reasonable notice within the meaning of the expression used in the case of Sheomangal v Nanhelal (4). In another case Batten, A. J. C., held that five months notice before the end of the agricultural year was a sufficient one in terminating a subtenancy of an absolute occupancy holding : Govinda v. Chindhu (Second Appeal No. 201 of 1917).

In para 2906 of Dr. Gour's Law of Transfer, Vol. 3, 5th Edn., it is stated, following an English case, that a notice to quit forthwith or from henceforth or to quit generally without referring to some distinct time would be invalid and I have been shown no authority to hold that such a notice as is given in the present case could be called a reasonable notice even in the case of agricultural tenancy Agreeing, therefore, with the lower appellate Court I hold that the notice (Ex. A. D-2) was not a valid notice and that the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed on that account.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Costs in the lower Courts will be paid as already ordered by the decree appealed against.

Where a broker brings his principal, the vendor, face to face with the purchaser, it cannot be said that he did not disclose the name of the principal and so the presumption under S. 230 will not arise. But if the purchaser does not keep record of the sellers' names and his account books show that he used to make payments to the broker, the broker shall be deemed to be intended under the contract to have the right to sue the purchaser personally for the price of the goods sold. Judgment.—The plaintiff, Narayan is a broker who acts as an intermediary between merchants who purchase cloth and Topiwalas who sell cloth. The learned District Judge has described the prevalent practice as follows :

" The merchants or prospective buyers arrive at a place and desire to buy cloth. They then approach a dalal who collects the Topiwalas or the middle men, who had obtained cloth from the weavers, and the parties meet. The buyers then see the various specimens of cloth and purchase them, but they do not actually purchase direct from the Topiwalas, but through the dalals or brokers, who charge 1 per cent. commission on the transactions and arrange for delivery to the buyers. The prices are apparently fixed in consultation, but if the buyer himself is not present it is admitted on both sides that the price is fixed by the broker. There is no enhancement of price between the buyer and the seller, the broker's commission being a fixed percentage. The buyers have an account with the broker and so do the sellers."

The plaintiffs have filed the present suit to recover from a merchant the price of cloth which he had purchased for him and delivered to him in this manner together with interest on that price. The defence which I have to consider was that the plaintiff, Narayan was a mere broker and had no right to bring the suit.

The learned District Judge has held that since the buyer does not trouble to make any enquiry regarding the identity of the Topiwala and does not keep any record of his name, it must be considered that the agent has not disclosed the name of his principal : a presumption, therefore, arises in accordance with S. 230, Contract Act, that a contract exists to the effect that the agent can personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of the Topiwala.

In appeal it is urged that since the buyers and sellers came face to face the name of the principal was thereby disclosed. The plaintiff Narayan clearly dealt with the defendant in the capacity of an agent for the seller ; in my opinion, when he brought his principal face to face with the defendant, it cannot be said that he did not disclose the name of his principal. But S. 230, Contract Act, merely says that a presumption arises when the agent does not disclose the name of the principal. If no such presumption arises, the question remains whether or not facts exist to justify an inference that there was a contract allowing the agent to sue personally. I have to consider what was the intention of the parties when the transaction to which this appeal relates took place. The facts proved and admitted clearly justify the inference that the parties did intend that the agent should recover the price of the cloth. It is admitted that the appellant has kept no record of the names of the principals ; he has made payments to the respondent and his account books show such payments as made to respondent 1. It can be safely inferred that it was a term, explicit or implied, of the contract that the appellant should make payments to the respondent.

The appellant next urges that S. 236, Contract Act, prevents the respondents from requiring the performance of the contract; but this section only applies to cases where a person misleads another by describing himself as an agent. Apart from this, I fully agree that respondent 1 was in reality acting as an agent.

I hold, therefore, that, as there was a contract to that effect, the agent can personally enforce the contract for the sale of the goods. It is next urged that interest should not have been allowed. The plaintiffs allege that one of the terms of the contract was that the price should be paid in three months. It is difficult to see how on this pleading a decree for interest for the whole period subsequent to the transaction can be upheld. The learned District Judge has relied on Haridayal v. Sunderlal (1) The decision in that case appears to be that the general provisions of the Interest Act cannot detract from special provisions such as those of S. 73, Contract Act. This decision may be supported by a reference to Hurropersaud Roy v. Shamapersaud Roy (2) where their Lordships point out at p. 660 that these words occur in Act 32 of 1839 :

" Provided that interest should be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law."

In my opinion, it was for the plaintiffs to allege and prove facts by virtue of which it could be held that the interest claimed was payable by law.

In Abdul Saffur v. Hamida Bivi (3) (at 666) it is stated :

" The cases to which the learned Advocate-General drew our attention establish that the Act was not intended to affect payments of interest or compensation in matters not coming strictly within the letter of the law."

The cases to which they refer, however, show that interest was allowed for some definite and special reason. In Hurropersaud Roy v. Shamapersaud Roy (2) interest was awarded on mesne profits for reasons which do not apply to debts other than mesne profits. In

"It is well-settled that in certain cases, when on the dissolution of a firm one of the partners retains assets of the firm in his hands without any settlement of accounts and applies them in continuing the business for his own benefit, he may be ordered to account for these assets with interest thereon."

These Privy Council rulings furnish no support for the theory that Courts have power to award interest in all cases where money due is withheld.

In the case I am considering the plaintiffs did not prove their allegation that one of the terms of the contract was that the price should be paid in three months. I need not consider what would have been the result had they pleaded an implied contract that the money should be paid in a reasonable time. They have not then shown that the defendant's failure to pay was a breach of the contract and S 73, Contract Act, cannot apply. There is no question of an agreement by which they forbore to sue I do not know of any provision of law or any settled principle under which they can claim interest. I, therefore, vary the decree of the lower Court by excluding interest. Costs in all Courts will be be borne in proportion to success and failure

Criminal Revn. No. 59 of 1921, and Misc. Petn. No 13 of 1929, Decided on 12th April 1929, against the order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Jubbulpore, D/- 3rd December 1928

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Accused has absolute right to get copy of statement of prosecution witness.

The Court cannot refuse to grant copies to the accused of the statements of prosecution witness, which have been previously reduced to writing, because on a persual thereof it considers that there is no contradiction of the depositions recorded in Court. Although the statement previously recorded into writing may only be used to contradict a witness, the Court cannot, on that ground, refuse to grant a copy because there is apparently no contradiction. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 215, Ref. [P 174 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Scope.

An accused person has a right to apply for copies as soon as a witness is called for prosecution either in an inquiry or in a trial. [P 174 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 526 — Magistrate refusing copies of statements of prosecution witnesses—His order bona fide and under genuine mistake of law—No bias on his part —Application for transfer is not entertainable.

Where the Magistrate was clearly wrong in refusing to grant copies of statements previously recorded and made by prosecution witnesses but where his order was a bona fide one made under a genuine mistake of law.

Held: that the Magistrate did not act under any bias or prejudice and therefore an application for transfer on that ground could not be granted. [P 174 C 1, 2]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 526—In cases of doubt of personal impartiality of the Judge or where his acts and orders create reasonable apprehension in accused, transfer should be granted but not otherwise.

Where any doubt can be shown as regards the personal impartiality of the presiding Judge of the Court, a transfer should immediately be granted; but where no such personal grounds can be shown a transfer should only be granted when the Magistrate has shown by his acts or orders that there is a possibility that he may be prejudiced against the accused or, at any rate, that the accused might have a reasonable apprehension that he is so prejudiced. Such an apprehension should not arise from the ordinary acts of a Magistrate performed in the course of a case. During the conduct of a protracted trial it necessarily happens that many points arise upon which the Magistrate has to give a decision, and the fact that he makes a decision against the accused is not sufficient to warrant any apprehension of impartiality if the order is passed in good faith and the reasons for the order are duly stated: 10 N. L. R. 15; *A. Order.—This is an application by seven persons, who are being prosecuted under S. 307, I. P. C. in the Court of Mr Wickenden, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Jubbulpore, for transfer of the case from that Magistrate The application is fairly long, but in argument the learned counsel who appeared for the applicants put forward only three grounds in support of it. The first was that the Magistrate had persistently refused to grant bail to the applicants although he was not justified in doing so; the second was that the Magistrate refused to grant copies of statements made by witnesses for the prosecution though the applicants had applied for such copies under S. 162, Criminal P. C; and the third ground was that the Magistrate of his own motion called further medical evidence in addition to that adduced by the prosecution. It is alleged that from these circumstances the applicants had a reasonable apprehension that the Magistrate was biased against them and that they would not get a fair and impartial hearing.

As regards the first ground, there is, I think, absolutely no case The only order by Mr. Wickenden as regards bail is contained in the order-sheet of 15th October 1928. In that it is stated that the Magistrate could not grant bail owing to the nature of the case and the Dasehra festival. It may be noted, however, that prior to that order bail had been refused by Thakur Chhattar Singh, Magistrate First Class, on 15th September, by Mr. Dewey, Magistrate First Class, on 29th September, by Mr. Woodward, Sessions Judge, on 22nd September and by Mr. Jawahir Lall, Additional Sessions Judge, on 1st October 1928. In view of these previous orders Mr Wickenden cannot be held to have been wrong in refusing bail. It is true that bail was allowed by this Court on 31st October, but, as it had been previously refused not only by the two Magistrates to whom applications had been made, but also by the Sessions Judge and the Additional Sessions Judge, Mr. Wickenden was, in my opinion, right in refusing bail on 15th October 1928. At any rate, no possible bias can be inferred from his refusal.

As regards the refusal to grant copies, Mr. Wickenden has made a report in his explanation to the District Magistrate, and in his order of 5th December Mr. Wickenden has given reasons for not granting copies It is true that he made a mistake in the matter and was not right in refusing to grant copies; but the Magistrate appears to have made a bona fide mistake and also, if his explanation can be believed, he was following a practice which had apparently been followed by the Sessions Judge The application was made on 26th November On that Mr. Wickenden has endorsed:

"I will peruse the diary and give statements accordingly. On further consideration, as the case is a committal one and at this stage no question of further examination for purposes of contradiction arises in this Court, the application does not lie to me. In case of committal the Sessions Judge may be approached."

In the order dated 5th December the Magistrate has written:

"Copies of the case diary can only be granted for purpose of contradicting a witness. The X examination of the witnesses had been closed. Therefore no question of contardicting the witness in this Court arose Therefore, no application for copies could lie to this Court at that stage."

In the report to the District Magistrate Mr. Wickenden has said that the accused had not an automatic right to copies of the case diary, bnt had only a right for the purpose of contradiction after a witness had been examined, and that the practice of the Sessions Judge was to peruse the diary when asked by the defence counsel and to give a copy of such portion of the statement which would contradict the witness's statement made in Court In his further report to the District Magistrate Mr Wickenden has stated that the rejection of the application was on legal grounds upon a more careful appreciation of S. 162. As already stated above, I think there is no doubt that Mr. Wickenden was wrong in the matter and, if I may believe him, the Sessions Judge also appears to be labouring under a mistake. According to S. 162 of the present Criminal P. C. the Court is bound, on the request of the accused, to refer to the statements of the prosecution witness, which has been previously reduced into writing, and to furnish the accused with a copy thereof. The only ground on which the Court could refuse to grant a copy is stated in para 3, Cl. (1) of that section. The Court could not, then, refuse to grant copies because upon a perusal of the statements previously recorded it considers that there is no contradiction of the depositions recorded in Court. It is true that according to S. 162 the statement previously reduced into writing may be used only to contradict a witness in the manner provided by S. 145, Evidence Act, but the Court cannot on that ground refuse to grant a copy because there is apparently no contradiction. Under S. 162 of the Code of 1898 there was more discretion left to the Court in the matter, and previous rulings referring to S. 162 would show that the Court could refuse to grant copies for sufficient reasons; but as the section now stands, I am of opinion that an accused person has an absolute right to get a copy of a statement of a witness for the prosecution that has not been refused for reasons stated in the last paragraph of Cl. (1).

I would refer in this connexion to Ramgulam v. Emperor (1) Nor am I pressed by Mr. Wickenden's reasoning that the application should not be made in his Court but in the Court of the Sessions Judge. An accused person has a right to apply for copies as soon as a witness is called for the prosecution either in an inquiry or in a trial, the word "inquiry" being expressly mentioned in para. 2, S. 162. At the same time, although Mr. Wickenden was, in my opinion, clearly wrong in refusing to grant copies, there can be no doubt that his order was a bona fide one made under a genuine mistake of law and apparently following a practice which was adopted by the Sessions Judge in the matter. There can be no ground, then, for supposing that Mr Wickenden has acted under any bias or prejudice: on the contrary he seems to have taken considerable pains in the matter, to have read the statements in the diary carefully and to have passed his order after satisfying himself that there was no contradiction. I do not, therefore, think that there can be any reasonable apprehension of partiality or unfairness against the Magistrate owing to his refusal to grant copies.

The third ground is, I think absolutely without foundation. Under S. 540, Criminal P C., a Court has full power to summon any person as a witness, and it has been laid down that the Court shall summon such person if his evidence appears essential for the just decision of the case. Mr. Wickenden has given good rsasons for calling further medical evidence. The case was challaned under S. 307, I. P. C., and it is clear that medical evidence would be important The injured person was examined by Dr. Sampson upon his admission to the hospital, but was not subsequently examined by him. After his examination Mr. Wickenden was of opinion that more medical evidence was necessary and the Public Prosecutor said he would produce further evidence. In calling further medical evidence Mr. Wickenden was clearly acting within the provisions of S. 540, Criminal P. C., and no suspicion of bias of any kind can arise. It cannot be held that Mr Wickenden was guiding or assisting the prosecution. all that he did was to call further medical evidence which, in a case of this kind, was probably most desirable.

I am clearly of opinion, then, that none of the grounds put forward show any bias or prejudice on the part of the Magistrate, nor is the cumulative effect of the circumstances such as would cause any reasonable apprehension in the minds of the applicants that they would not get a fair and impartial trial The applicants are men of some position and education, or, at any rate, they are not merely ignorant villagers, as is often urged in applications of this kind; and this being so they cannot be expected to have any reasonable apprehension, unless the circumstances are such as would warrant such an apprehension in the mind of a man of average intelligence and mental capacity. It is true that, when there does exist a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused, a transfer of a case should be ordered even though the circumstances are not such as would make the Court doubt the possibility of a fair and impartial trial This has been held in several decisions, although it may be noted in passing that according to S. 526 (1) (a), Criminal P. C.. it is laid down that

"whenever it is made to appear to the High Court that a fair and impartial inquiry or trial cannot be had in any criminal Court subordinate thereto . . . . etc."

There is nothing in S. 526 as regards any apprehension in the mind of the accused, and the only criterion is whether the High Court is of opinion that a fair and impartial trial can or cannot be held. At the same time, it has now been laid down in a number of decisions that a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused is a ground for ordering a transfer, and that view must, I think, be followed. I would refer to the decisions in Machal v. Matru (2), Abdulla v. Emperor (3), Upendra Nath v Khtish Chandra (4), Farzand Ali v. Hanuman Prasad (5) and Narain Chandra v. Howrah Municipality (6) At the same time I would also .refer to the case in Emperor v Jaggan (7) where Know, J., has taken rather a different view of the matter. Granting, however, that a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused is a sufficient cause for transferring a case the Court must be satisfied that such a reasonable apprehension exists, and it can only be so satisfied from the circumstances of the case and from the conduct and behaviour of the accused as well as the accused's character and mental status. Each case must, of course, be decided on its own merits It is in my opinion impossible to determine with absolute certainty whether a reasonable apprehension exists in the minds of the accused or not as, strictly speaking, it is impossible to determine the intention of the accused. Intention, however, as laid down by Ismay, J. C., in Jhagru Gond v Emperor (8), can only be inferred from the acts of the accused, and every sane person must be presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts. Similarly, the state of an accused person's mind and the possibility or probability of his entertaining a reasonable apprehension can only be determined from the circumstances, which might give rise to such apprehension and from the conduct of the accused, after taking into consideration the accused's position in life, social status and mental development. I would also quote a passage that occurs in Narain Chandra Bannerjee v. The Howrah Municipality (6) at 444 :

"The law requires that it should be made to appear to this Court that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before we take action under S. 526 (1), Criminal P. C., and we think that we should not be doing our duty if we pretended to accept as reasonable grounds which we knew to be insufficient and unreasonable simply because the litigants were foolish enough to entertain them. To extend the rule in the manner suggested by the learned counsel would be to encourage a distrust in the integrity and independence of the magisterial Courts in this country which would amount to a serious evil. We conceive it to be our duty rather to discourage than to encourage it. We are not prepared therefore to apply the rule unless we are satisfied that there is in the present case a reasonable apprehension that the petitioners will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court before which their case is at present."

I would also point out that in Serjeant v. Dale (9), a case often quoted in this connexion, the reason for holding that the Court was not impartial was a personal one Such a reason does not apply to the present case or to the majority of cases in which applications for transfer are made. Of course, where any doubt can be shown as regards the personal impartiality of the presiding Judge of the Court, a transfer should immediately be granted; but where no such personal grounds can be shown a transfer should only be granted when the Magistrate has shown by his acts or orders that there is a possibility that he may be prejudiced against the accused or, at any rate, that the accused might have a reasonable apprehension that he is so prejudiced. Such an apprehension should not arise from the ordinary acts of a Magistrate performed in the course of a case. During the conduct of a protracted trial it necessarily happens that many points arise upon which the Magistrate has to give a decision, and the fact that he makes a decision against the accused is not sufficient to warrant any apprehension of impartiality, if the order is passed in good faith and the reasons for the order are duly stated There is a tendency on the part of accused persons to come up for a transfer whenever there is an order which is adverse to them, but such an order can be no ground for a transfer if passed in good faith and in exercise of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. It may be noted that, in some of the cases referred to above, in which a transfer was granted on the ground of a reasonable apprehension existing in the minds of the accused, the Magistrate had either acted upon information outside the record or had acted in some other irregular manner Such irregularity would, of course naturally give rise to an apprehension; but when a Magistrate has not acted irregularly and has only acted in good faith and in exercise of his jurisdiction no apprehension should, as a rule, arise or be presumed to exist. Even when, as in the present case, a Magistrate has made a mistaken order, as pointed out above with reference to S 162, Criminal P C.. it is no sufficient ground for inferring any reasonable apprehension of bias or prejudice, when the order has been passed in good faith and for reasons stated therein. In the case of a very ignorant or unsophisticated person a transfer might be granted more readily, but in the case of persons of ordinary intelligence and character a transfer should only be given upon reasonable grounds. It is not sufficient in such a case for the accused to say that they have an apprehension that they will not get a fair and impartial trial, but it must be shown that, from the circumstances of the case, a reasonable inference can be drawn that such an apprehension does exist in the minds of the accused.

In the present case I am of opinion that the circumstances do not show that any sufficient reason for such an apprehension exists, nor do I think that the accused really entertain any such apprehension: their object in making this application is, I think simply to secure a transfer, and to defeat or delay the ends of justice The application is one that should not be granted and I therefore dismiss it. The Magistrate will now proceed with the trial of the case

Before removing a guardian, he should be given notice setting out for which of the causes mentioned in S. 39, it is proposed to remove him : 20 C. L. J. 231, Rel. on. [P 176 C 2]

P. K. Salve—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The record of this case indicates that Yamunabai was an unsatisfactory guardian : she did not file accounts, she expended Rs 1,000 on a marriage without sanction of the Court and she did not obey the orders of the Court. On 25th January 1929, however, she had not been directed to be present in Court ; a report was taken into consideration without giving her an opportunity to offer an explanation. She was removed from the guardianship and the reasons for her removal are not stated She has appealed from this order under the provisions of S. 47, Guardians and Wards Act.

It appears to me that she should have been given notice setting out for which of the causes mentioned in S. 39 of the Act it was proposed to remove her. The course taken in Mahadeb Mondal v. Bidhi Chand Mondal (1) appears a convenient one. It is highly undesirable that the order removing her from guardianship should be at once set aside The appellant's counsel is informed that she must appear before the District Judge on the day after the expiry of the vacation. She will then be informed of the reasons for the proposal to remove her from guardianship and will be allowed to give any explanation which she desires. In the meantime, however, she will not be guardian of the minor. I make no order regarding costs.

Judgment. — The appellant in this case, Ramchandra, and defendant 1 Harishchandra, were the sons of Raoji Kunbi. After Raoji's death there was, according to the finding of both the lower Courts, a partition between Ramchandra and Harishchandra. After the partition Ramchandra was taken in adoption by his uncle Bisram, and Harishchandra took possession of the property that had fallen to Ramchandra at the partition. On attaining majority Ramchandra brought the suit, out of which this appeal arises, to recover possession on the ground that the property had vested in him before the adoption and could not be divested by the adoption. The trial Court decreed Ramchandra's claim, but the lower appellate Court has reversed the decree and dismissed the suit.

The first point I propose to deal with, is the contention raised on behalf of the respondents that the lower Courts' finding as to partition having taken place is wrong. This finding is attacked on the ground that a document, Ex. P-16, described as a farkat, is not registered, although it is a deed of partition and, having regard to the value of the property affected, is compulsorily registrable, and should not have been admitted in evidence. It is admitted that there was a division of property between Ramchandra and Harishchandra, but it is said to have been admitted in evidence. It is admitted that there was a division of property between Ramchandra and Harishchandra, but it is said to have been merely a family arrangement. There is, however, adequate evidence, apart from Ex P-16, to show that there was a partition and not merely a family arrangement; and even if the view is accepted that Ex P-16 has been wrongly admitted in evidence, I see no reason to differ from the finding of the lower Courts that Ramchandra and Harishchandra separated from each other.

I now come to the main question to be decided in this appeal, and that is, whether the adoption of Ramchandra by Bisram operated to divest Ramchandra of the property that fell to his share at the partition The principal case relied on by the appellant is Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya Appa Row (1), in which it was held that the adoption into another family of the only surviving member of a joint family, in whom the family estate has vested solely and absolutely, does not in law operate to divest him of his rights in such estate. This view of the law agrees with that taken by Ameer Ali, J., in Behari Lal v Kailas Chunder (2), and it has been accepted in Mahableshwar Narayan v. Subramanya Shivram (3), in Maroti v. Laxman (4), in Gour's Hindu Code and in Sarvadhikari's Principles of the Hindu Law of Inheritance. The respondents contend that this view is wrong, resting their case mainly on the wording of the text of Manu that deals with the position of an adopted boy as regards the family and estate of his natural father, Ch. 9, Verse 142, and on the interpretation of that text in Sarkar's Hindu law, and that learned writer's theory of adoption as tantamount to civil death in the family of birth and rebirth in the family of adoption.

Sarkar's view of the effect of adoption after property had vested in the person adopted was originally the same as that taken in Venkata Narasimha v Rangayya Appa Row (1) The theory subsequently held by him that adoption is tantamount to civil death and rebirth has been considered in the judicial decisions and text books referred to above, and has not, for reasons which appear to me to be sound, been accepted as an accurate guide as to the effect of adoption. It has been accepted by Mookerjee, J., in Birbhadra Nath v. Kalpataru Panda (5), but I cannot find that it has been accepted elsewhere In Dattatraya Sakharam v. Govind Sambhaji (6), Shah, J., though he dissented from Venkata Narasimha Row v. Rangayya Appa Row (1), did not proceed upon the theory of civil death and rebirth. Nor is that theory, I think, adopted in Ramchandra v. Manubai (7), though I note that that decision is referred to in Maroti v Laxman (4), as supporting the theory.

Coming now to the interpretation of Ch. 9, Verse 142 of Manu, this has been translated in Vol 25 of the Sacred Books of the East as:

"An adopted son shall never take the family (name) and the estate of his natural father, the funeral cake follows the family (name) and the estate, the funeral offerings of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease (as far as that son is concerned)."

After discussing that text and the interpretation of it by ancient commentators, the learned Judges who decided Venkata Narasimha v Rangayya Appa Row (1), say:

"We do not think that there is anything in these passages which necessarily carries with it the idea that the adopted son is divested of property which is his own absolutely at the time of adoption. The more correct view seems to be that by the adoption the filial relationship, as the author of the Chandrika says, is extinguished in one family and is created in the other family, and that thereafter the person adopted cannot claim or take any property in his natural family by virtue of the extinguished filial relationship therein."

As regards the interpretation of the text of Manu they say:

"A great deal of argument was addressed to us with reference to the exact meaning of the Sanskrit word "haret" in the text of Manu which is variously translated "claim," "take," "share" and which Sarkar in his latest work translates "takes away," On the one side it was pointed out that in some of the slokas of Manu the same word is translated and can properly be translated only by the word "inherit," while on the other side, attention is drawn to at least one passage where it cannot refer to inherited property. The arguments do not seem to bring us any nearer to the question which has to be decided."

"We may, however, say that we are not prepared to accept Mr. Sarkar's present view that Manu and the commentators have hitherto not been correctly translated, and that this has led to erroneous views as to the consequences which flow from adoption."

Similar argument has been addressed to me in connexion with which I can adopt the above remarks as my own.

In Dattatraya Sakharam v. Govind Sambhaji (6), Shah, J., considers that the meaning of the verse above referred to is clearly against the view taken in Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya Appa Row (1), and his view appears to be based rather on the interpretation of the expression "the estate of his natural father" than on the meaning of the word "haret." He says that the expression is wide enough to include the estate vested in the person adopted at the time of adoption, provided that it is the estate of his natural father; but he does not explain how the estate already vested solely in the son is still the estate of the natural father. In Mahableshwar Narayan v. Subramanya Shivram (3), Macleod, C. J., though following Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya Appa Row (1), did not dissent from, but distinguished Dattatraya Sakharam v. Govind Sambhaji (6), the distinction drawn being between the cases in which the person adopted had obtained an absolute estate at partition and those in which he obtained such an estate as the sole surviving member of a joint family. The distinction is not, to my mind, a sound one; but that is not very material for present purposes, as I am concerned with a case of partition. The points I wish to make are, firstly, that the expression "the estate of the natural father" does not necessarily include property vested in the person adopted before the adoption, even though it had been the estate of the natural father prior to its becoming vested in the person adopted, and, secondly, that the Bombay view, as interpreted by Macleod, C. J., does not differ from the Madras view as regards the effect of adoption on an estate vested in the person adopted by reason of partition. It has been said that Macleod, C. J., altered his view in Manikbai v. Gokuldas (8), but that does not appear to me to be the case, having regard to the distinction drawn by him in Mahableshwar Narayan v. Subramanya Shivram (3).

(5) [1905] 1 C.L.J. 388.

(8) A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 363=49 Bom. 520.

The weight of authority is thus on the side of the view that property acquired at partition is not divested by subsequent adoption. I may say that I consider that a definite answer to the question I am now considering cannot be obtained by interpretation of Ch. 9, Verse 142 of Manu, but that verse, at least, does not require the divesting of an estate already vested in the person adopted and does not establish that such an estate forms an exception to the general rule of Hindu law, stated by the Privy Council in Miniram Kolita v Keri Kolitani (9) "that an estate once vested by succession or inheritance, is not divested by any act or incapacity which before succession would have formed a ground for exclusion from inheritance."

This general rule was applied in Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya Appa Row (1) and in Behari Lal Laha v Kailas Chunder Laha (2) Applying it to the present case, I hold that in the present case Ramchandra was not divested of the property that came to him at partition by his subsequent adoption by Bisram and is entitled to recover possession of that property. The appeal succeeds and the decree of the trial Court will be restored The defendants will bear the plaintiff's costs in all three Courts.

Civil Revn. No 286 of 1926, Decided on 27th January 1927, against order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 17th August 1926, in Misc. Case No. 6 of 1926.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 58 — Defendant discharged not because unnecessary party—He continues party to suit — Civil P. C., S. 47.

A defendant discharged, not because he was an unnecessary party, is discharged not from the suit but from liability and it is the decree itself that discharges him from liability. He therefore continues to be a party to the suit. 15 N. L. R. 146 ; 40 Mad. 964 ; A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 118, Dist. [P 180 C 1]

If the law gives a party the benefit of a particular procedure and there is failure on the part of the lower Court to exercise its jurisdiction so as to let him take advantage of it the fact that it has held that another procedure is open to him is no reason for not setting it right in revision. M. R. Bobde—for Non-Applicants.

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order in an objection case in which it was held that no objection lay under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., but that the proper procedure was for the applicant to proceed under S. 47, ibid

Seths Balkisandas and Ramkisandas filed C. S. No. 10 of 1914 against Gajadharsao and the applicant Gayaramsao for a declaration and for the recovery of a sum of money. The suit was proceeding ex parte against Gayaramsao. During the course of the trial a compromise was arrived at between the plaintiffs and defendants Gajadharsao whereby Gajadharsao became liable for the whole of the claim, and defendant 2 was to be discharged ( बरी किया जावे ). The judgment referring to this compromise states:

"Under the compromise Gayaramsao (defendant 2) is to be discharged from all liability so far as this case is concerned."

The decree contains the names of both Gajadharsao and Gayaramsao as defendants. The part of it now material is as follows :

"It is ordered and decreed in terms of the compromise effected by the plaintiffs and defendant 1 Gajadharsao that * * * the defendant 2, Gayaramsao be discharged."

In this Court reliance is placed on Laxman v. Ganpat (1), Krishnappa v. Periaswamy (2) and Kanhaiyalal Kolar v. Lachhi (3) and it is contended that Gayaramsao ceased to be a party to the suit, and consequently S. 47, Civil P. C , had no application. I am, however, of the opinion that although the word 'discharged' is used in the judgment and decree Gayaramsao continued to be a party to the suit and the suit was meant to be dismissed against him. The case is not one where, for some such reason as his not being a party necessary for the adjudication of the suit, he was removed from the array of defendants so that the position was as if it had never included him The real position here is that Gayaramsao was allowed to continue as a party and the claim was as it were, admitted to be not likely to succeed and sought to be dismissed as against him He was discharged not from the suit but from liability and it is the decree itself that discharged him from liability. There was an adjudication upon the claim against him, it being in accordance with the plaintiffs' wishes or admission The cases cited are thus distinguishable

The non-applicants' preliminary objection that this was not a case where this Court should interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers as the applicant has been held to have another remedy, namely under S 47, Civil P C., cannot prevail If the law gives a party the benefit of a particular procedure and there is failure on the part of the lower Court to exercise its jurisdiction so as to let him take advantage of it the fact that it has held that another procedure is open to him is no reason for not setting it right in revision.

This order governs also Civil Revision No. 509 of 1926 which has not been separately argued Both applications are dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 20 in each case.

Second Appeal No. 283-B of 1927 Decided on 29th August 1928, against decree of Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 30th April 1927, in Civil Appeal No 102 of 1926.

(a) Civil P C., S. 100—Concurrent findings of two lower Courts preclude High Court from interfering in second appeal.

Concurrent findings of the two lower Courts to the effect that a certain decree was in respect of the debts of the widow's husband's time and was not collusive or fraudulent preclude the High Court from interfering with them in second appeal. [P 182 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Alienation—Widow—Necessity found as to 9/10 of the value of property sold—Widow acting fairly and purchaser acting honestly—Sale is binding on reversioner.

Where a Hindu widow in order to satisfy debts of her husband's time which amounted to Rs. 9,000 sold the entire property, the value of which was estimated by the lower appellate Court at Rs. 10,000 and the sale was challenged by the reversioners on the ground that property in excess of the actual requirements had been sold by the widow and that she should have excluded a portion of the property from sale.

Held : that in such a case the question to be considered is whether the widow has acted fairly towards the expectant heirs and whether the person who dealt with her, also acted honestly and in good faith, when he entered into the transaction in question after making due enquiry, or under the bona fide belief that an accredited necessity did exist, and whether the price offered by him was "adequate and not unreasonably low." (c) Hindu Law — Reversioners—Sale by widow—Small portion of consideration not for necessity—Decree conditional on payment of consideration proved for necessity is justified (obiter).

Where in a suit by a reversioner to set aside a sale by a widow of her husband's property, it was found by the lower Court that a small portion of the consideration was not proved to have been supported by legal necessity and on that ground the sale was set aside inserting in the decree a condition that on failure of the reversioners within a certain time to pay to the purchaser the amount of the consideration which was proved to have been supported by legal necessity, the suit of the reversioners should stand dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of the appeal as also the cross-objections preferred by the plaintiffs and the defendant respectively.

The plaintiffs sued to set aside an alienation made by the widow of one Dhanaji in favour of the defendant, in their capacity as reversionary heirs of the last male holder Dhanaji. Dhanaji died in 1910 and his widow Girji in 1917, and Sarji, who was the only surviving co-widow, died in 1923 She sold the property in suit to the defendant by a sale deed dated 8th May 1918 for a consideration of Rs 9,000. The plaintiffs question the binding character of the sale on the ground that it was not supported by legal necessity, and the transaction was brought about in collusion with Sarji's mukhtiar Narsaji by causing a bogus consideration to be recited in the sale-deed. The reversioners alleged that the property sold was worth Rs. 18,000 at the date of the suit.

The defendant alleged that the amount of consideration was required to satisfy the debts of the deceased Dhanaji and that the sale was therefore valid and binding as against the plaintiffs He denied that the property in dispute was worth more than Rs 9,000. The trial Court framed the necessary issues and came to the conclusion that the sale of the entire property was not justified as the amount of the decree for the debts of Dhanaji's time did not exceed Rs. 9,000, while the value of the property at the date of the sale was Rs. 12,450. The Court further held that it was necessary for Mt. Sarji to satisfy the foreclosure decree for Rs. 6,300 in Civil Suit No 115 of 1917 and money decree for Rs. 2,700 in Civil Suit No. 329 of 1911, and though a sale of property became necessary, the sale of the entire property was not necessary at the time It was also held that Narsaji (P W. 6) who jointly purchased the property along with the defendant under the sale deed (Ex. D. 1) was the relation of the vendor Sarji and being her agent at the date of the sale was in the position of active confidence towards her. This Narsaji subsequently transferred his interest to the defendant by sale deeds marked Exs. D. 4, D. 5 and D. 6. A decree was accordingly given to the plaintiffs for possession of the property on payment of Rs. 9,000 to the defendant within four months.

The defendant being dissatisfied with the decree preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge, and the plaintiffs in their turn filed cross-objections. The District Judge came to the conclusion that instead of the total value of the property being Rs 12,450 he would estimate the value of the land at Rs. 10,000, that the same sale was imprudent, that the proper procedure for the widow would have been to retain certain fields and to sell the rest; and that these fields would have sufficed for her maintenance and would not have been lost to the reversioners. He, therefore, upheld the finding of the trial Court that the plaintiffs were in equity entitled to possession of the property on payment of the amount found due for legal necessity As to the binding character of the decretal debts he held that they were debts of Dhanaji's time and personal ones of the widow; that so far as the money decree was concerned Sarji contested the case vigorously until part of the evidence had been recorded and was justified in compromising it; and that as she fully represented the estate she had full power to compromise the dispute with the creditor. The four months time allowed by the first Court for payment of Rs 9,000 having expired the lower appellate Court allowed three months time from the date of its own decree and added the following clause to the decree :

"that on failure to do so (to pay Rs. 9,000 within the time fixed) the plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed with all costs on them."

The appeal and cross-objections thus practically failed.

The plaintiffs have therefore come up in second appeal and the defendant has filed cross-objections. The object of the plaintiffs' second appeal is to secure exemption from liability to pay Rs 2,700 on the ground that the debt which ripened into the money decree was a personal debt of the widow and the said decree being collusive and fraudulent could not bind them They also appeal from the condition or penalty inserted for the first time by the lower appellate Court in its decree rent findings of the two Courts to the effect that the decree was in respect of the debts of Dhanaji's time and was not collusive or fraudulent, preclude this Court from interfering with them in second appeal Grounds 1,2 and 3 of the appeal therefore fail I think it is more convenient at this stage to take up the defendant's cross-objections. In ground 3 of his memo. of first appeal to the District Judge, the defendant asserted that the market value of the field was Rs 9,000 and that the sale was for adequale price. In the absence of any mention of house property in the ground of appeal the use of the word "field" was apt to mislead anybody. What then the appellant meant, however, was that the value of the "property purchased" was Rs 9,000 and this construction is consistent with the assertion that the sale was for adequate price The first Court in paragraph 10 of its judgment recorded a finding that the house property was worth Rs. 4,100 and that Rs. 12,450 was the value of the entire property at the date of the sale This would give Rs 8,350 as the value of the fields and work out a rate of Rs. 950 per tiphan on the assumption that the whole of the land is of the same quality. But the District Judge has, I think, given good reasons for holding that although the sales of a moiety of some of the property by the co-vendee Narsaji to defendant as per Exs. D 4 and D. 5 practically fetched the values at the date of the sale in 1918, the value in 1923 of the other property conveyed by Ex. D 6 for Rs. 4,000 could not have been Rs 4,000 in the year 1918 I also think that the District Judge was right in reducing the value in 1918 to Rs 2,750. Thus the total value of Narsaji's moiety in the property sold as per sale-deeds Exs. D-4, D-5 and D-6 was Rs 4,975 The District Judge, was therefore right in assessing the total value of the entire property at Rs 10,000.

No doubt in stating this conclusion the District Judge used the word 'land' instead of 'property'; this, I think, is a slip. What he meant to find, as I understand it, was that the value of the property covered by the sale-deed Ex. D-1 executed by Sarji was Rs . 10,000 at the date of the sale. I think this finding is binding on this Court in second appeal

The question consequently arises whether the sale in excess of the requirements was prudent and justified by legal necessity. The District Judge has discussed this question in para. 7 of his judgment and drawn the inference that the sale was imprudent and that the widow ought to have retained certain fields and sold the rest. On behalf of the respondent, I am referred to the following recent Privy Council decisions wherein sales of properties by managers of joint families or by a Hindu widow, were upheld in their entirety, as against the other members of the coparcenary, or reversionary heirs, even though legal necessity was not proved in respect of a part of the price paid for the property.. Sri Krishan Das v. Nathu Ram (A.I.R 1927 P C. 37), Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal (A.I R 1927 P.C. 121), Gauri Shankar v Jiwan Singh (A. I. R. 1927 P.C 246) and Suraj Bhan Singh v. Sah Chain Sukh (A. I. R 1927 P. C. 244)

The fourth was a case of an alienation by a Hindu widow ; their Lordships of the Privy Council said that that case came within the principles laid down by the Board in the cases of Sri Krishan Das v Nathu Ram (1) and Niamat Rai v Din Dayal (2). In the case of Gauri Shankar v Jiwan Singh (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following weighty observations :

"The real question that has to be considered is this whether the sale itself was justified by necessity. Their Lordships cannot go back upon that decision: Sri Krishan Das v. Nathu Ram (1). If the purchaser has acted honestly, if the existence of a family necessity for a sale is made out, and the price is not unreasonably low, he (the purchaser) is not bound to account for the application of the price. They, however, take the case even upon the footing, which might well be challenged, that Rs. 500 out of the price of Rs. 4,000 had not been fully accounted for. Granted that it was so, then the balance of Rs. 3,500 out of Rs. 4,000 is surely a justification of a sale for a family necessity proved up to that amount "

Their Lordships of the Privy Council accordingly upheld the sale and dismissed the suit In the case of Suraj Bhan Singh v. Sah Chain Sukh (4) the sale by a Hindu widow was for a total consideration of Rs 19,000 but Rs 17,000 and odd were found to be for legal necessity. From the judgment of the Allahabad High Court, which was upheld by their

(4) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 244.

Lordships of the Privy Council in the said case it appears that the Subordinate Judge had found that full value had been paid for the property when it was sold by the Hindu widow. It was also held that the representatives of the widow had succeeded in proving that the debts in lieu of which the property was sold were binding to the extent of Rs 17,378-4-0, and he therefore gave a decree to the plaintiffs subject to the payment of this sum into Court within three months from the date of the decree. The alienees went up in appeal to the High Court and urged that the Court below should have affirmed the sale on the ground that legal necessity had been proved for the entire consideration of Rs 19,000 The finding of the Subordinate Judge that legal necessity for sale was established to the extent of Rs. 17,378-4-0 and no more, was upheld. Ultimately the High Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit This dismissal was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the principle of cases above referred to. They are cases of sales by managers of family property, for sums in excess of the amounts for which actual necessity was proved, and although part of the consideration was not proved to have been required for legal necessity, the sales were upheld.

In Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal (2) the contention was that the manager should have raised money by mortgage instead of sale As regards this question their Lordships observed that "it is not clear that borrowing, probably at a high rate of interest, would have been more beneficial than sale. In any case this was a question for the manager to decide. It was equally a question for the manager whether it would be better to raise more money or to close down the business and it would in their Lordships' opinion, be unreasonable to require a lender or purchaser to go into question of this kind, as to which he would rarely be in a position to form a sound opinion. In the present case the decision to raise more money would seem to have been a wise one, as the business afterwards earned profits with which more lands were purchased".

The Lordships accordingly upheld the sale although the property was sold for Rs. 43,500, to satisfy pre-existing debts to the amount of Rs. 38,000, only. So then, in the present case, also, the sale of property in excess of the actual requirements could be upheld on the same principle.

In Sri Krishan Das v. Nathu Ram (1) the sale was of property worth Rs 3,500. whereas legal necessity had been proved to the extent of Rs. 3,000. It was found that the sale was for adequate consideration. Their Lordships of the Privy Council after a discussion of the case law, came to the conclusion :

"Where the purchaser acts in good faith and after due enquiry, and is able to show that the sale itself was justified by legal necessity, he is under no obligation to enquire into the application of any surplus and is, therefore, not bound to make repayment of such surplus to the members of the family challenging the sale".

They, therefore, held "that the mere fact that after long interval of time" the purchaser has :

"not been able to establish how the surplus of Rs. 500 was applied is not a sufficient ground in law for setting aside the sale."

Accordingly the decree of the High Court was set aside and plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

Looking at the facts found by the Courts below in the present case in the light of the Privy Council decisions, I think the conclusion is inevitable that the sale by the widow of Dhanaji of the entire property worth Rs 10,000 in order to satisfy the pre-existing debts was bound to be upheld, even though the extent of such debts did not exceed Rs. 9,000. The question whether in the circumstances of the present case it was better that some fields should have been retained by the widow for her maintenance so as to leave them ultimately for the reversionary heirs, than that she should have, acting under the advice of Narasaji (P.W. 6) her agent and relation of her husband who became a co-vendee with the defendant accepted the arrangement made by him for her maintenance for the rest of her life, "was a question" for the widow, like the "manager" in the case of Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal (2) "to decide" and :

"it would be unreasonable to require a purchaser to go into questions of this kind, as to which he would rarely be in a position to form a sound opinion".

The entire property was covered by the decree for foreclosure and might have been foreclosed and necessarily lost to the widow as also the reversionary heirs, had no arrangements been made to satisfy the foreclosure decree which amounted to Rs. 6,300. Similarly, there was a decree for money outstanding against the widow in respect of the debts due by Dhanaji. Its amount was Rs. 2,700. The equity of redemption in respect of the assets of Dhanaji in her hands was liable to be brought to sale in execution of the said decree. It was, therefore, absolutely necessary for the widow to have made some arrangement which would not only satisfy the mortgage-decree and the money decree but also secure maintenance to her for the rest of her life.

Assuming for the sake of argument that she could have conveniently reserved property worth Rs. 1,000 consisting of a portion of house property and some land, it is very doubtful whether the 1/10th of the property could have given her more than 3½ acres of land. It is only in the nature of speculation to say that a slice measuring 3½ acres of land would have fetched an annual income in the shape of lease money sufficient to maintain a Hindu widow of a respectable family like that of Dhanaji. Moreover, there is no certainty of a widow securing lessees to cultivate a small piece of land measuring 3½ acres in every succeeding year. One who knows the difficulties of arranging for cultivation of such small pieces of agricultural lands can at once realize how inconvenient it is to keep a private establishment of agricultural servants and cattle for tilling and sowing such small areas The expenses of cultivation and management are out of all proportion to the outturn of the area to be sown and cultivated. As observed in Venkaji Shridhar v Vishnu Babaji (5), by Sargent, C. J.:

"a widow like a manager of the family must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers provided as West, J., says in Chimnaji Govind v. Dinkar Dhondev (6) she acts fairly to her expectant heirs. As observed in Chimnaji Govind v. Dinkar Dhondev at p. 324. In the widow's case the coparceners are reduced to herself and the estate centres in her."

Consequently it was held in that case that the widow can "do what the body of coparceners can do subject always to the condition that she acts fairly to the expectant heirs."

Bearing these principles in view, it must be conceded that it is always very difficult to strike a bargain for sale of just as much property as may be proportionate to the requirements for the time being. Moreover, value of property is not a constant factor. It fluctuates with the time of the sale, the nature and valuation of the property, and the market it commands. The principle of demand and supply for any particular commodity has also its play. The property may possess many potentialities, but there may be no demand for it, or when there is a demand, it may not be either available or the vendor may not be in an urgent need to sell, and vice versa. At other times, the purchaser may take the matter quite easily so that the price offered might not come up to the real price the seller might expect to get. In short, there are so many factors affecting the value of property, that it is difficult to say with certainty that at a given time a certain item of property must fetch a certain amount as its price. It is always a matter of guess work. If the value of certain property at the date of any past transaction has to be estimated in a subsequent litigation, the estimate must always be approximate and not accurate. There is bound to be conflicting testimony, speculation, and even lot of hard swearing one way or the other on the point of the price the property might have fetched The task of fixing the value after the event always involves great deal of approximation and every attempt at deciding the question, whether any particular property has been sold for its full value or not must always involve an element of uncertainty

Similarly, it is difficult to hit with absolute certainty, upon the relation which the value of property might bear to its annual income or productive capacity. Still more uncertain or difficult it may often be to strike the exact proportion of the property to be sold, with reference to your actual requirements, with any decree of accuracy of a weighing machine or scale. You cannot cut off and retain just a slice out of the property to be sold, and make its value exactly correspond to the price or money you may stand in need of, for the time being. There are matters in which prudence alone must be allowed to play its important part, and even regulate the propriety of striking a bargain with such honesty of purpose as a man of ordinary prudence is expected to exercise in his own interest, in a given set of circumstances

portance is whether she, like the manager, has acted fairly towards the expectant heirs :

"and whether, the person who dealt with her also acted honestly and in good faith, when he entered into the transaction in question after making due enquiry, or under the bona fide belief that an accredited necessity did exist, and whether, the price offered by him was "adequate and not unreasonably low". If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the transaction has to be upheld as binding as against the persons at whose application it is liable to be affirmed or disaffirmed after the death of the widow. In the proved circumstances of the present case, the widow Mt. Sarji, cannot be said to have acted imprudently, or otherwise than fairly towards her expectant heirs."

when she elected to sell the entire corpus of her husband's estate for the satisfaction of his pre-existing debts amounting to Rs. 9,000 and accepted Rs. 9,000 as its full price, over and above, the promise of Narsaji, her own relation to arrange for her maintenance for the rest of her life. I am not, therefore, propared to uphold the conclusion of the District Judge to the effect that the proper procedure for her could have been to retain certain fields and to sell the rest , the sale must in consequence be upheld as prudent and justified by legal necessity and fully dictated by prudence, and I find accordingly

As a result of this finding, I hold that the reversionary heirs, i. e the plaintiffs, are bound by the sale, and their suit to recover possession must stand dismissed. Ground 2 of the cross-objections thus succeeds. It is consequently unnecessary to consider the defendant-respondent's offer, in his ground 1, to pay plaintiffs Rs 1,000 in order that the sale may be upheld Their Lordships of the Privy Council have pointed out in Sri Krishan Das v Nathu Ram (1) that an order for repayment of a small sum by the purchaser although the sale itself was sustained, is entirely opposed to the whole current of authority.

As to the contention of the plaintiff-appellants that the District Judge was wrong in attaching the penalty of a dismissal of their suit, to a .failure to pay the amount I need not go into this question as I hold that the defendant's sale is bound to be upheld. But if any authority were needed to justify such a form of decree, I may mention that in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court reproduced in the report of the Privy Council case of Suraj Bhan Singh v. Sah Chain Sukh (A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 244 at p. 246) the Judges had an occasion to remark, in regard to an identical form of the decree for possession on payment and providing that in default the suit shall be dismissed, passed in that case by the Subordinate Judge, that the same (decree) was in proper form. A decree in a similar form was passed in Suryabahan v. Pandu (7) where a minor sought to recover back property alienated by his guardian during his minority If, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Banwari Lal v. Mahesh (8) the alienees (who in that case were purchasers from the father and the manager of joint family property) must be deemed to be "lawfully in possession until the sales are set aside." I think, that the necessary corrollary to this proposition is that if the condition precedent as to payment is not fulfilled, the alienees possession must remain undisturbed, the imposition of the said condition or the attachment of the penalty of the dismissal of the suit to the plaintiffs' failure to reimburse the alienees with the amount found due to them, within the time allowed by the Court would, in this view be fully justified.

The result then is that the appeal wholly fails, and, on the defendant's cross-objections, the suit stands and it hereby is dismissed with all costs to be paid by the plaintiffs in all Courts

JACKSON AND SUBHEDAR, A J. Cs.

Kawdu — Appellant

v.

Berar Ginning Co. Ltd, Akot and others—Respondents

Misc. Appeal No. 30-B of 1928, Decided on 23rd March 1929, against the order of the Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 16th August 1928, in Misc Judicial Case No. 103 of 1927.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 5—S. 5 applies to application for review of order under Companies Act.

The provisions of S. 5, Lim. Act, are applicable to an application for review of an order passed under Companies Act as there is no special period prescribed by the latter Act for such an application. A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 194 Ref. [P 189 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1—Application barred by limitation should be treated as one under S. 151.

An application for review of an order under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., if found to be barred by limitation, may under appropriate circumstances be treated as an application under S. 151 if the Court is satisfied that there has been a flagrant abuse of its own process and it is also open to the appellate Court under similar circumstances to treat a barred application for review, made to the first Court, as one made under S 151 in order to remove an apparent injustice done to the applicant and to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court: A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 212, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 17, Dist. [P 189 C 2]

(c) Companies Act, S. 247 (6) —Registrar Joint Stock Companies is not proper person to represent a company but the secretary or director—Civil P. C., O 29, R 1.

Where an application was made by a shareholder of a company to the Court under S 247 (6), Companies Act, for setting aside the order of the Registrar, of Joint Stock Companies, striking the name of the said company off the register of joint stock companies and made the Registrar alone a party to the application and the Court set aside the order of the Registrar.

Held: that under O. 29, Rr 1 and 2, read with S. 141, Civil P. C, the company could not be said to have been properly represented through the Registrar as the only person who could legally put in appearance on its behalf would either be its secretary or one of its directors, though he was no party to the original proceedings. [P 190 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C, O. 47, R. 1—Director of company is 'aggrieved person' and can apply for reveiw of order, though he was not a party to it.

A director of a company is an 'aggrieved person' within the meaning of O. 47, R 1, and can apply for review of an order made in a proceeding against the company if the said company was not represented by any of its directors or secretary in that proceeding. The fact that he was not a party to the original proceedings does not preclude him from filing an application for review. [P 190 C 1]

(e) Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1—Failure to notice bar of limitation is sufficient to justify application for review.

Under the mandatory provisions of S. 3, Lim. Act, the Court is bound to notice the statutory bar of limitation and where it has failed to do so and passed an order, that is a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1, sufficient to justify the Court in granting an application for review and setting aside its previous wrong order: A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 194; A. I. R. 1928, Nag. 305, Ref. [P 190 C 2]

V. N. Bapat—for Respondent 2.

Subhedar, A, J. C—The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are a little complicated and require a statement insome detail here.

A joint stock company was floated and duly registered on 16th August 1905 with the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, Central Provinces and Berar, under the name of "the Berar Ginning Company Limited, Akot" with its registered Head Office at Akot. The company carried on its business until the year 1910, when it stopped functioning. Nearly five years later, i. e, on 15th September 1915, the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies acting under S. 247 (5), Companies Act (7 of 1913), struck the name of the said company off the Register of Joint Stock Companies maintained in his office, so that under the last provision of this sub-section the Company stood formally dissolved. Sheikh Kawdu the appellant in the present case was a shareholder and respondent 2 Narayan was one of the directors of the said company

On 16th November 1925, a little over ten years after the passing of the said order by the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies and nearly 15 years after the company ceased to do business, the appellant Sheikh Kawdu took the extraordinary step of presenting an application to the District Judge, Akola, purporting to be made under S. 166 of the Act for winding up the affairs of the said company. This application was registered as Misc. Judicial Case No. 146 of 1925 in the Court of the District Judge, Akola The respondent Narayan, who was cited as one of the non-applicants in that case, opposed the application on various grounds and the District Judge dismissed it on 18th December 1926, on the short ground that the appellant Sheikh Kawdu had failed to prove that he was a shareholder and as such entitled to move the Court for winding up the company.

On 22nd March 1927, an appeal (First Appeal No. 17-B of 1927) was lodged by Sheikh Kawdu in this Court against the said order and it was dismissed on 17th January 1928, by a Bench consisting of

Hallifax and Kinkhede, A. J. Cs., on the ground that the application for winding up was timebarred three times over, the article applicable to such cases being 181 Sch 1, Lim. Act. This judgment deciding, as it did, an important point of law is published as Sheikh Kawdu v Berar Ginning Co. Ltd., (1)

Sheikh Kawdu being dissatisfied with the aforesaid decision wanted to challenge it before His Majesty's Privy Council and accordingly applied to this Court for leave to appeal and for the necessary certificate but his application was rejected on 12th September 1928, (Misc. Petn. No 33-B of 1928.)

In order to forestall all possible objections which might be raised in argument at the hearing of the appeal (First Appeal No. 17-B of 1927) Sheikh Kawdu on 24th April 1927, a little over a month after filing the said appeal, presented an application to the District Judge, Akola, (registered as Misc Judicial Case No. 46 of 1927) purporting to be made under S. 247 (6), Companies Act, for setting aside the order of the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, dated 15th September 1915, and ordering restoration of the company's name to the Register The object of taking this extraordinary step and the reasons assigned therefor are stated in para. 3 of the application in the following words :

"With a view to leave no room for urging a possible doubt or objection that the company ceased to exist in its corporate capacity, because of the order dated 15th September 1915, passed by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, C. P. & Berar, it is evidently expedient to use the remedy still open to the applicant even while the appeal is pending in the Judicial Commissioner's Court, to get the order of the Registrar of Joint Stock companies, dated 15th September 1915 revised by this Court and to have the name of the Company restored to the Register of Joint Stock Companies maintained in the office of the Registrar. Almost all the shareholders of the company have been deprived of the share money and shares in the profits by the malpractices and fraudulent conduct of the directors and servants in charge of the management of affairs of the company. The shareholders were not kept informed of the true state and condition of the company's affairs and without resorting to the winding up and dissolution remedies as provided for by the Companies Act 7 of 1913, the assets of the company were allowed to disappear and pass into unauthorized hands to the great prejudice of the body of shareholders. Through want of means and ignorance of the legal procedure to be adopted, none but the applicant seems to have so far moved in the matter. In the circumstances as stated, it is clearly just that the company may be restored to the register and the necessary winding up proceedings taken to ensure that after due investigation and inquiry, true and correct accounts are made of the company's dealings and the rights and liabilities of the shareholders as well as of the managing directors are properly determined and enforced in the winding up proceedings. Hence this application is made. There is no bar of limitation to this application which is otherwise tenable."

It is remarkable to note that in spite of the fact that Narayan was made a party in the winding-up proceedings, Sheikh Kawdu did not make him a non-applicant to this application As a matter of fact none was cited as a non-applicant in the petition However, the District Judge issued a notice on 16th June 1927 to the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies to show cause against the application, but the Registrar merely sent letter No 3369, dated 25th July 1927, intimating to the Court that he had no objection to the restoration of the company's name to the register if the conditions of sub-S. (6), S 247, Companies Act, were satisfied. The learned District Judge while admitting that the first condition of the said section was not fulfilled, as the company was admittedly doing no business at the time when the Registrar removed its name from the register, allowed the application for the following reasons given in para 2 of his order dated 30th July 1927 :

"The first condition is admittedly not fulfilled in the present case. But the application shows that it is made to smooth away legal difficulties in the way of the winding-up, on the allegations that the shareholders have suffered through misapplication of the assets and wrongful acts of one of the directors. It seems just that the company's existence should be restored so that these allegations may be gone into."

Before the hearing of the First Appeal No. 17-B of 1927, Narayan, who had not been cited by Sheikh Kawdu as a respondent, had made an application to this Court on 23rd November 1927 for being joined as a respondent and his application was allowed and he contested the appeal on merits and succeeded in getting it dismissed.

In order to have the ex parte order passed in Misc. Judicial Case No. 46 of 1927, dated 30th July 1927, set aside, Narayan presented an application to the District Judge on 29th October 1927 under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., praying for review of the said order making (1) Sheikh Kawdu, (2) the Berar Ginning Company and (3) the Registrar Joint Stock Companies as non-applicants. The principal grounds in this application for obtaining a review were these :

(a) that Sheikh Kawdu intentionally omitted to issue notice of his application dated 27th April 1927 to him (Narayan) in spite of the fact that he was a director of the company and had, since its dissolution, purchased at Court sales, in execution of several decrees against the company, many of its assets ,

(b) that Sheikh Kawdu's said application was long barred by time , and (c) that the order sought to be reviewed was otherwise illegal as the same was not passed after ascertaining all the facts and circumstances of the case.

It was admitted that this application was filed one day beyond the period of limitation, but the delay was sought to be condoned under S 5, Limitation Act, on the ground that the applicant came to know of the order sometime after it was passed.

Sheikh Kawdu alone resisted this application He questioned the locus standi of Narayan to present the application on the ground that he was not a party to the proceedings which resulted in the order sought to be reviewed He also asserted that no notice was necessary to be issued to any one excepting the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, whose action was being challenged in the petition He also challenged the decision of this Court on the point of limitation given in First Appeal No 17-B of 1927. Lastly, he stated that the application for review was barred by time and should not be granted Further pleadings followed and the following issues were settled for trial :

"(1) Is this application for review maintainable ?

(2) Is it in time ?

(3) Were all the directors of the company necessary parties to Sheikh Kawdu's application ?

(4) Was that application timebarred ?

(5) Should this review application be now granted ?"

The lower Court decided all the issues excepting the 2nd in the affirmative and in favour of Narayan. On the 2nd issue it held that the application was filed one day too late but it condoned this delay and treated the application as filed within time As a result of these findings the District Judge allowed the application for review and set aside his own order dated 30th July 1927. It is against this order that Sheikh Kawdu has preferred the present appeal on the following grounds :

"(1) That the lower Court erred in presuming that there were sufficient grounds for granting a review of its order dated 30th July 1927.

(2) That the lower Court erred in holding that the application for review presented, could be entertained under O. 47, R. 1, when the applicant was not a party to the proceedings in which the order sought to be reviewed, was passed.

(3) That the application presented for review was timebarred

(4) That the reasons assigned by the lower Court for granting the review, are unsound and unconvincing.

(5) That the order of the lower Court granting the review, is otherwise, against law and equity."

In the memorandum of appeal to this Court the respondents are arrayed in the following order :

(1) The Berar Ginning Company Limited, (2) Narayan Udebhan and (3) The Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, Central Provinces and Berar. Narayan respondent 2, alone appeared at the hearing and contested the appeal which was heard ex parte the other respondents

The first contention advanced on behalf of the appellant is that the delay of one day in the presentation of the application for review could not be condoned by the lower Court under S 5, Limitation Act, because by virtue of S. 29 (2) (b) of the Act, S. 5 was inapplicable to an application for review of an order passed under the Companies Act. Mr. Bobde, the learned advocate for the appellant, referred to S 235 (3), Companies Act. which says that an application under sub-S. (1) of the section by the liquidator to recover assets of a company improperly dealt with by its directors or other officers shall be governed by the provision of the Limitation Act "as if such an application were a suit." The argument advanced is that because S. 235 (3), Companies Act, makes special reference to certain provisions of the Limitation Act, it shows that otherwise the provisions of the Limitation Act are not applicable and no period of limitation whatsoever would apply to proceedings under the Companies Act. But this argument, if accepted, would, in my opinion, support the case of the respondent Narayan and place his application for review outside the bar of limitation pleaded with respect to it by the appellant.

In connexion with this point reference was also made to the following statement of Mr. Rustomji appearing at p. 235 of his Company Law (1926 Edition):

"This clause '(S. 183 Cl. 5) gives a general right of appeal to the Court from the decisions of the Official Liquidator. No time is limited for bringing the appeal. But by analogy to the proviso to S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act 1920, twenty-one days will probably be the proper time."

I really fail to understand how the above quotation helps to support the proposition contended for by the appellant's advocate.

No other authority has been cited in support of the above extraordinary proposition which assumes for its foundation the existence of a special period of limitation prescribed by the Companies Act for all purposes in general and for an application for review of an order passed under the said Act in particular. Under S. 29 (2), Limitation Act, it is only when any special law prescribes for any suit, appeal or application, a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by Sch 1, Lim. Act, that the remaining provisions of the Limitation Act inclusive of S. 5 shall not apply under sub-Cl. (b), S 29 (2), ibid. Under the Companies Act, 1882, a special period was undoubtedly prescribed by S. 169 for appeals against orders in the winding-up proceedings but this special period has been abrogated by S 202, Companies Act 1913, under which the period within which an appeal must be preferred is governed by the general law. (vide Rustomji's Limitation Act, Edition 4, p. 299, note (4).

Admittedly there is no special period prescribed for anything to be done under the Companies Act 1913, therefore the provisions of the general law of limitation as contained in the Limitation Act must apply. This is exactly the view propounded in Sheikh Kawdv v The Berar Ginning Company Limited (1). I accordingly hold that the provisions of S. 5, Lim. Act are applicable to an application for review of an order passed under the Companies Act 1913, because there is no special period prescribed by the said Act for such an application.

It was next urged that the lower Court did not properly exercise its discretion in condoning the delay of one day in the presentation of the application for review. In para. 5 of his application Narayan simply alleged that he came to know of the order dated 30th July 1927 after it was passed. He, however, did not give the date on which he came to know of it nor state the reasons explaining the delay of one day in the presentation of the review application. It is regrettable that the lower Court did not clear up this matter and I should have remanded the case for taking further pleadings on the point and for the trial of an issue whether there was good and sufficient cause for the delay in presenting the application for review. But a remand seems to me to be unnecessary, because, for reasons given in the next paragraph, the relief awarded by the lower Court on the application of Narayan fell within the purview of S 151, Civil P. C., for which admittedly, no limitation is applicable.

Under the admitted circumstances of this case, I consider that Narayan was undoubtedly entitled to move the lower Court for a review of its order under S. 151, Civil P C Narayan was known to the appellant as a director of the company during its existence and subsequently as a purchaser of its assets after its extinction, and lastly as the person who had successfully opposed the winding-up proceedings started by the appellant and referred to in para. 3 of this judgment. With the object of avoiding all possible objections which he might have raised, the appellant deliberately omitted to make Narayan a party either to the first appeal or to the proceedings in Misc. Judicial Case No. 46 of 1927 and secured an order in the latter case behind his back highly prejudicial to his vested interests. I cannot, therefore, conceive of a more flagrant example of an abuse of the process of the Court than the one taken advantage of by the appellant in securing an order from the Court ex parte the very necessary opponent in the case This was, therefore, pre-eminently a case in which the inherent powers of the Court could be legitimately exercised by it in removing the apparent injustice done to Narayan in order to prevent an abuse of its own process The appellant's learned pleader contended that interference of the Court under S. 151, Civil P. C., was not possible in this case and cited Sadasheo Rao

v. Umaji (2) and Nizamuddin v. Jumma (3) in support of his contention. In my opinion each of the above cases, as indeed any other reported case under S. 151, Civil P. C., must be considered to have been decided on its own peculiar facts and therefore unless the facts of a particular case are on all fours with those found in the present case, it cannot be regarded as an authority for its decision. I, therefore, hold that, apart from the highly technical provisions of O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. the present case could very well be considered to have been decided under the salutory provisions of S 151, Civil P. C

The next contention advanced was that Narayan not having been made a party to the original proceedings which resulted in the passing of the order sought to be reviewed, had no right to present the application for review under O. 47, R 1, Civil P. C. It is admitted that the company must be deemed to have been a party to the previous proceedings, because the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, represented it But under O. 29, Rr 1 and 2 read with S 141, Civil P. C, the company could not be said to have been properly represented through the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, because under the said provisions the only person who could legally put in appearance on its behalf would either be its secretary or one of the directors. It is not denied that Narayan was a director of the company and I therefore hold that, under the circumstances, Narayan should be deemed to have been "a person considering himself aggrieved" within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1 so as to clothe him with a right to present an application for review. The learned District Judge has, in my opinion, stated the proposition too widely in para 3 of his order when he held that any person aggrieved, though not a party to the original proceedings, could apply for a review under O. 47, R. 1

The last point pressed for the appellant was that there was no "sufficient cause" within the meaning of these words in O. 47, R 1, Civil P. C., for granting the review. The present application of Narayan makes a distinct complaint that the learned Judge when granting the appellant's application did not at all consider the question that the said application was long barred by time. Under the mandatory provisions of S. 3, Limitation Act the Court was bound to notice this statutory bar of limitation and therefore, in my opinion, this was within the meaning of these words in O. 47, R. 1 sufficient to justify the lower Court in granting the application for review and setting aside its prevlous wrong order. In view of the principle laid down in Sheikh Kaudu v. Berar Ginning Co, Ltd (1) it was clear that the original application of Sheikh Kawdu dated 16th November 1925 was long barred by time. In British Equitable Assurance Co. v. Rayaram (A.I.R 1928 Nag. 305) it was held by Findlay, J. C, that if the Court omits to apply apposite law to a case a review could be entertained to rectify the mistake. It may, in passing, be noticed that the operation of S 3, Limitation Act is specially saved by S. 29 (1) ibid, even in regard to cases where under special or local law a period of limitation different from that of Sch. 1 is prescribed for any suit, appeal or application. For the reasons given above I uphold the order appealed against and dismiss this appeal with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 50.

Nago Wani—Accused—Applicant

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn No 229 of 1928, Decided on 10th August 1928.

(a) Forest Act (1927), S. 26 (h) — Onus is on Government to show that the land is part of Government forest.

Where the charge against the accused is that he has made an encroachment on Government forest land, the onus is on the prosecution to establish that the land forms part of the Government forest. 19 Mad 165, Ref. [P 191 C 2]

(b) Forest Act, (1927), S. 26 (h) — Where accused and his predecessors have been cultivating forest land for many years past, conviction under S. (26) (h) cannot be maintained.

Where it is clear from evidence that the accused has been cultivating land alleged to be part of a Government forest for at least seven years and the probabilities are that his father had done the same before him he cannot be held to have cleared or broken up the land for cultivation or any other purpose and his conviction under S. 26 (h) cannot be sustained. [P 191 C 1]

A. V. Wazalwar—for Applicant.

Order. — The applicant Nago was convicted by the 2nd Class Magistrate, Sausar, of an offence under S. 25 (H) of the Forest Act of 1927 and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 75. The applicant is a tenant of mouza Ghogri, District Chhindwara, the field of which village immediately adjoins the Government forest

The prosecution case was that the Forest Ranger found that the accused had cultivated a small strip of forest land amounting to 24 of an acre, that he went to the spot with Balaji Patwari (P. W. 1) and measured the alleged encroachment in his presence as well as that of Rati Mukaddam (P. W. 2) and Sito Kotwar (P. W 3). The applicant's hut was found to be standing on 4 of an acre and the crop on 20 of an acre. The applicant in the Magistrate's Court denied all knowledge of the encroachment and alleged that he had been in possession of the land for some 10 or 12 years. The Magistrate found the applicant guilty as stated above He applied to the Court of the District Magistrate, Chhindwara. The District Magistrate held that there was a discrepancy between the two maps filed by the prosecution and neither of these maps was properly proved. From the evidence of the Patwari and the Revenue Inspector, however, he was of opinion that there was no doubt that a part of the applicant's kotha and the field did lie within the Government forest He also held that on the evidence of Balaji (P. W. 1), Rati (P. W. 2) and Sito (P. W. 3), Nago was warned that he had encroached and was asked to give up the land.

It was highly unsatisfactory, in my opinion, that the Range Officer was not examined in the case. The District Magistrate, however, went on to hold that the encroachment had been in existence for years and had not been made intentionally. It is clear that applicant has been cultivating the land in question for some seven years at least and the probabilities are that his father had done the same before him I fail to understand how on these circumstances the applicant can be held to have cleared or broken up the land in question for cultivation or any other purpose. The indications are that his predecessors may have been guilty of this but the only presumption on the evidence on record is that he through his predecessors, is in possession of the land in question.

The onus of proof was on the prosecution in a case like the present and so far as the evidence on record goes the presumption must be that the applicant either himself or through his predecessors has been in possession of the land for many years past. There is nothing to show under what provision of law any formal action was taken by the forest authorities for the removal of the applicant from the land in question. The land in question must be held to have been occupied land and not to have been forest or waste land, until the latter point is properly established : cf Secretary of State v. Bapanamma Garu (1) Whether, however, the forest authorities have power from the executive point of view to remove the applicant from this land is a question which it is impossible for me to solve on the unsatisfactory and insufficient evidence on record. The action of the forest authorities in this case seems to have been informal to a degree. For the purposes of this criminal case it must suffice to say that I do not consider the case falls under S. 25 (1), Forest Act, because it is perfectly clear that if this land had been wrongly cleared or broken up in spite of its being reserved forest such clearing or breaking up took place at the hands of some of the predecessors of the applicant and not in his time For these reasons, however, I am of opinion that the conviction cannot stand

The conviction and sentence on the applicant are accordingly set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Kongshi—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Kandaji—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 409-B of 1927, Decided on 12th April 1929.

Hindu Law—Widow incurring debt in course of management of property on credit of estate—No charge created—Still estate in reversioner's hands is liable for such debt.

Property in the hands of a Hindu reversioner is liable to satisfy a debt, which a widow, while enjoying a widow's estate has properly incurred in the course of management on the credit of the estate, though no specific charge is created : 3 Bom. 287 ; A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 310 ; 19 All. 300, not Foll. 33 Mad. 492 ; 26 Bom, 206, Foll. [P 192 C 1]

S. B. Gokhale—for Appellant.

M. B. Niyogi—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case a Hindu widow, Mt. Girji, in possession and management of her husband's estate, executed a bond for Rs. 400 on 25th May 1923. After Girji's death the creditor brought the suit out of which this appeal arises to recover the amount due on the bond from her daughter, Kongshi, who is the reversioner to whom the estate passed on Girji's death. The lower appellate Court, disagreeing with the trial Court, has found that the estate in Kongshi's hands is liable for the debt and has passed a decree acordingly.

Girji's husband, Vithoba, left some land, houses and a money-lending business The debt in question was incurred by Girji for cultivation and other expenses, the lower appellate Court's view being that the borrowing was rendered necessary by Girji's money being out on loan in connexion with the money-lending business and not by any careless or imprudent management on her part. But it is argued on behalf of the appellant that even so the debt cannot be recovered from the estate because no charge thereon was created. My view of the law applicable to the present case is that property in the hands of a Hindu reverioner is liable to satisfy a debt, not secured on such property, which a widow, while enjoying a widow's estate, has properly incurred in the course of management on the credit of the estate, though no specific charge is created Gadgeppa Desai v. Apaji Jivanrao (1) is against this view. In that case the money was advanced on the widow's personal credit; so also in Bhagwantrao Abaji v Ramanath Kaniram (2), in which reliance was placed upon Gadgeppa Dasai v. Apaji Jivanrao (1) the credit was given to the widow personally; but it was held that the property in the hands of the reversioner was not liable, not on the ground that the debt was incurred on the widow's personal credit, but because the debt, though properly incurred in the management of the estate, was not secured on the property. This view is also taken in Dhiraj Singh v. Manga Ram (3) But in Regella Jogayya v. Venkataratnamma (4), it was held that a debt contracted by a widow as representative of the estate, for the purposes of the estate, will be binding on it in the hands of the reversioners, though no formal charge on the estate is created when the creditor looks not to the porsonal creadit of the widow but to her as representative of the estate and relies on the credit of such estate. This decision was not dissented from in Bhagwantrao Abaji v. Ramanath Kaniram (2) in the head-note it is inaccurately referred to as having been followed ; and the latter decision and the other two decisions to the same effect mentioned above seem to me to go unnecessarily far in requiring a formal charge to be created before the estate in the hands of the reversioner will be liable.

In Sakrabhai v. Maganlal (5), it was held that trade debts properly incurred by a Hindu widow on the credit of the assets of the business are recoverable after her death out of the assets, even in the absence of a specific charge. This case is distinguished in Bhagwantrao Abaji v. Ramanath Kaniram (3), the distinction being drawn between trading debts and other debts incurred in the course of management. I am not impressed with the reasons given for making that distinction, but in any case it can hardly be drawn in the present case, as Vithoba's money-lending and cultivation were too closely connected with each other to be dealt with separately part of the land cultivated was that of Sitaram (P. W. 2), who in satisfaction of a debt due to Vithoba gave him a 26 years' lease of that land. I am of opinion that Sakrabhai v. Maganlal (5) as well as Regella Jogayya v. Venkataratnamma (4) affords support to the view I take. On that view the lower appellate Court's decree must stand, as the wording of the bond shows clearly that Girji borrowed the money on the credit of the estate. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Jankilal—Accused—Applicant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 300-B of 1928, Decided on 17th April 1929, against judgment of First Addl. Sess. Judge, Akola, D/- 19th December 1928, in Criminal Appeal No. 365 of 1928.

Penal Code, S. 193 — Where accused's statement is proved to be false, it can be presumed that he "intentionally" gave false evidence—Accused in execution Court making statement that decree against him was adjusted on certain dates—Dates material factor for trial of case—In trial Court accused never suggesting that he gave those dates on mistaken belief—Statement was false and accused did not believe it to be true while making it.

Where a statement on the basis of which a person is accused of perjury is proved to be false, it can safely be presumed that in making that statement the accused "intentionally" gave false evidence. [P 194 C 1]

The accused who was charged of perjury, had stated in a varified application in the execution Court that the decree against him had been adjusted on certain dates and afterwards he confirmed the statement by his oral testimony. These dates of the alleged adjustment were an important factor in determining the question which the execution Court was called upon to decide. In the trial Court it was never suggested on his behalf that he was mistaken in giving the dates. It was in the High Court for the first time that this plea of false belief was raised.

Held: that the statement was absolutely false and the accusad did not believe it to be true while making the same. 22 O. C. 236, Foll.; 26 All. 503; 36 All. 362, Rel. on, A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 170, Ref. [P 194 C 1]

Order.—The main facts of the case out of which this application for revision arises are these. In Civil Suit No. 26 of 1921 on the file of the Second Subordinate Judge, Akola, a decree for Rs. 456-8-0 for costs was passed against eight persons including the applicant. In execution of this decree the applicant put in a verified application on 10th January 1925 (Ex P-6) stating that there was an adjustment of the decree so far as he was concerned by the decree-helder Radhakisan having agreed to accept Rs. 75 as the applicant's share of liability. The decree-holder having denied this adjustment, an enquiry under O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., was made by the Subordinate Judge who held the adjustment not proved In this enquiry the applicant was examined as a witness on 27th August 1925 and had made the following statement in Ex. P-2 which has been the basis of the prosecution:

"About 12 months ago Seth Radhakisan came to my shop to settle the dispute. The next day I went to decree-holder's shop. It was on the 9th August. Radhakisan was then engaged in puja. Radhakisan came in the shop and told me that he would accept the amount of my share any day. Adjustment between me and Radhakisan was made in my shop on 8th or 9th August 1924."

After unsuccessfully moving the Subordinate Judge to start criminal proceedings against the applicant for an offence under S. 193, I P. C, the decree-holder filed an appeal to the District Judge who lodged a complaint against the applicant as desired by the decree-holder in respect of the false statements contained in Ex. P-6 and Ex. P-2. The case was tried by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, who convicted the accused on both the counts and sentenced him to six months rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 250 on each count. Against this order the applicant appealed to the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, who quashed the conviction with regard to Ex. P-6, but maintained the conviction and sentence in regard to Ex. P-2. The applicant, has, therefore, come up to this Court in revision.

Mr M. B. Niyogi, the learned advocate for the applicant, argued that the prosecution has failed to establish in this case that the accused intentionally gave false evidence. It was also contended that in the present case all that has been proved was that the alleged adjustment did not take place on the dates mentioned, but may possibly have taken place either in April or June and reliance was placed on the observations of this Court appearing in the case of Sherkhan v. Anwarkhan (1) to the effect that before a person could be convicted of perjury the evidence on record must be such as to exclude the possibility of any hypothesis other than that of the prisoner's guilt.

I will first dispose of the second contention In his defence at the trial the applicant never suggested that he had been mistaken in giving the 8th or 9th August 1924, as the dates on which the alleged adjustment had taken place. As a matter of fact time was allowed to the applicant by the civil Court to make a definite statement, and on 10th January 1925, he filed a verified application (Ex. P-6) alleging that the adjustment had taken place on the aforesaid dates and later on he confirmed this statement by his sworn testimony which is the subject matter of the charge Even in the proceedings relating to his being prosecuted for perjury the applicant did not put forward the plea of the mistaken belief, that is now advanced on his behalf. It cannot be denied that the date of the alleged adjustment was a very material factor for the determination of the question which the civil Court was called upon to decide in the execution proceedings. In Mohamad Ismail Khan v Emperor (2), it was held that to justify a conviction for perjury it is not necessary to prove that the statement is impossible, it is sufficient to prove it is incredible In the present case, however, the evidence for the prosecution establishes beyond question that the statement of the accused which is the subject of the charge could not possibly be true. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I have not the slightest doubt in confirming the well-considered and concurrent finding of the two lower Courts that the statement made by the applicant and quoted above was absolutely false and that when making the same he did not believe it to be true.

With regard to the first point it is enough to say that if the statement is proved to be false, as is concurrently found by the two lower Courts to have been the case, it could safely be presumed that in making that statement the applicant "intentionally" gave false evidence. False evidence is intentionally given if the person making the statement makes it advisedly, knowing it to be false, and with the intention of deceiving the Court and of leading it to be supposed that that which he states is true: Babu Ram v. Emperor (3). The Court may infer the corrupt intention from surrounding circumstances: Muhammad Ishaq v. Emperor (4).

(2) [1919] 22 O. C. 236=54 I. C. 60=21 Cr. L. J. 12.

(4) [1914] 36 All. 362=25 I. C. 331=12 A. L. J. 550.

On the question of sentence the learned advocate for the applicant prayed that as the accused was a respectable man and as this was his first offence he should be dealt with under S. 562, Criminal P. C. The learned Government Advocate, however, very properly opposed this prayer and stated that the punishment awarded was in fact very lenient. Taking into consideration the seriousness of the offence and having regard to the fact that such offences, though very common, are rarely brought to light, I consider the punishment awarded to be quite appropriate. For the foregoing reasons the application for revision is untenable and is dismissed The applicant, who is on bail, must surrender himself and undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence.

First Appeal No. 138 of 1927, Decided on 28th March 1929, against decree of Dist. Judge, Bhandara, D/- 10th October 1927, in Civil Suit No 3 of 1926.

(a) Contract Act, S. 29—Agreement as to repayment of certain amount being indefinite—Uncertainty not pleaded as bar to its legality—Repayments made by one party and accepted by other towards agreement — Agreement is not void for uncertainty.

The terms of the agreement as to repayments of certain amount were indefinite, but the uncertainty was not pleaded as a bar to its legality and repayments were made by one party and accepted by the other towards the agreement without protest.

Held: that the agreement was not void for uncertainty: A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 9, Rel. on. [P 197 C 2]

(b) Specific Relief Act, S. 21 (c)—Terms of agreement indefinite but defendant performing his part of agreement—Plaintiff's possible inability to specifically enforce contract could not arise.

Where the terms of certain agreement being indefinite, the plaintiff could not be able to obtain specific performance of such an agreement in case of its breach by the defendant but the defendant had wholly performed his part of the agreement.

Held: that the plaintiff's possible inability to specifically enforce the contract could not arise in the case. [P 198 C 1]

(c) Mortgagor and mortgagee—Mortgagee obtaining absolute decree for foreclosure and formal possession of property—He getting his name mutated in respect of it and subsequently making oral agreement with mortgagor to reconvey property to him on payment of mortgage debt—Mortgagor remaining in actual possession of property for long time after decree considering himself as real proprietor to knowledge of mortgagee—Mortgagee himself regarding him as virtual proprietor of property—Such possession is in pursuance of oral agreement.

Mortgagee obtained an absolute decree for foreclosure for mortgage debt and formal possession of the mortgaged property and got his name mutated in respect of it. Mortgagee subsequently made an oral agreement with the mortgagor to reconvey the property to him on his payment of the debt. The mortgagor remained in actual possession of the property for a long time after passing of the decree absolute for foreclosure. The mortgagor regarded himself as the real proprietor of the property to the knowledge of the mortgagee and mortgagee himself regarded him as the virtual proprietor of the property.

Held: that although the legal title was with the mortgagee, such long and uninterrupted possession was in pursuance of the oral agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 9, Rel. on. [P 198 C 2]

Subhedar, A. J C.— The subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal arises is the village of Kayadi in the Waraseoni Tahsil of the Balaghat District with sir fields, houses, trees and wells situate in the said village. The parties are closely related by marriage. The plaintiff is the zamindar of Fulchur, and his eldest son had, in 1901, married the daughter of defendant 1. In the year 1920 the plaintiff's daughter was married to defendant 2, who is the son of defendant 1. In 1909 in consideration of a loan of Rs. 12,000 defendant 1 and his two stepmothers had executed a mortgage of the property in dispute in plaintiff's favour with a condition of foreclosure. On the basis of this mortgage the plaintiff brought a suit (Civil Suit No. 15 of 1913 in the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara) and obtained an ex parte decree nisi for foreclosure for Rs. 16,455-11-3 on 18th August 1913, which was made absolute on 9th May 1914 and formal possession of the foreclosed property was obtained by the plaintiff on 9th August 1914 The plaintiff also got his name mutated in respect of this village on 24th March 1915.

The plaintiff brought the present suit for confirmation of his possession of the said village or in the alternative for actual possession thereof. The plaintiff's case was that after he had obtained possession of the property under his foreclosure decree, he had appointed defendant 1 as his manager to manage the same on his behalf, and that defendant 1 did so until the year 1923 when he asserted a hostile title by making an unsuccessful attempt in the revenue Courts for having the village mutated in his own name It was asserted in para. 4 of the plaint that there was some sort of agreement between the parties for reconveying the village to defendant 1 on his paying to the plaintiff the whole of the decretal amount within two months by the end of October 1914, and it was admitted that in pursuance of this agreement defendant 1 actually paid to the plaintiff's pleader Mr. Gokhale Rs. 4,500 on 29th September 1914, but since the balance was not paid as stipulated, it was asserted that the agreement fell through.

The main defence to the claim was made by defendant 1 (defendant 2 only adopted the pleas advanced by his father) who stated that prior to the institution of the mortgage suit there was an agreement between him and the plaintiff in January 1913, whereby it was settled that the plaintiff should file the suit on the mortgage against all the three mortgagors, obtain an ex parte decree absolute for foreclosure, take formal possession of the mortgage properties and reconvey the same to defendant 1 in consideration of defendant 1 paying the decretal debt by easy instalments The defendants further pleaded that about September 1914, after the plaintiff had obtained formal possession of the mortgage property, it was finally settled that defendant 1 should pay to the plaintiff Rs 4,500 (representing the first five kists of the mortgage, viz , Rs. 3,750 and Rs 750 on account of the costs of the mortgage suit) within two months as an indication of his sincerity to abide by the terms of the agreement, that the balance due should be paid off by easy instalments, and that after the whole amount was thus paid off and the other creditors of the defendants were fully satisfied, the plaintiff would formally reconvey the village to the defendants. The defendants asserted that it was in pursuance of this agreement that the payment of Rs. 4,500 was made by them to the plaintiff's pleader, Mr. Gokhale, and not under the circumstances alleged by the plaintiff in para 4 of the plaint. The defendants also pleaded a number of further repayments amounting to Rs. 8,200 towards the fulfilment of their obligations under the agreement They also alleged that after the plaintiff's daughter was married to defendant 2, the plaintiff returned the amount of Rs 1,000 which defendant 1 had paid to the plaintiff's agent Bapuji on 18th May 1921, saying that on account of the new relationship he would not only not accept the same but would forego the rest of the claim for the balance due The defendants of course denied the plaintiff's allegation that defendant 1 was the agent of the plaintiff and managed the village in that capacity on his behalf On the contrary they asserted that their possession over the village was never disturbed and that their management of it was in their own right. It was finally contended by the defendants that since they were in possession of the property in dispute under an agreement which, so far as they were concerned, was fully performed, the plaintiff's suit to eject them was not maintainable.

The pleadings of the parties were very elaborate but a fair idea of them would be gathered from the following issues framed for trial :

"(1) Whether the plaintiff has been in possession of the property in suit and whether defendant 1 has been managing it on plaintiff's behalf, as alleged by the latter ?

(2) Whether the plaintiff got formal possession of the property in suit on 9th August 1914 through Court in execution of his foreclosure decree ? Is the plaintiff's claim for delivery of possession within time ?

(3) Whether the first oral agreement pleaded in sub-para. 4, para. 2 of the defendant 1's written statement was made between the plaintiff and defendant 1 about January, as alleged by the latter ?

(4) Whether the second oral agreement pleaded in sub-para. 5, para. 2 of the defendant 1's written statement was made between the plaintiff and defendant 1 about September 1914, as alleged by the latter ?

(5) Whether the defendants made the fourth, fifth, sixth, ninth and eleventh payments out of the eleven payments pleaded by the defendant's pleader in his statement recorded on 6th January 1927 ? Were all the eleven payments made in connexion with and on account of the second agreement said to have been made about September 1914 ?

(6) Whether the defendants' claim for specific performance of the second agreement is within time ? If not, can they resist plaintiff's claim for possession on the strength of that agreement ?

(7) If the plaintiff be found to be not in possession, whether the defendants are liable to deliver possession to him."

In a very careful and exhaustive judgment the learned District Judge dealt with all the contentions of the parties, and upon a consideration of the entire evidence, recorded the following findings in para 6 of his judgment :

"On Issue 1. — The plaintiff has not been in possession of the property in suit. The defendant 1 has been managing it on his own account and not on behalf on the plaintiff. He has been managing it with plaintiff's permission and defendant 1's possession has been of a permissive character.

On Issue 2. — The plaintiff got formal possession of the property in suit on 9th August 1914 through Court in execution of his foreclosure decree. The plaintiff's claim for delivery of possession is within time.

On Issue 3. — The first oral agreement pleaded in sub-para. 2 of the defendant 1's written statement is not proved.

On Issue 4.—The second oral agreement pleaded in sub-para. 5, para. 2 of the defendant 1's written statement is proved to have been made between the plaintiff and defendant 1 about September 1914. It was agreed that defendant 1 should pay the mortgage debt and costs of the suit in instalments, that defendant 1 should pay Rs. 4,500 as the first instalment and that after the whole account was paid the plaintiff should retransfer the village to defendant 1. The period within which the whole amount was to be paid and the number of the instalments and the amount of each of the instalments other than the first were not fixed.

On Issue 5. — The defendants made fourth, fifth, sixth, ninth and eleventh payments out of the 11 payments pleaded by the defendants' pleader in his statement recorded on 6th January 1927. All the 11 payments were made in connexion with and on account of the second agreement said to have been made about September 1914.

On Issue 6. — The defendants' claim for specific performance of the second agreement is not within time. The defendants can however resist plaintiff's claim for possession on the strength of the said agreement.

On Issue 7. — The defendants are not liable under the circumstances of the case to deliver possession of the property in suit to the plaintiff."

As a result of these findings the plaintiff's suit was dismissed and he has preferred this appeal which attacks almost all the findings of the lower Court which are adverse to him.

The learned advocate for the appellant commenced by arguing that the lower Court had misunderstood the doctrine of part performance and misapplied it to the facts, as found by it, in the present case It was stated that three things were essential to the application of this doctrine, viz.,

(1) a valid agreement ;

(2) delivery of possession in pursuance of the agreement ; and

(3) the existence of an agreement of such a nature of which specific performance could be granted, and reliance was placed on certain quotations appearing at pp. 443, 468, 470 and 472 of White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity, 8th Edition.

It was urged that in the present case no second agreement was specifically pleaded and when the lower Court found that the first agreement was not proved the second one must fall to the ground, because it never existed independently of the first. There is very little force in this contention. The pleadings are very definite as to the second agreement and issue 4 framed for trial makes the position clearer still. As the parties went to trial upon a definite issue on this point, I hold that the second agreement was clearly pleaded.

While not seriously challenging the finding of the lower Court as to the existence of the second agreement, the learned advocate for the appellant contended that since the lower Court in para. 27 of its judgment found the terms of this agreement as to repayments indefinite, it could not but be regarded as an agreement void for uncertainty under S. 29, Contract Act, which says that "Agreements the meaning of which is not certain or capable of being made certain are void."

It was, therefore, argued that such a void agreement could not be the basis of the applicability of the doctrine of part performance, because it could not have been enforced at all much less specifically.

In para 27 of his judgment the learned District Judge does not give his finding on issue 4 but merely makes certain observations while discussing the evidence and circumstances relating to the second agreement—a discussion which commenced in para. 18 and ended in para. 29 of the judgment. The definite finding on this point, however, appears in para. 30 in the following words :

"I therefore find issue 4 in the affirmative and hold that it was agreed between the parties about September 1914 that defendant 1 should pay to the plaintiff the mortgage-debt and the costs of the suit in instalments, that defendant 1 should pay Rs. 4,500 as the first instalment and that after the whole amount was paid off the plaintiff should retransfer the village to defendant 1. The period within which the whole amount was to be paid was not fixed. So also the number of the instalments and the amount of each of the instalments other than the first was not fixed."

With this finding and with the reasons in support of it as given in paras. 18 to 29 of his judgment I am in entire agreement with the learned Judge. The question then is, does such an agreement come within the purview of S. 29, Contract Act, and be void for uncertainty ? I have no hesitation in answering the question in the negative, because uncertainty in the terms was never pleaded as a bar to the legality of the agreement and for the additional reasons that the parties themselves did not regard the terms as to repayment vague or indefinite, because the defendants, as a matter of fact, did pay according to their convenience and the plaintiff accepted the several repayments towards the agreement in question without protest. In Venkayyamma Rao v. Appa Rao (1) (at p. 523 of 39 Mad.) it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a contract may be constituted by a promise followed by actings by the promisee on the faith thereof though not by an express acceptance, that the question in each case is one of fact and if the Court finds that the actings did take place on the footing of a proposal made by the promisor and that they were known by the latter to have taken place on that footing, the objection that the contract was inchoate or incomplete cannot be mentioned and specific performance of such a contract will not be refused in law I, therefore, hold that the agreement in question was not void in law as suggested and could, therefore, form the basis of the applicability of the doctrine of part performance.

It was also argued that because the terms of the agreement as to payments were indefinite, there was no mutuality and the plaintiff could not have been in a position to enforce such an agreement specifically. Reference was made to S 21 (c), Specific Relief Act, and also to Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (2) in this connexion. This argument seems to me to be of no avail to the appellant. Assuming that the plaintiff could not have been able to obtain specific performance of such an agreement, in case the defendants had committed a breach thereof, still now that the defendants have fully performed their own obligations under it by the payment of the entire consideration, no question of the plaintiff's possible inability to specifically enforce the contract can possibly arise in the present case

The next point argued was that possession of the village was never transferred to the defendants in pursuance of the second agreement, and that, therefore, the second element necessary for the applicability of the doctrine of part performance was wanting in this case It was pointed out that in para. 37 of the lower Court's judgment that Court held that the possession of the defendants was of a licensee, implying that it was not referable to the agreement. But para. 37 deals with the contention of the defendants that their possession was adverse to the plaintiff and the word licensee used therein by the learned Judge cannot possibly lead to the construction suggested by the learned advocate for the appellant. That the possession of the defendants was referable to the agreement is positively found by the learned District Judge in the following passage appearing in para. 26 of his judgment :

"Consequently defendant 1 would remain in possession of the village on his own account although in law the right to such possession was derived from a license given by the plaintiff—involved by implication in the agreement. Such possession would be of an anomalous nature inasmuch as although defendant 1 would be in possession on his own account as owner of the equity of redemption which was revived by the agreement in question, his possession would not be adverse to the plaintiff owing to the aforesaid license but would be of a permissive character."

The following facts are clearly established from the evidence on record and the conduct of the parties :

(a) that in spite of the passing of the decree absolute for foreclosure and delivery of symbolical possession of the property to the plaintiff and of the mutation of the plaintiff's name as a proprietor in the revenue papers, the defendants never lost khas possession of the village;

(b) that as is evidenced from their several acts, as enumerated in para 26 of the lower Court's judgment defendant 1 regarded himself as the real proprietor of the village apparently to the knowledge of the plaintiff, and (c) that the plaintiff himself considered defendant 1 as the virtual proprietor of the village and addressed him accordingly as " Malguzar Kayadi " in his several letters which are filed as Exs D-1, D-2, D-3, D-4, D-9 and D-10

Agreeing with the lower Court, therefore, I hold that although the legal title was with the plaintiff the defendants' long and uninterrupted possession over the village Kayadi even after the passing of the decree absolute for foreclosure was in pursuance of the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant 1, as pleaded and successfully proved by them, and consequently there is no force in the contention that the defendants' possession was not referable to the agreement Moreover as laid down in Venkatesh Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (3) possession need only be retained if it already exists.

On the question of the repayments involved in issue 5, the argument advanced was twofold :

(2) [1912] 39 Cal. 292=18 I. C. 331=39 I. A. 1 (P.C.).

(3) A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 9=46 Bom. 722.

(1) that the repayments were not proved;

and (2) that if proved they were not made towards the discharge of the obligation created by the agreement to reconvey the property.

Reference was made to Exs. D-1, D-2 and D-3 which relate to rice sent by defendant 1 to the plaintiff, and it was argued that these letters disclosed that rice was sent merely as present Reference was also made to Ex. D-10 to show that defendent 1 as manager of the plaintiff made the payments noted therein out of the profits of the village which he was then managing on the plaintiff's behalf. It is impossible to read in these documents the meaning sought to be assigned to them The entries in the account books of the defendant bearing on these repayments were also characterised as unreliable for no other good reason than that there were certain irregularities in the books pointed out by the lower Court in para. 33 of its judgment. But these irregularities point more to their genuineness than otherwise as rightly remarked by the lower Court.

The entire mass of oral and documentary evidence in connexion with these repayments has received such analytical and critical consideration at the hands of the learned Judge in paras. 31 to 35 of his judgment that it is unnecessary for this Court to analyse and criticise it over again in this judgment Suffice it to say that I am in entire agreement with the learned Judge in his appreciation of the evidence and the conclusions he drew therefrom. The whole of this evidence, moreover, stands unrebutted. The plaintiff had an opportunity to contradict it by going into the witness-box himself and by producing his own account books and other papers in his possession But he failed to take this obviously honest course, for reasons best known to him, and this unexplained conduct on his part gives, therefore, additional sanctity to the evidence adduced by the defendants. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court in holding that the several repayments pleaded by the defendants have been very satisfactorily proved and that the same were made towards the discharge of the defendants' obligations under the agreement.

I has been found by the learned District Judge in para. 38 of his judgment that after receiving about Rs. 12,000 under the agreement the plaintiff, on 18th May 1921, refused to accept Rs. 1,000 tendered by defendant 1 and promised to forego the balance due because of the new relationship that was formed between the parties recently by the marriage of the plaintiff's daughter to defendant 2. This was established by the evidence of the defendant himself as his own first witness and D. W 25 Diwakarrao and D. W. 28 Kunwarlal Singh, both of whom are plaintiff's sons and could not be expected to go against their own interest because admittedly there has yet been no partition between them and the plaintiff. It was argued for the appellant that because his sons are fighting with him that their testimony should be discounted on that account. It was, however, very easy for the plaintiff to disprove this version of the defendants by simply entering the witnes-box and denying on oath these simple facts or by examining the two pleaders, Mr Bapat and Pandit, whose names were disclosed by the defendants as having been present on the occasion. But as remarked by me already the plaintiff did not follow this honest and straightforward course He even failed to produce the counterfoil of the receipt of Rs. 1,000 though formal notice and an order by the Court to produce the same was served upon him. Under these circumstances it is not possible for this Court to disagree with the lower Court in its finding that so far as the defendants are concerned they have fully discharged their obligations under the agreement in question and that except the execution of a formal deed of conveyance by the plaintiff in defendant's favour nothing more remains to be done in respect of it.

There only remains the consideration of the most important argument advanced by the learned advocate for the appellant to the effect that even if the defendants performed their part of the obligations created by the agreement, they could not resist the plaintiff's claim for possession because there is yet no formal deed of conveyance executed in their favour so as to clothe them with a legal title in respect of the property in dispute. It was urged that the doctrine of part performance has no applicability to cases in which the title to immovable property is by law required to be evidenced by a formal registered deed of conveyance and that even if the doctrine applied it could only be applicable to cases where the defendant's right to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale was not barred at the date of the plaintiff's suit for ejectment.

The Privy Council cases of Mahomed Musa v Aghore Kumar Ganguli (4) and Venkayyamma Rao v. Appa Rao (1) which lay down that the principle of the doctrine of part performance is applicable in India, were sought to be distinguished on the ground that in those cases admittedly no such formal deeds were necessary under the law for the time being in force. In other words it was contended that the doctrine of part performance cannot affect the statute law and reliance was placed upon the following cases in support of this proposition. Sanjib Chandra v. Santosh Kumar (5) and Ramanathan v. Ranganathan (6).

In the Calcutta case the suit was for specific performance of a contract of lease which was not registered, and therefore the Court dismissed the suit holding that no suit was maintainable on the basis of such an invalid document. In that case no question directly arose for the applicability of the doctrine of part performance. In the Madras case cited the plaintiff and the defendant had exchanged certain plots of land without the requisite formality of a registered instrument. The suit was for recovery of the plot originally belonging to the plaintiff and was dismissed by the trial Court. The matter came up in appeal before a Bench of Wallis, C J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., the former holding on the principle of the doctrine of part performance that the suit was rightly decided and dismissed the appeal, though the other learned Judge differed from the view taken by the learned Chief Justice. In the Letters Patent appeal that followed and which came before a Bench of three Judges of the same Court Sadasiva Ayyar and Napier, JJ, held that there was no estoppel against the plaintiff and decreed the plaintiff's claim, but Abdur Rahim, J., dissented and followed the view of the learned Chief Justice holding that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from recovering his plot, in spite of the want of a registered deed of exchange.

But this Madras case was over ruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court in a later case reported as Vizagapatam Sugar Co. v. Muthuramareddi (7) where in that Court followed the principle laid down in Mahomed Musa v. Aghorg Kumar Ganguli (4) and Venkayyamma Rao v Appa Rao (1) and held that the doctrine of part performance was applicable even in cases where the statute law required writing and registration to effect legal and valid transfers. The Divisional Bench of the same Court which ultimately disposed of the case further held that the plea of part performance is not limited to cases where the right to sue for specific performance is not barred on the date of the subsequent suit and in this view the learned Judges followed the law laid down in Meher Ali v. Aratunnessa Bibi (8).

Almost all the High Courts in India have now unanimously adopted and applied the principles of the doctrine of part performance as laid down in the two above mentioned Privy Council rulings not only to cases where the transactions were entered into after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and were defective for want of writing and registration but also to cases where, at the date of the suit for ejectment by the dishonest vendor, the defendant's right to sue for specific performance of the contract of sale was barred by time : vide Bapu Apaji v. Kashinath Sadoba (9), Venkatesh Damodar v. Mullappa Bhimappa (3), Sandu Walji v. Bhikchand Surajmal (10), Laxman v. Ravji (11), Ramappa v. Yellappa (12). Meher Ali v. Aratunnessa Bibi (8), Salamat-us-zamin Begam v. Masha Allah Khan (13), Kunti

v. Gajraj Tiwari (14) and Maung Myat Tha Zan v Ma Dun (15).

The earlier view held by this Court was that a defendant who is not in a position to maintain a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale cannot, in a suit for ejectment brought against him set up such a contract as a plea in bar: Jeyram v. Ganpati (16) and Gangabisan v. Tukaram (17). The last reported case was decided in 1908 long before Mahomed Musa's case was decided by the Privy Council. Reference was made by the appellant's counsel to the case of Rao Saheb v. Umrao (A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 353) to show that the limitation to the applicability of the doctrine as laid down in the aforesaid earlier cases was followed by Hallifax, A J. C, but on a perusal of the judgment in the case I find that the point was conceded and not decided. The question, however, arose in the case of Sampat v. Motilal (18), where Prideaux, A. J. C, dissented from the earlier view of this Court and following Venkatesh Damodar v Mallappa Bhimappa (3), expressed himself in these words:

"It is contended for the appellants-defendants that they can, even if their claim for specific performance is time barred, use that claim as shield against the present attack made on their title, while for the respondent-plaintiff Jairam v. Balkrishnadas (19), Gangabisan v. Tukaram (17) and Jeyram v. Ganpati (16) are relied on. In a recent case, Venkatesh Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (3), it was held that where a person agrees to sell his property to another who is already in possession and who paid the purchase money but there is no registered deed of sale, the vendee can successfully resist a suit by the vendor to recover possession of the property, although the time has passed within which the vendee could have sued to get a sale-deed. The principle enunciated in that case can be applied here. It seems to me that when the vendee is in possession and has paid the purchase money, in a case of this nature he can plead this. It is a valid defence that the plaintiff has agreed to sell the property whether the time for filing a suit for specific performance has expired or not. It would be, in a case like the present, manifestly unfair to allow a plaintiff to oust the buyer" with these observations I entirely concur. In a very recent case (Fagua v Chandulal, Second Appeal No. 473 of 1923) the same point was referred for decision to a Full Bench of this Court as question No. 4, when Kinkhede, A. J. C., in an elaborate judgment answered it in these words:

"That though at the date of suit the defendants had acquired neither a title by purchase for which a registered conveyance was necessary or a prescriptive title by the operation of S. 28, Lim. Act, and the plaintiff's title to property was still subsisting, and even though their own remedy by suit to enforce the completion of their own title as purchasers as against the plaintiff was barred by limitation, the defence based on the doctrine of part performance is open to them as an answer to the plaintiff's right to sue."

Unfortunately in their separately recorded judgment Hallifax and Prideaux, A. J. Cs, while holding that this Court was bound to follow the decision of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa's case omitted to give their opinion on this specific question but by implication they seem to have decided it in the way Kinkhede, A. J. C., did The case was finally disposed of by Hallifax, A, J. C., on the applicability of the doctrine of part performance by refusing the plaintiff the relief of possession, though the defendant's claim for specific performance of the contract of sale was barred at the date when the plaintiff's suit for ejectment was filed Following the law as laid down in the cases discussed in the foregoing three paras. I agree with the lower Court in holding that the defendants (being in possession of the property in dispute) by virtue of an agreement for sale and having fully performed their own obligations under it, can defeat the plaintiff's present suit for ejectment, even though their right to have the contract specifically enforced against the plaintiff was barred by time at the date of the filing of the present suit. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 10 of 1928, Decided on 12th March 1929, against order of Dist. Judge, Bhandara, D/- 7th December 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 97 of 1927.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 220—Order by revenue Court upon matter within jurisdiction is not ultra vires though based on mistake of fact—Application under S. 112 by person purporting to be member of family of protected thekedar—Deputy Commissioner upon enquiry holding appellant entitled to be maintained out of income of theka and transferring theka to him—His order not without jurisdiction though as matter of fact applicant not entitled to be maintained out of income of theka—S. 220 bars jurisdiction of civil Court to question such order—C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 112.

An order passed by a competent revenue Court upon a matter within its jurisdiction is not ultra vires or without jurisdiction even though it is based upon a mistake of fact. [P 204 C 1]

Where an application is made under S. 112 by a person purporting to be a member of the family of protected thekedar, who is entitled to share in the theka or to be maintained out of its income and the Deputy Commissioner upon enquiry holds that that member is entitled to be maintained out of the income and transfers the theka in his favour, his order cannot be without jurisdiction even though as a matter of fact the applicant is not entitled to be maintained out of the income; and S. 220 bars the jurisdiction of the civil Court to question such order as it is not without jurisdiction: 25 Bom. 337; A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 379; 5 N. L. R. 176, Ref., 8 N. L. R. 107; 3 N. L. R. 169; A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 10; 25 Cal. 833, 37 Cal. 107; A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 1, Dist. [P 203 C 2, P 204 C 1]

(b) C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 109 (3)—Deputy Commissioner upon application under S. 112 transferring theka to applicant—Subsequent application under S. 109 (3) rejected by him—Such order rejecting transfer is not without jurisdiction though transfer was not made by thekedar but by Deputy Commissioner—C. P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 112.—(Obiter).

When the Deputy Commissioner upon application under S. 112 and upon proper enquiry and with the consent of the then thekedar transferred the theka to the applicant and where subsequently an application was made under S. 109 (3) to set aside transfer and it was rejected by him as there was nothing bad in the previous transfer such order rejecting an application is not without jurisdiction although the transfer was not made by the thekedar but by Deputy Commissioner upon application and will bar a suit in a civil Court to set aside the transfer. [P 205 C 1, 2]

(c) C.P. Land Revenue Act (1917), S. 109—Civil Court cannot entertain application under S. 109 (3)—C. P. Land Revenue Act 1917), S. 220.—(Obiter).

The fact that S. 109 is not expressly mentioned in S. 220 (1) does not in any way preudice the general provisions of S. 220 and a civil Court has no authority to entertain an application under S. 109 (3). [P 206 C 1]

M. R. Bobde—for Appellant.

V. D. Kolte and S. C. Dutt Chaudari—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent brought a suit for possession of a village with sir and khudkasht land, which had been held by Sunhar, the husband of appellant 1 Mt. Kunwaria, as a protected thekedar, and for a declaration that the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner transferring the theka to Tikaram appellant 2 did not affect the rights of the respondents and that the appellants had no interest in the village. The facts have been set out in the judgments of the lower Courts and need only be briefly stated. Sunhar died in 1898 and was succeeded in the theka by his two widows Mt. Baddo and Mt. Kunwaria. Mt. Baddo died about three or four years ago and then Mt. Kunwaria succeeded to the whole theka. An application was made by Tikaram to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 112, C. P. Land Revenue Act, stating that he was a grandson of Sunhar's sister and entitled to succeed to the theka as a reversioner upon the death of Kunwaria. Kunwaria appeared in the enquiry made upon the application and stated that she had no objection if the theka was recorded in the name of Tikaram. A report was then submitted by the Sub-Divisional Officer to the effect that Tikaram was the only heir of Kunwaria and was entitled to be maintained out of the income of the theka and was, in fact being so maintained, and that Kunwaria made no objection to the transfer ; a recommendation was therefore made that the theka should be transferred to Tikaram. Upon that report the Deputy Commissioner passed the following order :

"Approved as recommended by the S. D. O. under S. 112, Land Revenue Act."

Tikaram was then put in possession of the theka. On 26th May 1926, the respondents made an application under S. 109 (3) of the Act that they, as proprietors of the village, should be put in possession, as the transfer in favour of Tikaram was contrary to the provisions of S. 109 (1). Upon their application the Sub-Divisional Officer made a report stating the facts of the previous application under S. 112 and giving an opinion that the transfer in favour of Tikaram was according to S. 112, Land Revenue Act, and recommending that the application of the respondents should be rejected ; upon which the Deputy Commissioner rejected the application on 7th October 1926. The respondents thereupon filed their suit on 21st December 1926.

The trial Court found that the order transferring the theka in favour of Tikaram was passed by the Deputy Commissioner under an erroneous impression that the applicant had a legal right to be maintained out of the income of the village, and that, as the order was passed after due and proper enquiry, the civil Court, in view of S. 220, Land Revenue Act, could not interfere with it. It further found that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as the suit was to set aside an order with regard to a matter which was within the exclusive competence of the revenue Court. Some other findings were recorded but they are not of any importance with regard to this appeal, and the principal findings are these which have been detailed above. On those findings, the trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the District Judge has found that the order of the Deputy Commissioner under S. 112 was without jurisdiction, ultra vires and consequently illegal, and that, as there was an entire lack of jurisdiction, it was illegal and inoperative, and the civil Court was in consequence not barred from entertaining and trying the suit with regard to the matter dealt with in the order. Another question had been raised in the appeal which does not appear to have been put in issue in the trial Court, viz. the effect of the dismissal of the respondents' application under S. 109 (3). On that point the District Judge held that, in the first place, the application, though it purported to be under Cl. 3, S. 109, could not, strictly speaking, fall under that clause, as no transfer of the theka by the thekedar had been made and that, therefore, the Deputy Commissioner could not proceed under S. 109 (3), as the transfer had been effected by the Deputy Commissioner himself and not by the thekedar; that he was therefore incompetent to pass an order under that clause, and that his order passed on the respondents' application was ultra vires and without jurisdiction. It was held therefore that rejection of the respondents' application also under S. 109 (3) could not bar a civil suit. The District Judge then also went on to point out that the jurisdiction under S. 109 (3) was not exclusive in the same way as the special jurisdiction conferred on Revenue Officers by Ss. 107, 108, 111, 112 and 114 was The District Judge therefore held that the findings of the trial Court with regard to the order under S. 112 and jurisdiction were incorrect and set aside the decree of the trial Court and remanded the case, as it had been decided upon preliminary points, for a fresh decision upon the merits. The defendants now appeal against that order of remand.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the trial Court was correct and that of the District Judge is wrong. Distinction must be drawn between an erroneous order and an order without jurisdiction, and the District Judge has, I think, failed to draw that distinction. There can be no doubt that the Deputy Commissioner has power to transfer a theka under S. 112, Land Revenue Act, on the application of any member of the family of a protected thekedar, who is entitled to share in the theka or to be maintained out of its income, in favour of such a member ; and, if an application is made purporting to be such member, and the Deputy Commissioner upon enquiry holds that that member is entitled to be maintained out of the income and transfers the theka in his favour, his order cannot be without jurisdiction even though, as a matter of fact, as in the present case, the applicant was not entitled to be maintained out of the income The application could only be made to the revenue Court, and the revenue Court was the only Court that could decide such a matter. The application purported to be by a member of the family entitled to be maintained out of the income of the theka, and had the applicant been entitled to be so maintained, the order of the Deputy Commissioner would have been correct and unassailable. The fact that the applicant was not strictly entitled to be maintained out of the income of the theka, though he appears to have been actually so maintained, cannot, in my opinion, divest the Deputy Commissioner of his jurisdiction, even though the Deputy Commissioner made a mistake in the matter. I would hold that an order passed by a competent revenue

Court upon a matter within its jurisdiction is not ultra vires or without jurisdiction even though it is based upon a mistake of fact. In such a case S. 220, Land revenue Act, will bar the jurisdiction of the civil Court to question the order of the revenue Court. The civil Court would only have jurisdiction if it be found that the revenue Court acted without jurisdiction, e. g., if a condition precedent for the exercise of jurisdiction was wanting, or the order of the Revenue Court was based upon a mistaken view of law. I have been referred in this connexion to Malkarjun v. Narhari (1), Sadasheo v S. N. Fadnavis (2) and Jagannath v. Khuba (3). I would quote the following passage which occurs at p. 347 of the Bombay ruling :

" The Code goes on to say that the Court shall issue a notice to the party against whom execution is applied for. It did issue notice to Ramlingappa. He contended that he was not the right person, but the Court having received his protest decided that he was the right person, and so proceeded with the execution. In so doing the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake, it is true ; but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right ; and if that course is not taken the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed. The real complaint here is that the execution Court construed the Code erroneously. Acting in its duty to make the estate of Nagappa available for payment of his debt, it served with notice a person who did not legally represent the estate, and on objection decided that he did represent it. But to treat such an error as destroying the jurisdiction of the Court is calculated to introduce great confusion into the administration of the law. Their Lordships agree with the view of the learned Chief Justice that a purchaser cannot possibly judge of such matters, even if he knows the fact ; and that if he is to be held bound to inquire into the accuracy of the Court's conduct of its own business, no purchaser at a Court-sale would be safe. Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the directions of the Code it ought to do."

The learned counsel for the respondents have quoted the following cases in support of the contention that the order of the Deputy Commissioner was without jurisdiction : G. I. P. Ry Co. v. Amraoti Municipality (4), Ganeshlal v. Dhondiba (5). Municipal Committee Malkapur v. A. W. Dalal (6), Balkishen Das v. Simpson (7), Janakdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal (8) and Bhagchand Dagadusa v. The Secy. of State (9). I am of opinion that all the above cases may be distinguished. The cases in G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Amraoti Municipality (4) and Malkapur Municipality v. A. W. Dalal (6) refer to a tax which was illegally imposed by the municipality, and it was held that the jurisdiction of the civil Court would not be ousted, as the municipality acted ultra vires. The case in Ganeshlal v. Dhondiba (5) refers to S. 26, Court of Wards Act, and has, I think, no application to the present case The cases in Balkishendas v. Simpson (7) Janakdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal (8) refer to sales which were held without jurisdiction, as no arrears existed at the time of the sales and the sales could not be legally held unless arrears actually existed at the time. In Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secy. of State (9) a number of Acts and Notifications by the Government of Bombay were called into question, and the suit was brought for a declaration that the Government Notifications were illegal and unauthorized, and for a permanent injunction, and it was held in an exhaustive judgment that the suit was not barred either by S. 80 or 81, Bombay District Police Act or by S. 4 (f), Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

Many other matters were gone into in the case, which have no bearing on the present case, and there is nothing, I think, that will support the view taken by the District Judge, which the learned counsel for the respondents now tries to support, that the Deputy Commissioner in sanctioning the transfer in favour of the respondent, Tikaram acted without jurisdiction. Under S. 220 Cl. (1), Land Revenue Act, the jurisdiction of the civil Court is expressly barred with regard to any matter relating to thekedars under Ss. 107, 108, 111, 112 or 114 of the Act, and the order of the Deputy Commissioner being under

S. 112 and not being without jurisdiction cannot now be called into question in a civil Court and the jurisdiction of the civil Court is barred.

On this view the appeal must succeed and the suit of the plaintiff-respondents must be dismissed, as held by the trial Court. I would, however, also consider the other question which has arisen although it cannot affect the case, viz. whether the suit would also be barred by reason of the application made by the plaintiffs under S. 109 (3) having been rejected by the Deputy Commissioner. On this point also I am of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is incorrect. The District Judge has held in para. 5 of his judgment that the application, although it purported to be made under S. 109, Cl 3 of the Act, could not strictly fall under that clause, because no transfer of the theka by a protected thekedar was involved, and therefore he held that the Deputy Commissioner had no jurisdiction under S. 109 (3), was incompetent to pass an order under that section and that his order rejecting the application was ultra vires and could not bar a suit. The District Judge went on in para. 6 of his judgment to hold that even a jurisdiction validly exercised under S. 109 (3) would not bar a subsequent civil suit because such jurisdiction was not exclusive in the sense in which the special jurisdiction conferred by Ss. 107, 108, 111, 112 and 114 was, the District Judge went an to reason that S. 109 does not find place in S. 220, Cl. (1), though the other sections referred to are expressly mentioned in that clause. From this the District Judge infers that the legislature did not intend to exempt matters falling within S. 109 of the Act from the jurisdiction of the civil Court, as otherwise that section would also have been expressly mentioned. I am not, however, pressed by any of the arguments put forward by the learned District Judge. As regards the application not being an application under S. 109, Cl. (3), I would point out that admittedly it purports to be under that section and was dealt with by the Deputy Commissioner as such. Further, the argument that there had been no transfer by a thekedar so as to make S. 109 (3) applicable appears to me to be somewhat specious. It is true that, in a sense, there had been no transfer in as much as, on the application of Tikaram, the Deputy Commissioner had transferred the theka in his favour under S. 112, but the thekedar Kunwaria had consented to the transfer and no other course for setting aside the transfer was open to the respondents than to make an application under S. 109 (3). Their application was rejected by the Deputy Commissioner on the report made by Mr. Bharucha, Sub-divisional Officer. In the report it was mentioned that Tikaram had been appointed under S. 112, Land Revenue Act, and that there was nothing which required the the consent of proprietors, nor was there anything wrong in the inquiry previously held. It is further mentioned that Tikaram was the only heir of Mt. Kunwaria and she had consented to the transfer. It was recommended there that application should be rejected. I can see no reason for holding that the order of the Deputy Commissioner rejecting the application was ultra vires or without jurisdiction. Another point, too, that had been brought to my notice is that the respondents by making their application submitted to the jurisdiction of the revenue Court and that by so doing, in effect, they admitted that there had been a transfer, and cannot now come to the civil Court and deny that there was a transfer to contend that the order of the revenue Court was without jurisdiction In this connexion I have been referred to Pandurang v. Bala (10).

Again, as regards S. 109, and S 220, Land Revenue Act, I would point out that S 220, in the first place, lays down that .

"except as otherwise provided in this Act, or in any other enactment for the time being in force, no civil Court shall entertain any suit instituted or application made to obtain a decision or order on any matter which the Governor General in Council, the Chief Commissioner, or any Revenue Officer is, by this Act, empowered to determine, decide or dispose of."

Now, an application under S 109, Cl. (3), is clearly one that can only be dealt with by the Deputy Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner alone is empowered to decide such applications As regards the fact that S. 109, is not expressly mentioned in Cl. (I), S 220, I would draw attention to the last clause of para. 1, S. 220, which runs :

(10) First Appeal No. 71 of 1926, decided on 23rd July 1927.

"and in particular and without prejudice to the generality of this provision, no civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters."

The fact, then, that S. 109 does not appear in Cl. (1) will not in any way prejudice the general provisions of S. 220, which expressly bar the jurisdiction of the civil Court in such a matter. I hold therefore that a civil Court can have no authority to entertain an application under S. 109 (3), C. P. Land Revenue Act, nor will a suit lie to set aside a transfer by a protected thekedar and further that an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner under S. 109 (3) rejecting an application, will bar a suit to set aside the transfer.

I therefore set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court remanding the case for a decision upon merits, and instead restore the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit of the plaintiff-respondents. Costs of the appeal in both Courts and of the original suit will be borne by the plaintiff-respondents. I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 50.

Second Appeal No. 419 of 1927, Decided on 28th February 1929, against the decree of Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 17th June 1927 in Civil Appeal No 66 of 1926.

Civil P. C., O 22, R. 4—Defendant dying after preliminary decree—R. 4 does not apply.

Where a defendant dies after the preliminary decree is passed and before the passing of the final decree, the provisions of O. 22, R 4 do not apply, because the right of action is determined in the preliminary decree and in the final decree proceedings, only the principles laid down and determined in the preliminary decree are worked out in detail. *A. Judgment.—The appellant Debinath is a minor son of Harnath against whom and Mst. Gajma Bai a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed on 15th September 1922. Applications were filed on 11th April 1923 to make the preliminary decree absolute and also to bring the names of the legal representatives of Harnath on record as it was stated in the application for substitution of name that Harnath died 3 months ago. The Court passed an order on 21st July 1923 that the name of Debinath be brought on record in place of Harnath and appointed Ganpatlal guardian ad litem of the minor Debinath. The preliminary decree was made absolute on 8th November 1924. An application was made on 14th August 1926 on behalf of the minor through his mother Yeshwanti Bai that the name of the minor should not be substituted in place of his deceased father Harnath because Harnath died on 9th November 1922 and the application for substitution of names was not made within the period of limitation prescribed for it, that is, within 90 days and therefore the suit had abated. This application was rejected on 11th December 1926 by Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Raipur. An appeal was filed against the order mentioned above, in the Court of the District Judge, Raipur, who dismissed the appeal on 17th June 1927.

The only point which was raised in this Court was that the suit having abated on 9th February 1923, all proceedings in the suit after that date were infructuous and were not binding on the minor. This argument is based on the fact that Harnath died on 9th November 1922 and the period of limitation for filing an application under Art. 177, Lim. Act was 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant. In the proceedings which took place after the filing of the application dated 11th April 1923 the minor was properly represented by a guardian who was related to him and who was appointed by the Court. This point was not raised at that time and therefore cannot be raised by another guardian of the minor in a later stage of the same proceedings. The order was passed on 21st July 1923 that the name of the minor be brought on record in place of his deceased father and that order cannot now be challenged by means of an application which was filed after 3 years. Formerly the period of limitation for bringing the legal representatives of a deceased defendant was six months and it was explicitly reduced to 90 days by the Amending and Repealing Act of 1923. In 1923 there was a conflict of opinion regarding the period of limitation prescribed under Art. 177 and this was set at rest by Act 11 of 1923. On the date the application was made the period of limitation under Art. 177, Lim. Act was considered to be 6 months and not 90 days. In any view of the case it cannot now be said that the application was barred by time when it was made and the suit had abated.

The learned counsel for the respondent urged that O. 22, R. 4, Civil P. C. does not apply where a defendant dies after the preliminary decree was passed and before the passing of the final decree. He cited in this Connexion Talaram v. Tukaram (1) and Perumal Pillay v. Perumal Chetty (2). In the latter case no application was made after the passing of the preliminary decree, within 3 months of plaintiff's death, to add his legal representatives to the record and it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, that O. 22, Rr. 3 and 4, Civil P. C. do not apply to cases of death of parties after the passing of a preliminary decree. The right of action was determined in the preliminary decree and in the final decree proceedings only the principles laid down and determined in the preliminary decree are worked out in detail. In this view of the case, the question of limitation raised in this case does not arise.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

M. R. Bobde—for Appellant.

W. R. Puranik—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Respondent 1 Khwaja Kutub-ud-din, brought a suit against the appellant Totaram and respondent 2, Khwaja Hasan, for ejectment of Totaram from certain fields and for rent. The trial Court passed a decree for ejectment and for Rs. 106-14-0 as rent. On appeal however the Special Additional District Judge, Akola, modified the decree and granted the plaintiff a decree for joint possession on a half share in the fields only and for half the rent, that is, Rs. 53-7-0. Defendant 1, Totaram, has again appealed to this Court claiming that he was not liable to ejectment even as regards half of the fields. It is now admitted that the plaintiff and defendant 2 are certificated holders of the jagir village of Hingna Kazi It is also admitted that defendant 1, Totaram, is an annual tenant of the three fields, Nos 8, 52 and 57, in that village and as an annual tenant he is liable to be ejected upon a notice being duly served under S. 79, Cl. (2), Berar Land Revenue Act, It is, however, contested that the plaintiff cannot eject him alone without the consent of other certificated holders and that a notice given by the plaintiff alone was not a valid notice. The matter has been considered by the lower appellate Court and I think the view taken by that Court is correct It is quite clear from the rulings quoted that one of two or more joint co-owners can sue for ejectment of a trespasser With regard to the ejectment of a tenant there may have been some difference of opinion but it seems settled law that one of two or more joint co-owners can sue for ejectment of a trespasser provided he makes the other co-owners parties to the suit. He can also sue for rent of the holding under the same conditions and in that case a decree should be passed in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant co-owners, who would be joined as defendants if they refuse to be joined as plaintiffs. This view has been taken in the previous suit between the parties as appears from the appellate judgments filed as Exs D-8 and D-9. I would also refer to the ruling in Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (1). It seems clear that one or more joint co-owners can sue for ejectment of a tenant as regards his share in a holding and can sue for his share of the rent, if he makes the other co-owners parties to the suit. The learned advocate for the appellant relies upon the ruling in Ramji Patel Kunbi v. Syed Nur (2) where it has been laid down that for avoiding a transfer made by an absolute occupancy tenant under the Central Province Tenancy Act all the landlords or co-owners must join. It seems to me, however, that there is a difference between avoiding a transfer, which is not in itself void, and which is valid unless it is avoided by a special procedure and ejectment of a tenant, which is the inherent right of every landlord, unless there are special conditions to the contrary. I am fortified in this view by the ruling in Daryao Shah Gond v. Tiran Shah Gond (3) and I would refer to pp 47 and 48 of that ruling. Unless this view is taken it is clear, as in the present case that one co owner by colluding with a tenant can entirely defeat the rights of the other co-owners. I would hold, then, that one co-owner can sue to eject a tenant as regards his share in the property and can sue for his share of the rent making the other co-owners parties to the suit.

Similarly it would follow that if one co-owner can sue for ejectment as regards his share, he can certainly give a valid notice to quit as regards his share. The appeal, therefore, fails and, in my opinion, the view taken by the lower appellate Court is correct and the decree should be for the plaintiff's share, i. e., half share in the fields. As regards the cross-objections there is little to be said. The view taken by the lower appellate Court is, as already stated, correct. The plaintiff can sue as regards his own share, but he cannot sue as regards the whole of the fields, as he has only a half share in the jagir. There is no evidence to show that the plaintiff is the superior holder or in any way the manager of the jagir. The case quoted, Vithal v. Waman (4) is beside the point, because now under S. 188, Central Prov. Land Revenue Act a lambardar is expressly recognized as the agent of the proprietary body and, therefore, he has certain definite powers. In the case of this jagir there is no analogy between the plaintiff and a lambardar under the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act and, as already stated, it has not been shown that the plaintiff has even been declared to be the superior holder or manager. On the contrary Ex. P-6, itself, on which the plaintiff relied, shows that the Deputy Commissioner had only proclaimed him as jagirdar and expressly stated that he had no power to proclaim him as the superior holder. There is no force in the cross-objections which are dismissed. The appeal and cross-objections are both dismissed. Costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellant. Costs of the cross-objections will be borne by respondent 1. Costs in the Courts below will be borne as ordered by the lower appellate Court.

First Appeal No. 42-B of 1927, Decided on 20th March 1929, against judgment of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 29th April 1927, in Civil Suit No. 5 of 1925.

(a) Tort—Negligence— Door of compartment on moving train open is prima facie evidence—Railway Company must prove non-negligence.

The fact that a door is open on a moving train is evidence of negligence on the part of the company, but not conclusive proof. That a door was open is at any rate prima facie evidence against the company and it rests on the company to prove that the door was not open owing to negligence on the part of its servants. 34 Bom 427, 37 Bom 575, Ref.

* (b) Tort—Negligence — Contributory negligence—Test to determine liability enunciated.

In order that a plea of contributory negligence may be successful, it must be shown either that there was negligence on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to the accident and that the defendant could not by using ordinary care have avoided the accident, or that notwithstanding the defendant's negligence, the plaintiff could, by exercising ordinary care, have avoided the accident. Where, therefore, the defendant is negligent and the plaintiff is alleged to have been guilty of contributory negligence, the test to be applied is whether the defendant's negligence was the real, direct and effective cause of the misfortune. When the acts of negligence alleged are not contemporaneous this test in general results in throwing the responsibility on that party who last had an opportunity of avoiding, by the exercise of ordinary care or skill, the effect of the negligence of the other, and who failed to do so. If negligence on the part of the defendant is proved and contributory negligence by the plaintiff is at best only a matter of doubt, the defendant is liable.

Where the plaintiff was travelling in a railway compartment with his elbow outside the window of the carriage and it was severely hurt by an open door of a compartment of another train which passed the train by which the plaintiff was travelling and the plaintiff sued the railway company for damages:

Held: that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as he had the last opportunity of avoiding the accident and that as he failed to do so he could not claim any damages from the company. [P 211 C 1]

M. R. Bobde and M. K. Chande—for Appellant.

W. R. Mudholkar and M. V. Modak—for Respondent.

Judgment.— The plaintiff-appellant Chotelal Varma is a Sub-Inspector of Police, who has sued the G. I. P. Ry. for damages amounting to Rs. 10,100 on account of injuries caused to him while he was travelling in a 2nd Class carriage from Jalamb to Malkapur. The lower Court has dismissed his suit, finding that there was contributory negligence on his part.

The facts as found by the lower Court are that the plaintiff was sitting with his elbow protruding from the carriage window when another train passed with a door swinging open, which struck the plaintiff's fore arm and caused the injuries for which damages are sought. As the lower Court has found that there was negligence on the part of the railway company, the company has raised the question again in answer to the appeal, and I propose to consider that point first. I have been referred to Bromley v G. I. P. Ry. Co. (1) for the proposition that leaving a railway carriage door open is negligence on the part of the company, but that does not mean that the fact of an open door concludes the matter. In Dullabhji Sakhidas v. G. I P. Ry. Co. (2), it has has been laid down that the fact that a door is open on a moving train is evidence of negligence on the part of the company, but not conclusive proof. That a door was open is at any rate prima facie evidence against the company, and it rests on the company to prove that the door was not open owing to negligence on the part of its servants In the present case the only evidence is that of the Guard, W. P. Perrin (D. W. 4), who says that after the train of which he was in charge left Biswa he exchanged signals on both sides with the driver and the brakesman and did not notice the door of any carriage on the offside open. He admits that it was dark at the time, and I cannot regard his evidence as sufficient proof that all due precaution was taken to see that the door was properly closed before the train left

Biswa. I must hold that there was negligence on the part of the railway company when the train reached Nagpur. L. J., Rajput (D. W 5) the train examiner, found that the door which had caused the injury had come off the top hinge, the middle hinge was a bit loose, but was still holding, and the third hinge was firm Evidence has been given for the plaintiff to show that both the upper hinges had given way before the train left Malkapur. But I am unable to believe that evidence in view of what the train examiner has said It is shown by the inspection note recorded by the train Court and by the evidence of Mr. Horsfield, Divisional Transportation Superintendent (D. W. 6), that no greater danger arose from the fact that the open door was held by two hinges only out of three, and even if it be taken (a point by no means clear) that the hinges were damaged before the accident I do not think that the company is necessarily guilty of any greater negligence.

I now come to the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. It is not now disputed that he did have his elbow outside the widow of the carriage. According to the evidence of two doctors, Dr John and Colonel Tarr, who judged from the nature of the injuries caused, his elbow must have been protruding about 4 inches. According to Mr. Horsfield it must have been at least 5 inches or else no injuries would have been caused. The exact distance to which the elbow protruded is, however, of little or no importance In Dullabhji Sakhidas v. G I. P Ry. Co. (2) it has been held that a railway company is not liable for the injuries caused to any part of a passenger which was outside the carriage in which he was travelling It is pointed out on behalf of the plaintiff that in Jehangir Muncherji v. B. B & C. I. Ry. Co. (3) the Court found itself unable to follow the rigid and inflexible rule of law laid down in the earlier case, but I do not find that, in effect, any other rule was followed the decision being given against the plaintiff on the ground that he was guilty of gross carelessness, because being engrossed in reading he failed to pull in his elbow when another train was passing. I am unable to appreciate this reasoning. It seems to me that the plaintiff in that case would have been equally, if not more, negligent if he failed to pull in his elbow when he did realize that another train was passing, and that in effect he was found guilty of contributory negligence, merely because he had his elbow outside the window. I have been referred to Pollock's Law of Torts, Edn. 11, p. 441 where the general rule as stated by Baron Alderson is quoted :

"Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent or reasonable man would not do".

It is urged that in the present case the plaintiff was occupying a position such as is ordinarily occupied by passengers in Indian Railway trains, he was doing a common everyday act performed by many persons in perfect safety and not negligent This point of view has been considered in Dullabhji Sakhidas v. G. I P Ry. Co (2) and rejected for reasons which seem to me sound Apart from the fact that there was a notice warning all passengers not to lean out of the windows (and as has been said in Dullabhji Sakhidas v. G. I P. Ry. Co (2), no distinction can be fairly drawn to the company's disadvantage between leaning out and putting arms or heads out) there is an obvious duty on railway passengers to avoid running risk by protruding any part of their persons from the windows.

It is urged, however, that although the plaintiff may have been negligent, that fact alone does not disentitle him from recovering damages In this connexion reference has been made to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 21, p. 446. It is there said in para 759 :

"In order that a plea of contributory negligence may be successful, it must be shown either that there was negligence on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to the accident and that the defendant could not by using ordinary care have avoided the accident, or that notwithstanding the defendant's negligence, the plaintiff could, by exercising ordinary care, have avoided the accident. Where, therefore, the defendant is negligent and the plaintiff is alleged to have been guilty of contributory negligence, the test to be applied is whether the defendant's negligence was the real direct and effective cause of the misfortune. When the acts of negligence alleged are not contemporaneous this test in general results in throwing the responsibility on that party who last had an opportunity of avoiding by the exercise of ordinary care or skill, the effect of the negligence of the other, and who failed to do so. If negligence on the part of the defendant is proved and contributory negligence by the plaintiff is at best only a matter of doubt, the defendant is liable."

Here it is said that the plaintiff's contributory negligence is only a matter of doubt but there I cannot agree, because the accident could never have happened if his elbow had not been outside the carriage window That was the direct cause of the accident and applying the test stated in the above quotation for cases in which the acts of negligence are not contemporaneous, it is clear that it was the plaintiff who had the last opportunity of avoiding the accident and that he failed to do so. I agree with the lower Court's finding that the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence and that his suit was rightly dismissed.

D. W. Kathalay—for Appellant

W. H. Dhabe and K. A. Potey—for Respondent.

Judgment—The defendant-appellant Yamuna Bai, as is admitted by the plaintiff-respondent in her deposition as P W. 17, was the senior wife of Maruti. The respondent, Jamuna Bai, was the junior wife. It will be convenient to refer to the wives as Y and J. Maruti adopted a son, Ramchandra, on 10th August 1916. Maruti, as the plaint states, died in 1921 and at his death Ramchandra became the sole owner of the property. Ramchandra died in 1923. The plaintiff's case is that she and the appellant were both mothers of Ramchandra and therefore succeeded to the estate. The suit is for partition of the estate. It is admitted that the respondent took part in the ceremony of adoption. The finding of the trial Court with which we are concerned is contained in para 16 of the judgment:

"The evidence on the record shows that the plaintiff as well as defendant 1 took part in the ceremony of adoption. Both of them are thus the adoptive mothers of Ramchandra Sao. The plaintiff is not a stepmother and she is entitled to a share."

It is necessary to refer to the pleadings and evidence in order to make clear the meaning of this finding. The defendant stated that the plaintiff who is the junior wife was excluded from the ceremony of adoption. The plaintiff rejoined that she took full part in that ceremony. The learned Judge has accepted the story told by the plaintiff's witnesses, they state that both wives were present but do not appear to state that they took an active part in the ceremony. Baliram (P.W. 4) states that Marutisao's two wives were sitting in his left side and Y was next Marutisao when the boy was placed on his lap. The deed of adoption prepared at the time (Ex. D. 1) states that Ramchandra's guardian was his adoptive mother Y. The Judge states that this fact does not indicate deliberate exclusion of the plaintiff and later on says that no reason is shown why Maruti Sao should have excluded the plaintiff. The finding, then, really is that while the defendant is admitted to have take part in the ceremony of adoption the plaintiff was not excluded from that ceremony.

The appellant's counsel considers that on the finding of fact the suit should have been dismissed and for this reason has not attacked the finding of fact. He relies on the very definite views expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in

Venkata Narasimha v. Parthasarathy (1) at p. 220. Their Lordships state:

"Before examining the validity of these contentions it will be well to clear up one or two points upon which their Lordships are of opinion that no reasonable doubt can exist. In the first place, there could be no power of adoption by either or both of the widows in the present case excepting such as might be derived from the powers given by the will. In this part of India, at all events, a widow has no power to adopt a son to a deceased husband excepting by express authority given by him in his lifetime or by will. In the next place, only one wife can receive the child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother. This is evident from the cases which establish that the receiving mother acquires in the eye of the law the same position as a natural mother to such an extent that her parents become legally the maternal grandparents of the child. To hold that a child could bear such a relationship to more than one mother would be entirely contrary to settled law and would produce inextricable confusion in the law of inheritance."

Their Lordships clearly state that in their opinion no reasonable doubt exists regarding this proposition:

"Only one wife can receive a child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother."

For the respondent it is urged that the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council was intended to apply only to the case of an adoption made by a widow after the death of her husband. The reason given by their Lordships conclusively shows that this is not the case. Whether the adoption is made during the lifetime of the husband or after the death to hold that more than one wife could receive a child in adoption would have an effect, which, their Lordships state, would be entirely contrary to settled law and would produce inextricable confusion in the law of inheritance. It is urged by the respondent's counsel that this is an obiter dictum which we are not bound to follow. Their Lordships considered it necessary to decide the point with which we are concerned in order to deal satisfactorily with the question whether a joint power of adoption given by a will to two wives was exercisable by the surviving widow alone after the death of the other. The point with which we are concerned must have been argued before their Lordships. We do not consider then that the finding of their Lordships can be termed an obiter dictum.

Again, their Lordships clearly laid down principles and it is not open to us to question any principle enunciated by the Board even if it was unnecessary for the decision of the suit before their Lordships to lay down those principles. It is sufficient to cite Mata Prasad v. Nageshar Sahai (2) at p. 900 (of 47 All.) where it is stated:

"Their Lordships think it desirable to point out that it is not open to the Courts in India to question any principle enunciated by this Board, although they have a right of examining the facts of any case before them to see whether and how far the principle on which stress is laid applies to the facts of the particular case."

We need not refer to cases cited by the appellant in which Judges have remarked that mere obiter dicta of the Privy Council were not binding on them as authority. It is next urged that the defence did not contain an argument that only one wife could step into the position of an adoptive mother of a child : had this argument been raised it might have been possible for the plaintiff to allege and prove a custom peculiar to the caste of Karars. But the plaintiff's case is simply that both wives were present at the adoption ceremony and consequently both were the adoptive mothers of Ramchandra Sao. Under the Hindu Law the presence of both widows has not this consequence. It was for the plaintiff to allege the existence of a custom among Karars by virtue of which this consequence followed.

We are bound to hold that only one wife could have received Ramchandra in adoption so as to step into the position of being his adoptive mother. It was admitted that the senior widow Y did become the adoptive mother of Ramchandra. There has been no formal application before us to amend the plaint by stating that as two wives could not become adoptive mothers, Y did not and J did become the adoptive mother. Full evidence regarding the facts of the adoption have been given and the evidence furnishes no support to such a proposition. The plaintiff-respondent, then, was not a second adoptive mother of Ramchandra. When Ramchandra died the defendant inherited the property from Ramchandra in preference to her co-widow. Annapurni

Municipal Committee, Murtizapur—Plaintiff—Non-Applicant

Civil Revn. No. 239-B of 1928, Decided on 22nd April 1929, against judgment of Sm. C. C. Judge, Akola, D/- 31st July 1928, in Sm. C Suit No 5711 of 1927.

(a) C. P. Municipal Act, S. 25 (1) — Burden of obtaining sanction for payment of allowance is on Municipal Committee and unless it is refused, party receiving allowance, receives it legally.

In the M Municipal Committee, A was originally employed as a Sanitary Inspector. Three years later he was appointed Secretary on a monthly consolidated pay of Rs. 75. Later on he applied to the Committee to give him some allowance for doing the work of supervision of sanitation and the Chairman of the Public Health Committee proposed that A should get Rs. 12 as monthly allowance for doing additional work from the date on which he became Secretary. This proposal was ultimately confirmed by the Municipal Committee and A was accordingly paid this allowance with retrospective effect. The payment of this allowance was, however, objected to by the auditor on the ground that it required sanction of the Local Government under the proviso to S. 25. The Committee applied for sanction but the Commissioner returned the application without forwarding it to the Local Government. The Committee thereupon sued A for the recovery of the amount of allowance paid to him.

Held . that assuming that sanction of Local Government was necessary the burden of obtaining it was on the Committee and that unless the Local Government was approached and it refused to accord its sanction, the payment already made to A could not be said to have been illegally received by him so as to give the Committee a right to recover the amount from him. [P 214 C 2]

(b) C. P. Municipal Act, S. 176 (2) (iii)—Rules under S. 176 do not authorize Commissioner to withhold application to Local Government for sanction of allowance—Refusing to forward such application by Commissioner is ultra vires.

Rule 1 of the rules under S. 176 (2) (iii) not only does not delegate to the Commissioner the power of the Local Government of according sanction in a case covered by the proviso to S. 25, Municipalities Act, but does not even authorise the Commissioner to withhold forwarding such a proposal and the action of the Commissioner in refusing to forward to the Local Government the representation of the Municipal Committee for sanction of the amount is ultra vires. [P 214 C 2 ; P 215 C 1]

G. R. Deo—for Applicant.

P. K. Salve—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision arises are indisputably these : The defendant-applicant was originally employed by the plaintiff non-applicant (the Municipal Committee of Murtizapur) as a Sanitary Inspector on Rs. 60 plus Rs. 7-8-0 as cycle allowance per month About three years later on 6th July 1924 the applicant was appointed the Secretary of the Committee in addition on a consolidated monthly pay of Rs. 75, but on 8th December 1924 the applicant submitted an application to the plaintiff Committee to give him some allowance for "doing the work of supervision of sanitation" On the same day the Chairman Public Health Sub-Committee proposed that "the Secretary should get an allowance of Rs. 12 per mensem with effect from 6th July 1924 for the additional work of supervision and sanitation," and on the next day the Public Health Sub-Committee confirmed the aforesaid proposal of its Chairman. At the ordinary general meeting of the plaintiff Committee held on 10th December 1924, the aforesaid resolution for the grant of the extra allowance was unanimously approved and confirmed, and accordingly the applicant was paid this allowance every month with effect from 6th July 1924 up to 28th February 1926 amounting in all to Rs. 238-1-0. The payment of this allowance having been objected to by the auditor, on the ground that the sanction of the Local Government was not obtained for it as required by the proviso to S. 25 (1), Central Provinces Municipalities Act 1922, the Deputy Commissioner, Akola, asked the plaintiff Committee to apply for the necessary sanction. Accordingly the plaintiff Committee applied for sanction of the Local Government and forwarded the application as required by the rules through the Deputy Commissioner ; who in his turn, after gathering some more information on the point, forwarded it to the Commissioner, Berar Division. The latter officer, however, refused to forward it to the Local Government and sent it back on 16th September 1926 to the plaintiff Committee through the Deputy Commissioner, Akola. The plaintiff Committee thereupon resolved to recover the amount of the allowance paid to the applicant and after serving a notice upon him to refund the amount filed the suit in the Small Cause Court, Akola, for recovery of the same.

The applicant defendant admitted the receipt of the money but pleaded (1) that the grant of the allowance in question did not require the sanction of the Local Government ; and (2) that even if the sanction was required, the plaintiff Committee having failed to obtain the refusal of the Local Government for the same, their suit was premature.

A fair idea of the further pleadings of the parties would be gathered from the following points that were fixed for trial by the Court :

"1. Did the allowance in question require the sanction of the Local Government ?

2. Could plaintiff obtain the sanction directly from the Local Government as pleaded by defendant ?

3. Is the suit premature ?

4. Is plaintiff estopped from reducing the income ?

5. Has the plaintiff got no cause of action and is the suit not maintainable ?

6. To what relief is plaintiff entitled ?"

The lower Court held all the points in favour of the plaintiff Committee and decreed the claim with costs. The defendant has, therefore, come up to this Court in revision. Out of the five grounds the first three only were pressed in arguments. These are :

"1. That the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court erred in holding that the allowance granted to the applicant required the sanction of the Local Government under S. 25 (1), Municipalities Act.

2. That inasmuch as the Local Government has not disapproved of the grant of allowance to the applicant, the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court should have held that the suit, being premature, was not maintainable.

3. That the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court should have held that the non-applicant should have insisted on the forwarding by the Commissioner of the resolution of the non-applicant to the Local Government for its sanction and should have in that connexion supplied the necessary information in support thereof and a failure to do so disentitled the non-applicant to maintain the suit."

It is not necessary for the disposal of the case that a decision on the first ground should be given. I will assume that the sanction of the Local Government was necessary under the proviso to S. 25 (1), Municipalities Act, for the grant of the extra allowanee in question. It is admitted by the learned pleader for the non-applicant Committee that the burden of obtaining the necessary sanction was on the Committee, after it had resolved to grant the allowance. It is equally clear that the Local Government could be approached to accord the requisite sanction with retrospective effect for otherwise the Deputy Commissioner would not have asked the Committee and the latter would not have applied for it. It, therefore, follows that unless the Local Government was approached and refused to accord its sanction in the matter, the payment already made to the defendant could not be said to have been illegally received by him from the Committee so as to give them a right to recover the amount from him.

It was contended for the plaintiff Committee that the Commissioner's refusal to forward their application for sanction to the Local Government was in fact a refusal by the Government itself, and reliance was placed in support of this contention on R 1 of the rules under S. 176 (2) (iii), Municipal Act, and to be found printed at p. 288, Berar Municipal Manual (1928 Edition) :

"1. All correspondence between Municipal Committees and the Local Government and all representations to the Local Government shall pass through the Deputy Comissioner of the District and the Commissioner of the Division. The Deputy Commissioner shall forthwith forward the correspondence and the representations to the Local Government with such remarks as he may think fit to make.

The Deputy Commissioner may detain any correspondence or representation till he gets from the Committee such information as in his opinion may be considered useful or necessary by the Local Government for the proper disposal of the correspondence or representation."

It will, however, be clear that the aforesaid rule not only does not delegate to the Commissioner the power of the Local Government of according sanction in a case covered by the proviso to S 25 (1), Municipalities Act, but does not even authorize the Commissioner to withhold forwarding such a proposal of the Municipal Committee to the Local Government. As I read the rule it merely directs that all correspondence and representations to the Local Government from a Municipal Committee shall be forwarded through the Deputy Commissioner of the Division. The second part of the aforesaid rule makes the matter clearer still by stating under what circumstances the Deputy Commissioner may detain the correspondence for the time being until the necessary information asked for is supplied. I, therefore, hold that the Commissioner, Berar Division, acted ultra vires in refusing to forward to the Local Government the representation of the plaintiff Committee for sanction of the amount in question. It was the clear duty of the plaintiff Committee under the circumstances to have pressed upon the Commissioner the necessity of forwarding their representation to the Local Government and having failed to do so they cannot be heard to say that sanction of the Local Government was refused in the matter so as to give them a cause of action for the recovery of the amount in question from the applicant on the ground that the same was illegally received by him.

The present case appears to me to be analogous to the one in which the contract is not illegal ab initio but is likely to become void on account of the happening of a contingency and until that contingency happens the contract cannot be avoided. I, therefore, hold that until the Local Government has had an opportunity of refusing to accord sanction to the payment already made to the applicant, the plaintiff Committee has got no right to recover back the amount which they had by their own resolution agreed to and did pay to the defendant Their present suit is under the circumstances premature and ought to have been dismissed.

I allow the application for revision and setting aside the decree of the lower Court dismiss the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is premature. As I consider that the plaintiff Committee were driven to file the suit on account of their being misled by the Commissioner's order in refusing to forward their representation to the Local Government, I order that the costs of this litigation here and in the lower Court be borne by the parties as incurred.

Criminal Revn. No. 310 of 1928, Decided on 29th October 1928, against judgment of Sess. Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 4th July 1928, in Criminal Appeal No. 29 of 1928.

(a) Evidence Act, Ss. 133 and 114 III. (b)— All accomplices though not on same footing conviction principally upon evidence of accomplices in absence of corroboration in material particulars by independent evidence is unsafe.

It is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of accomplices unless corroborated in material particulars. In considering whether this maxim applies to a particular case it must be remembered that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated on precisely the same footing. [P 217 C 2]

Accomplice evidence is untrustworthy for three reasons. (i). He is likely to swear falsely to shift the guilt from him, (ii). He being a participator in crime is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath, and (iii). He gives evidence under promise of or in expectation of a pardon. Therefore if the principal evidence is of accomplices, it is tainted evidence and hence there is need for corroboration. 26 Bom. 193, 14 Bom. 115, Foll. [P 217 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 133—Accomplice in case under S. 161, Penal Code—Person who has subscribed to, collected or paid the money over to the accused as also person who advances loan with the knowledge that it is to be paid as bribe to the accused is accomplice—Penal Code S. 161.

A person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice. Persons who actually pay the bribes or co-operate in such payments or are instrumental in the negotiations for the purpose are also accomplices of the person bribed, and a person who with knowledge that the bribe has to be paid advances money is clearly an abettor and as such an accomplice. 14 Bom. 331; 26 Bom. 193 and 27 Cal. 144, Rel. on. [P 217 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 133—Duty of prosecution to show that evidence is of accomplices and is corroborated—Defence can take advantage of omission.

It is mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record An accused is under no legal obligation to do so. He can keep quiet and take advantage of the flaw in the evidence brought by the prosecution against him, or in short, of the weakness of the prosecution case. [P 218 C 1] make him independent witness as he still remains accomplice—Corroboration of one accomplice by another is not independent.

The withdrawal of prosecution against an accomplice relegates him from the position of a co-accused to his original position of an accomplice who had for all practical purposes earned complete immunity for his participation in the crime. His evidence under such circumstances could not be a piece of independent evidence. To regard the testimony of one accomplice as corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice is to hold that there is corroboration where under law or fact there is none at all. Order.—This revision arises out of a criminal prosecution started against the applicant for an offence punishable under S. 161, I. P. C. The applicant is a Forester posted in Kedarpur getting Rs. 27-12-0 as his monthly pay. On the Holiday, which fell on 18th March 1927, he got information that a shooting party was coming for shooting into the Government forest in his charge Out of the party he could arrest only four persons and the rest escaped. A gun possessed by Charru without license was also seized. After the persons, namely, Charru (P. W. 15), Bhonga (P. W 18), Adku (P. W. 26), Harisingh (P W. 30) and one Gocha, who escaped, were arrested, one Bhangi (P. W. 36) came and offered to stand surety for them at the Forest Naka at Bakhari where they were taken in the meantime After his suretyship was accepted and they were released, it is said that the applicant threw out a hint for a bribe, if the persons arrested desired him to hush up the case of a forest offence A deputation of three persons, Amka (P W. 4), Gopalsingh (P W. 16) and the surety Bhangi (P. W. 36) came for negotiating and settling the bribe to be paid to him, but, as his demand which was for Rs 1,500 was considered to be exorbitant, nothing could be settled by them.

Thereafter, later, on the following day (19th March 1927) a second batch consisting of Charru, Janglih Harisingh, and Bhangi came and prevailed upon the accused to agree to a bribe of Rs 900 only. Then a sum of Rs. 730 was collected for the bribe and Rs. 710 out of it were paid to the accused on 20th March 1927, and the gun belonging to Charru was returned to the surety Bhangi with instructions to hand it back to Charru on payment by him of the balance of Rs. 190 on applicant's account to Bhangi (P. W. 36). Ex. 2 is the official report of the forest offence signed by the applicant. It bears date 18th-28th March 1927; whereas Ex. P-8 is his tour diary narrating incidents from 16th March 1927, to 23rd March 1927. Ex P-8 bears applicant's signature under dated 25th March 1927. It reached Mr. Cleophas (P. W. 1) on 27th March 1927, as his endorsement under entry of 18th March 1927, in the diary shows. It appears that the report (Ex. P-2) had not been received by Mr. Cleophas till 27th March 1927, and this necessitated the calling up of an explanation from the applicant who explained under date 29th March 1927, that his bundle was at Piparia and he himself was laid up with fever for three days at Kedarpur but had already made a report on plain paper, as his endorsement on Ex. P-2 shows.

Exhibit P-3 is the report on plain paper referred to above It reached Mr. Cleophas (P. W. 1) on 29th March 1927 It is thus clear that though the forest offence was committed on 18th March 1927, no intimation about it, in the shape either of an entry in the applicant's tour diary (Ex. P-8) or of an official report (Ex. P-2), or an informal report by him on plain paper Ex. P-3, dated 19th March 1927, reached P W. 1 till 27th March 1927, and 29th March 1927, respectively. After enquiry and trial the applicant was convicted and three concurrent sentences of eighteen months each, for three offences, with a fine of Rs. 200 were passed by the trying Magistrate, but the Sessions Judge convicted him for one offence and maintained only one sentence of eighteen months and fine of Rs. 200.

The applicant challenges the correctness of the conviction on various grounds. Several of them deal with the question of the right appreciation of the evidence on record and the probabilities of the case, and stress is laid on the non-production of some material evidence. An attempt was made to argue that some exceptional circumstances were brought out in the evidence which showed that the conclusions of the trying Magistrate as also of the Sessions Judge were perverse and that the evidence did not justify them. One serious objection raised against the legality of the conviction is that it is based on evidence of persons who are mere accomplices. Reliance is placed on the decision in Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (1), Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (2), King-Emperor v. Malhar (3) and In re, Vyasa Rao (4) in support of the objection. The learned Standing Counsel for the Crown brings a case in Emperor v. Shrinivas (5) to my notice and asks me to hold on its authority that the witnesses were not accomplices, and even if they were so, he contends that they were reliable and relied upon, and that the finding as to the applicant's guilt was justifiable on other independent corroborative facts held proved in the case.

It is admitted on all hands that the conviction does "principally" rest on the evidence of persons who have either subscribed to the bribe or collected the money or paid it over to the accused. There is the evidence of persons who advanced loans in order that the money so lent may be paid to the applicant as a bribe. I have not the least doubt that the evidence of all these persons is evidence of accomplices. A person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice; Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (2) and King-Emperor v. Malhar (3). Persons who actually pay bribes or co-operate in such payments or are instrumental in the negotiations for the purpose, are also accomplices of the person bribed. This is clearly laid down in Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (1) and in Queen-Empress v Deodar Singh (6). A person who with knowledge that the bribe has to be paid advances money, is clearly an abettor and as such an accomplice. I am not prepared to agree with the Standing Counsel that they cannot be treated as accomplices. I need not discuss the statute law or the case law on this point at any length as the matter is very clearly discussed in a long series of cases.

I may, however, say that I agree with the observations of Fulton and Crowe, JJ, in King-Emperor v. Malhar (3) to the following effect:

It is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of accomplices unless corroborated in material particulars. In considering whether this maxim does or does not apply to a particular case it must be remembered that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated as on precisely the same footing; the nature of the offence and the circumstances in which the accomplices make their statements must always be considered. No general rule on the subject can be laid down. The legislature has not done so; and the Courts, whose function it is to interpret the law, cannot do so. The decisions, however, show the principles on which Judges have acted in particular cases and it is the duty of their successors to consider those principles and determine to what extent they are applicable to the circumstances of other cases.

What those principles are are set forth in Queen Empress v. Maganlal (1), by Scott, J., at p. 119:

"Accomplice evidence is held untrustworthy for three reasons: (1) because an accomplice is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself; (2) because an accomplice, as a participator in crime, and consequently an immoral person, is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath; and (3) because he gives his evidence under promise of a pardon, or in the expectation of an implied pardon, if he discloses all he knows against those with whom he acted criminally; and this hope would lead him to favour the prosecution."

If then, the principal evidence is of accomplices, it is tainted evidence and hence there is need for corroboration.

In Maganlal's case (1) the main error relied on was that the Judge did not apparently in weighing the evidence bear in mind the fact that all the evidence came from accomplice witnesses. In cases where a Judge combines the functions of a Judge and jury, he is bound under law to scrutinize the accomplice's evidence with the same degree of care and caution which is required of him in a trial by jury and just as he is bound to give a warning to the jury, he must warn himself that it is evidence in the absence of substantial corroboration by independent evidence. What I have, therefore, to see is whether the the trying Magistrate, or the Judge who heard the appeal in this case or they wholly overlooked its accomplice character and whether, in the latter event, this is a fit case for interference. If, however, this Court on a scrutiny of the evidence, is itself satisfied that there is corroboration, there is an end of the case.

But it is argued by the Standing Counsel for the Crown that the question of witnesses being accomplices was never suggested in the course of the trial before the Magistrate or in appeal before the Sessions Judge, and that, though neither of then uses the word "corroboration" in his judgment, each of them must be deemed to be cognizant of the law that the giver and taker of the bribe are both accomplices; and if they still believed the evidence of the giver and his supporters, the conviction should not be interfered with in revision In my opinion, much depends upon the proper presentation of a case. It is, therefore, mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record. An accused is under no legal obligation to do so. He can keep quiet and take advantage of the flaw in the evidence brought by the prosecution against him, or in short of the weakness of the prosecution case. Apart from this it was of course the duty of the Magistrate as also of the Sessions Judge to have noticed the defect in the evidence being of accomplice character and looked for corroboration as regards material particulars The statute is clear and the responsibility of deciding the case according to the statute ought to rest on them. If the Magistrate and the Judges make it an invariable practice with them to look up the relevant sections of the statute every time a case comes up before them for decision, and not rely merely on their memory or on vague impressions, they would save themselves from much of the interference by this Court on the revisional side. Much depends upon the perspective from which a Court approaches the case and appreciates the evidence. If it is rightly formulated and the real points properly grasped by the Magistrate or the Judge, ordinarily, there is very little chance of the decision going wrong.

The District Magistrate in showing cause against the rule issued by this Court has forwarded the explanation of the trying Magistrate. A perusal thereof shows that the Magistrate regards

"the conviction as correct, though based principally on the evidence of those who had contributed towards the bribe-giving found."

His reasons are:

"Those concerned may be accomplices in a way but in cases under S. 161, I. P. C., there is no High Court ruling in existence instructing magistracy to distrust such a set of witnesses simply for their peculiar position as above."

Referring to the evidence of Bhangi Mahar (P. W. 36) he adds that

"Here fortunately we have also got a piece of independent evidence to strengthen the case for the prosecution."

This discloses complete misconception of what the requirements of the statute law or the case law on the point are. This necessarily suggests the inference that the Magistrate had "wholly overlooked the accomplice character" of the evidence he had to deal with. Moreover, if he relied upon the testimony of Bhangi (P. W. 36) as a piece of "independent evidence to strengthen the case for the prosecution." i e., as a corroborating piece of evidence, he was clearly wrong; and, had he based his decision solely on such evidence, I dare say I would surely have upset the same. Bhangi (P. W. 36) was initially an accomplice, whose degree of complicity was much greater than that of several other persons who helped the giving of the bribe. He was the principal intermediary through whom the bribing was negotiated and carried out, and, according to the prosecution story, had even received a portion of the bribe. He was, therefore, put on trial as a co-accused along with the applicant and remained so practically throughout the major period of the trial. The prosecution, however, was withdrawn as against him and he was examined as P. W. 36. So, if the withdrawal under such circumstances had any effect in the case, the least consequence it brought about was to relegate him from the position of a co-accused to his orginal position of an accomplice who had for all practical purposes earned complete immunity for his participation in the crime. His evidence under such circumstances could not be a piece of independent evidence as the Magistrate erroneously thinks.

To regard the testimony of one accomplice as corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice is to hold that there is corroboration where under law or fact there is none at all. In any case it is no corroboration by independent evidence as required by law. Unfortunately the Sessions Judge does not purport to discuss this matter anywhere in his judgment. It will not, therefore, be improper to hold that even the learned Sessions Judge also wholly overlooked the accomplice character and the necessity for corroboration in material particulars to make the accomplices worthy of credit and to justify the legality of the conviction based thereon.

Even though the decisions of the Courts below are faulty in this respect, the applicant is not correct in saying that the conviction is based solely on the evidence of an accomplice character. Having been invited by the learned pleader for the applicant to scrutinize the evidence for myself with a view to find out whether there are any exceptional circumstances which showed that the conclusions of the Magistrate and the Judge were perverse and unjustified by the evidence on record I took the opportunity to look into it carefully and I have come to the conclusion that the evidence of the accomplices finds ample independent corroborative support from some other facts held proved by the trying Magistrate in paras. 16 to 19 and by the Sessions Judge in paras. 12 and 13 of their respective judgments. These facts relate to the conduct of the applicant after the occurrence of the incident. His withholding of the report about the forest offence committed on 18th March 1927, for practically 11 days, the suggestion that overtures were made to bribe him and the substitution of gun (Ex. A) for Charru's gun (Ex. B) are facts which clearly fix the applicant with guilty knowledge and point to a deliberate attempt on his part to twist facts and conceal evidence of his own complicity. This conduct renders the story of the accomplices highly probable, and tends to connect the accused with the crime for committing which he has been convicted.

On a careful consideration of the evidence adduced and the probabilities of the case, I see no reason to find fault with the rest of the manner of appreciation which is to be found in the judgments of the two Courts below. I see no necessity to discuss this matter of drawing conclusions from evidence any further. I am not also prepared to hold that from the mere omission of the prosecution to examine or adduce evidence about whose non-production of the applicant complains, an inference the applicant's innocence would have, at all, been deducible. Being satisfied that there is independent corroboration, I sustain the conviction and decline to interfere.

Second Appeal No. 78-B of 1928, Decided on 11th March 1929, against the decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 15th October 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 233 of 1927.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 14 — Suit returned for presentation to proper Court—Order returning plaint appealed against—Subsequent to filing appeal but before its decision suit presented to proper Court—Time required for prosecution of appeal subsequent to presentation of plaint to proper Court cannot be excluded.

Where a plaint is returned for presentation to proper Court, and the order returning the plaint is appealed against, but before the decision of the appeal the plaint is presented to the proper Court, the period required for the prosecution of the appeal subsequent to the presentation of the plaint to the proper Court cannot be excluded under S. 14, as the plaintiff cannot be said to have prosecuted his appeal in good faith. [P 221 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, S. 14—Suit dismissed under O. 9, R. 2—Time covered by restoration proceedings cannot be excluded while computing limitation for suit under Civil P. C., O. 9, R. 4.

Where a suit is dismissed for want of prosecution under O. 9, R 2, the period covered by the restoration proceedings cannot be excluded under S. 14, Lim. Act, while computing limitation for a suit brought under O. 9, R. 4, for the cause of action in the restoration proceedings is not the same as that in the subsequent suit, nor can it be said that the restoration proceeding failed for want of jurisdiction. [P 221 C 1]

(c) Limitation Act, S. 14—Suit dismissed under O. 9, R. 2—If fresh suit under R. 4 is brought, S. 14, Limitation Act, would not be applicable—Civil P. C., Rr. 2 and 4.

Where a suit is dismissed for default of prosecution under O. 9, R. 2, and a fresh one is brought under R. 4 of the same order, S. 14, Lim. Act, is not applicable as the prior suit failed for plaintiff's negligence in prosecuting it and not because of defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature within the meaning of S. 14. 6 W. R. 184 (F.B.), Foll.

M. R. Bobde—for Appellant.

D. T. Mangalmurti—for Respondents.

Judgment.— The admitted facts of the case out of which this second appeal arises are these: On 9th August 1924 an order under O 21, R. 97, Civil P. C was passed against the plaintiff-appellant in certain execution proceedings He accordingly filed a suit under O 21, R. 103 ibid on 23rd October 1924 in the Court of the 1st Class Subordinate Judge No. 2, Akola, but that Court on 16th March 1925 returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court holding that it had no jurisdiction in the matter. The plaintiff then on 28th April 1925, presented the returned plaint in the Court of the 2nd Class Subordinate Judge No. 3, Akola, but the suit was dismissed by that Court on 13th August 1925 under O. 9, R 2, Civil P. C. for plaintiff's failure to pay process fees

Before the presentation of the plaint in the Court of the 2nd Class Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff had, on 11th March 1926, filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge against the order of the First Class Subordinate Judge returning the plaint, but the appeal was dismissed on merits on 29th July 1926. On 11th September 1925 the plaintiff started proceedings to have the dismissed suit restored to file, but they failed, the order of dismissal of the plaintiff's application for restoration being passed on 16th February 1926.

The plaintiff, therefore, filed a fresh suit in the Court of the 2nd Class Subordinate Judge No. 3, Akola, on 29th July 1926, the day on which his appeal against the order returning the plaint was rejected by the District Judge. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. Both the two lower Courts have held the suit to be barred by time and hence the plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal, and the only point urged in argument is that the suit should be held to be in time. I am, however, clearly of opinion that the Courts below have taken a correct view of the law of limitation applicable to the case and there is no force in this second appeal.

It would be convenient to reproduce S. 14 (1), Lim. Act, as the decision of the case depends upon a correct interpretation of its terms and their proper application to the facts of the present case:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceedings, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

This second suit is based on the same cause of action as the first one and it is admitted that both the suits fell within the purview of Art. 11A, Sch. 1, Lim. Act which prescribes a period of one year for the filing of such suit from the date of the order sought to be challenged. It is also admitted that this second suit was filed after a little less than 2 years from the date of the aforesaid order passed in execution proceedings, and the plaintiff, therefore, claims under the provisions of S. 14, Lim. Act, exclusion of the following periods so as to bring the suit within limitation .

| (1) from 23rd October 1924 to 16th March 1925. | The time the first plaint remained in the Court of Sub-Judge, 1st Class. |
| (2) From 11th March 1926 to 29th July 1926. | The time required for the disposal of his appeal in the Court of the District Judge against the order of the Sub-Judge, 1st Class, returning the plaint. |
| (3) From 11th September 1925 to 16th February 1926. | The period taken up by the proceedings for restoration of the suit. |

The lower appellate Court has allowed the plaintiff the period from 23rd October 1924 to 28th April 1925 and disallowed the rest, on the ground that after the plaint was again presented in the Court of the 2nd Class Subordinate Judge, the proceedings in connexion with the appeal before the District Judge, or those relating to restoration of the dismissed suit to file before the first Court, could not be considered to have been prosecuted bona fide and with due diligence and that they did not fail for want of jurisdiction in the Court which disposed of them.

It is contended here that the proceedings in appeal before the District Judge that continued on after the presentation of the plaint in Court of the 2nd Class Subordinate Judge until disposal of the appeal (the period between 28th April 1925 to 29th July 1926) must be held to be "civil proceeding" whithin the meaning of S. 14 (1), Lim. Act, and because the plaintiff bona fide prosecuted his appeal, thinking that the order of the return of the plaint which was appealed against was wrong all this time should not run against him. It is not possible to accede to this contention It is clear that when he filed the plaint in the proper Court on 28th April 1925, the plaintiff must be deemed to have accepted the decision of the 1st Class Subordinate Judge as correct, and thereafter he could not be said to have prosecuted his appeal before the District Judge in good faith as required by the section

It was further argued that the restoration proceedings must also be taken to fall in the category of "civil proceeding" of S. 14, Lim Act, or at any rate that they were a continuation of the original suit and, therefore, the time occupied in their prosecution should also be excluded It is impossible to accede to this contention as well. In the first place the restoration proceedings were not founded upon the same cause of action as the subsequent suit—there cause of action admittedly was the dismissal of the previous suit under O 9, R. 2, Civil P. C, while that for the second suit was the alleged wrong order in the execution proceedings passed under O. 21, R 97, Civil P. C In the next place it could not be said that because an alleged wrong order was passed by the Court the restoration proceedings failed for want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature within the meaning of S. 14, Lim. Act.

The learned advocate for the appellant has brought to my notice certain observations of Mr Rustomji which appear at p. 138 of his Law of Limitation, 4th Edition, under the heading "Other cause of a like nature"—section applied," but I fail to see their applicability to the facts of the present case. The learned author himself doubts the correctness of the decision in the case of Po Nyan v Muthu Karapan Chetty (1).

On the contrary under the heading "'Other cause of a like nature'—section applied," the same learned author states that failure of a suit, on the ground that it is not maintainable or that it discloses no cause of action or is premature, would not come within the purview of S. 14, Lim Act, because in each of such cases the suit fails not for want of jurisdiction, but because it is misconceived. Where a suit is dismissed for default of prosecution under O. 9, R 2, Civil P. C., and a fresh one is brought under R. 4 of the same order, S. 14, Lim Act, is not applicable as the prior suit failed for plaintiff's negligence in prosecuting it, and not because of defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature within the meaning of S. 14, ibid: vide Chunder Madhab Chakerbutty v. Ramcoomar (2) Even if the contention of the learned advocate for the appellant be accepted that the restoration proceedings were a continuation of the suit which was dismissed for default, the plaintiff is out of time according to the interpretation put upon the provisions of S 14, Lim. Act, by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case just cited and with which I agree. For the reasons given above I hold that the question of limitation arising in this case was rightly decided by the Courts below and the plaintiff's suit was barred by time. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Second Appeal No. 345-B of 1927, Decided on 5th November 1928, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 31st October 1927, in Civil Appeal No 44 of 1927

Evidence Act, S. 115—Minor at the time of sale of property by his guardian signing letter stating that necessity for sale existed — Purchaser's object in taking letter being to prevent minor from bringing suit to set aside sale—Minor in suit for possession of property, is not estopped from denying that necessity for sale existed.

Where at the time of sale of property by a guardian of a minor, the latter signed a letter which stated in detail that necessity for sale existed and where the object of taking the letter from the minor was not to assure the vendee that necessity existed but was to prevent the minor from bringing a suit to set aside the sale, the minor in a suit for possession of property is not estopped from denying

Judgment. — The plaintiff-respondent in this Court sued for possession of a field which his guardian during his minority has sold to the appellants. At the time of the sale the respondent then a minor signed a letter which stated in detail that necessity for the sale existed. It is urged before me that the respondent was estopped from denying the existence of legal necessity and benefit. It seems sufficient to say that the minor respondent is not shown to have caused or permitted the vendee to believe that necessity existed. The apparent object of taking the letter from the boy was not to assure the vendee that necessity existed but was to prevent the boy from bringing a suit to set aside the sale S. 115, Evidence Act, then has no application This ground therefore, fails. It is next urged that necessity did exist. This is a question of fact and I see no reason to disagree with the finding of the lower appellate Court. The fact that the field sold brought in little income is not material. Had it not been sold it would have remained in the possession of the plaintiff. The cash consideration is not shown to have been expended for the benefit of the plaintiff or to have remained intact until he came of age The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. Judgment.—The judgment in this appeal will also dispose of Criminal Appeals Nos. 53-B, 54-B, 55-B, 56-B, and 57-B of 1928. That on 21st February 1928, a dacoity was committed by a party of certain dacoits amongst whom were approver Banshya (P. W. 17), the confessing accused 5 Surya and the accused 7 Mahadya who has not appealed, is undisputable. The question, however, is whether the six appellants were also members of that gang of dacoits and whether any guilt has been legally brought home to them by any reliable evidence on record. This must depend mainly upon the evidence of identification Kaluram (P. W. 13) and Nandram (P. W. 14) are on the point of identification. Prosecution witness 13 said he identified accused Rupya 3, Tukia accused 4 and Lodya accused 2 at the time when they committed the dacoity. Prosecution witness 14's evidence is of no avail as he identifies only Banshya the approver and none else. Bhagirath's (P. W. 16) evidence, which is indirect, only shows that he struck one of the dacoits ; that dacoit can on the evidence of P. W. 1 be said to be the confessing accused Surya. So the evidence of P W. 14 and P. W. 16 does not advance the case against the appellants at all. However strong the corroboration which the evidence of P. W. 10 and P. W. 11 lends to the evidence of the approver Banshya may be, that is only as regards Mahadya accused 7 and Surya accused 5 and not about the present 6 appellants. The omission on the part of P. W. 13 to mention the dacoits by their names in the first information report (Ex. P. 6) and Ex. P. 7 has been rightly held to be a disqualifying circumstance for rejecting his evidence on the point of identification. Otherwise why should there have been seven days' delay in arresting these appellants? Thus there is no reliable evidence against the 6 appellants except that of the approver. But it is urged on behalf of the appellants that the very circumstance which induced the learned Sessions Judge to disbelieve the approver Banshya so far as Tankia accused was concerned, ought to have weighed with him also for discarding his testimony even a against Tankia's relations. It is amply proved in the case by the evidence on record that Tankia is related to the rest of the accused except Surya. I think there is much force in this contention. Banshya had a motive in bringing Tankia into trouble naturally, he took this opportunity of impleading him as one of his own associates. But, the story would, on the face of it be unlikely, unless he introduced into it element of plausibility. This he did by placing Tankia in a group of his own relations and trying to make out that the whole gang consisted of Tankia and his relations besides, Surya, Mahadya and himself. But this, on the face of it, made the combination highly improbable as it was not expected that Tankia and his relations would take their enemy in their own camp and thus betray all their plans and accomplishments Viewed in the light of this improbability, it was unsafe to base the conviction of the appellants on the evidence of Banshya without any independent corroboration in material particulars in respect of each of them.

In deciding a criminal case with reference to the evidence of an accomplice the Court must take into consideration the maxim that it is unsafe to convict a person upon the evidence of an accomplice unless he is corroborated in material particulars both as to the circumstances of the offence and the identity of the persons, whom he implicates : per Aston, J , in Emperor v. Hanmunt (1). The corroboration ought to consist of some circumstance that affects the identity of the person accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only of the truth of that history, without identifying the persons, that is no corroboration at all : Queen Empress v. Ram Sarup (2). When several persons are indicated and the evidence of the accomplice is confirmed as to some only and not as to others, the Court ought, as a general rule, to acquit those against whom there is no corroboration : cf. : Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (2) where the Allahabad High Court set aside the conviction based on the uncorroborated evidence of an approver The following observations at p 119 of 17 Nag. L. R. in Govinda v. Emperor (3) clearly show that this Court also does not disagree with the Allahabad High Court in regard to this indispensable condition of a corroborating piece of evidence :

"We are in agreement with the view that so long as there is no corroboration by independent evidence regarding a particular accused, the evidence may be termed uncorroborated evidence of accomplices."

I have underlined (italicized) the words 'regarding a particular accused' as of the greatest importance in such cases.

Kisan Raghuji v. Emperor (4), which Kotval, A J. C., decided following the latest English ruling of of Lord Reading, C. J., R. v. Baskerville (5), quotes the following observation :

"Evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. Corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime , it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime."

Judging the evidence on record by the test laid down above, I find that there is absolutely no corroborative evidence which connects or tends to connect the appellants with the crime. The Sessions Judge simply looked to corroboration of the fact that that the crime was committed, but failed to appreciate the necessity of finding out corroboration which connected or tended to connect each of the appellants with the crime. The evidence on record, therefore, falls short of the degree and nature of corroboration required under law for the conviction of the appellants. Moreover, the approver stands self-condemned in a major portion of his evidence as the lower Court's own conclusion as regards the innocence of Tankia shows. The foremost essential condition even according to Govinda v. Emperor (3), and other cases such as Sheroo v. Emperor (6) by a Bench of Kotval, A. J. C, and myself is that the approver's statement must be a trustworthy statement A mere reading of the deposition of Banshya (P. W. 17) clearly shows that he is a self condemned liar ; he is not at all worthy of credit. Under these circumstances I have no other alternative but to allow the appeals and acquit all the six appellants and set them at liberty.

Second Appeal No 152-B of 1927, Decided on 25th October 1928, against decree of First Addl. Dist Judge, Akola, D/- 28th February 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 204 of 1926.

(a) Pre-emption—Mere agreement to reconvey property creates no interest in property and does not by itself take away right of pre-emption.

A mere agreement to reconvey the property imports a personal contract and affects or creates no interest in property, nor does the agreement run with the land and it does not by itself defeat the right of pre-emption. 39 Mad. 462, Rel. on. [P 224 C 2]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code, S. 205—Right of pre-emption is not lost on re-sale of property either to vendor or to stranger.

A person's right of pre-emption being presumably a right of substitution cannot be taken away by any transaction reconveying the property either to the vendor or to the stranger whether the reconveyance takes place before suit or after suit or decree. 2 *N. M. R. Bobde—for Respondent.

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff's case was decreed against the defendant in the lower appellate Court, though the same was dismissed in the first Court. Hence this second appeal by the defendant. The finding of the lower appellate Court to the effect that the defendant was not a co-occupant at the date of his purchase must stand in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. So the plaintiff's suit could not be thrown out on that ground alone The next point was whether the circumstance that the contract of sale to defendant was accompanied by a covenant for re-sale to the vendor makes the sale a mortgage The agreement, dated 7th July 1921, Ex. D-3. is absolute in its terms, so is the sale-deed. I, therefore, think that a mere agreement to reconvey the property imports a personal contract and affects or creates no interest in property, nor does the agreement or covenant run with the land: Avula Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghavulu (1). The question, however, still remains what is the effect of a reconveyance before the suit for pre emption is filed. I think the case in Ganpatsa v. Joomabai (2) and Raiyai v. Irbhan (3) affirm the proposition that the plaintiff's right of pre-emption being presumably a right of substitution, cannot be taken away by any transaction reconveying the property either to the vendor or to the stranger, whether the reconveyance takes place before suit or after suit or decree. I thing the provisions of S. 205, Berar Land Revenue Code do not lay down that the right of pre-emption will be lost on resale of the property to the vendor himself A right of suit once acquired will not ordinarily be lost except by lapse of limitation or by abandonment express or implied, much less could the vendor and the vendee by a private treaty between themselves prejudice the pre-emptor's right by a transaction to which the pre-emptor is not a party.

No attempt is made before me to contest the decree on the ground of the price for pre-emption.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Second Appeal No. 628 of 1927, Decided on 29th September 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 29th August 1927.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 70—Sir land mortgaged to one mortgagee and then to another—Second mortgagee foreclosing it and mortgagor surrendering his occupancy rights which he retained under law—Second mortgagee stands as mortgagor to first mortgagee and as landlord to original mortgagor and so when occupancy rights are surrendered to him, it is ordinary surrender by tenant during continuance of first mortgage and so accretion to mortgage—Landlord and Tenant.

A subsequent mortgagee who has foreclosed, steps into the shoes of the mortgagor and stands in the same relation to the prior mortgagees as the original mortgagor.

Where sir land was mortgaged first to one mortgagee and then to another and where second mortgagee foreclosed the land, he is in the position of a mortgagor to the first mortgagee and is also in the position of a landlord to the original mortgagee inasmuch as the original mortgagor still retains under the law the right of an occupancy tenant in the land and so where the original mortgagor surrendered his occupancy rights in the land to the second mortgagee, it is an ordinary surrender by a tenant during the continuance of the mortgage of the first mortgagee and therefore an accretion to the mortgage, so if the first mortgagee obtains a final decree for foreclosure and sues for possession of the field, he is entitled to a decree. 14 *N. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a field in mouza Dhondwada in the Betul District. A decree for possession was granted in the trial Court, but on appeal by the second defendant the District Judge set aside the decree and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have, therefore, preferred a second appeal. The field in suit No. 131 in mouza Dhondwada, is now recorded as an occupancy field, but it was originally part of the sir land. The village belonged to Baliram and Krishnaji. They mortgaged it to the plaintiffs' predecessor in 1915 and in 1917 they again mortgaged it to Manakchand, father of defendant 1 Kasturchand. In 1923 the plaintiffs sued upon their mortgage, and impleaded Kasturchand as a puisne mortgagee. In the same year, Kasturchand also sued upon his mortgage, but did not make the plaintiffs parties to the suit. On 30th November 1923 the plaintiffs obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure, and on 17th June 1924 they applied for a final decree. In the meantime, however, Kasturchand had obtained a final decree on 24th June and on 21st July 1924 Baliram and Krishnaji surrendered their occupancy rights in the sir land to Kasturchand in consideration of Rs 950 in cash and an old debt of Rs 750. On 25th July Kasturchand applied for time to pay off the plaintiff's decree and on 6th August the Court granted him time up to 26th August On 9th August Kasturchand granted a lease of the field to defendant 2 Subhkaran Kasturchand, however, failed to pay the amount of the plaintiffs' decree, and on 30th August the decree in favour of the plaintiffs was made absolute The plaintiffs filed their suit for possession of the field on 6th May 1925 claiming that the surrender of the fields by Baliram and Krishnaji during the pendency of the proceedings for making their decree absolute was an accretion to the mortgaged property, of which they were the prior mortgagees, and that, therefore, it passed to them along with the village under their foreclosure decree.

After defendant 2 Subhkaran had been impleaded, the plaintiffs contended that the lease of the field by Kasturchand in favour of Subhkaran was nominal and without consideration and was executed only to save the land from falling into their hands. The trial Court held that the field surrendered was an accretion to the mortgaged property and the plaintiffs were entitled to possession and further that the lease was nominal, bogus and fraudulent. The finding as regards the lease was upheld by the lower appellate Court, but it was held that the field in suit was not an accretion to the mortgaged property and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to it by virtue of their decree, or, if they were entitled they could only obtain possession on payment of the cost of the acquisition. The plaintiffs' claim was, therefore, dismissed.

The question about the field in suit being an accretion to the mortgaged property was considered somewhat briefly by the trial Court in para. 10 of the judgment on a finding on issue 4, but I am of opinion that the view taken by the Court is correct. The lower appellate Court has considered the matter at considerable length in paras. 2 and 3 of the judgment, but I am not impressed by the Judge's reasoning. The reasoning in para. 2 seems to me to be somewhat obscure and the last part of para. 3 seems to me to be totally wrong. The lower appellate Court too has, I think, misunderstood the ruling in Shri Ganesh v. Pandurang (1), and I would quote a passage out of that ruling which, I think, governs the present case:

"The learned pleader for the appellant argues that there was no accession, since at the date of the mortgage, and even at the date of the institution of the suit for foreclosure, the fields were occupancy fields, and at the date of the decree they were occupancy fields, if the lease of 1903 be upheld, so that the mortgagee in spite of the lease has got exactly what was mortgaged to him. This is not in my view the correct aspect in which the question should be regarded. If it had not been for the lease the mortgagee would undoubtedly by his decree have had the right to take the fields as khudkasht fields over which he as malguzar had the right of cultivation, and the sole question is whether the lease adversely affected the rights of the new malguzar. The lease, if upheld, would have the effect of his getting less by the decree than he otherwise would have got."

It is true that in the present case the field in suit was not an occupancy field at the date of their mortgage, but it became an occupancy field when Kasturchand foreclosed and claimed a final decree. Kasturchand was the malguzar of the village and the mortgagors Baliram and Krishnaji then became occupancy tenants of what was formerly sir land. They could then, as any other occupancy tenant, make a surrender in favour of the malguzar and that they actually did do on 21st July for a consideration of Rs. 950 in cash and an old debt of Rs. 750, as already stated. I cannot agree with the lower appellate Court in holding that where the cultivating right (that is, the occupancy right in what was formerly sir land) becomes a distinct entity as a creature of the foreclosure its acquisition by a surrender in favour of a puisne mortgagee who becomes a proprietor in the interval should be treated on a different footing. Nor am I pressed by the argument that S. 70, T. P. Act, does not apply as between a prior and subsequent mortgagees. A subsequent mortgagee who has foreclosed steps into the shoes of the mortgagor and stands in the same relation to the prior mortgagee as the original mortgagor did. The subsequent mortgagee Kasturchand then was in the position of the mortgagor as regards the plaintiffs. He was also in the position of a landlord with regard to his mortgagors after he foreclosed When, then, his tenants, that is, the original mortgagors, surrendered their occupancy holding to him, it must be taken as an ordinary surrender by a tenant during the continuance of the mortgage, and as such is, I think, clearly an accretion to the mortgage under S. 70, T. P. Act.

For the respondents reliance was placed upon the rulings in Robert William Anderson v. Bank of Upper India Ltd. (2) and Sivananjiah v. Sithay Goudar (3) but I think those rulings can be distinguished. In Robert William Anderson v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd. (2) the case referred to a purchase of a shop with the stock and goodwill and there is no analogy, strictly speaking, between such a purchase and a surrender or acquisition of immovable property. In the case in Sivananjiah v. Sithay Goudar (3), the mortgagor's share was sold in auction and, therefore, his interest had ceased to exist and the acquisition was made after his interest had ceased to exist. In the present case the property had been foreclosed and mortgagor had lost his proprietary rights in the sir land, but he still retained under the law the right of an occupancy tenant in the field in suit. That was a valid and subsisting right and he surrendered that right to Kasturchand. That surrender was an acquisition made by Kasturchand, whilst the plaintiffs' mortgage was still in existence and, therefore, the property acquired became an accretion to the mortgaged property. I am of opinion that the suit was rightly decided by the trial Court and that the decree of the lower appellate Court is wrong. The decree of the lower appellate Court, therefore, is set aside, and instead the original decree of the trial Court granting the plaintiff's possession of the field in suit is restored All costs of the appeal in both Courts and in the original suit will be borne by the defendants-respondents.

First Appeal No. 16-B of 1928, Decided on 24th October 1928, against order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 19th November 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 1—Judgment-debtor depositing decretal amount into Court—He preventing that sum reaching decree-holder—Judgment-debtor is liable for interest until money is available to decree-holder.

Even though a deposit is made by the judgment-debtor into Court of the decretal amount if the judgment-debtor prevents that sum reaching the decree-holder, he is really applying for stay of or at any rate a partial stay of the execution and, therefore, he should be held liable for interest until the money is available to decree-holder : 42 Mad 576 ; 40 All. 125, Dist. [P 228 C 1]

C. B. Parakh—for Appellants.

S. R. Pandit—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is an appeal made by Mrs. Brown and her children against the order of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in execution of the decree passed in their favour against the G. I. P. Ry. Co. respondent. The only point at issue is whether the appellants should be allowed interest after the date the decretal amount was deposited by the respondent in Court. The facts of the case are as follows : The appellants sued the respondent for damages owing to the death of Mr. Brown in a railway accident and they obtained a decree for Rs. 60,000 and costs in the trial Court on 13th July 1925. The present respondent appealed to this Court and on 12th October, Kotwal, A. J. C., passed an order that unless the decree-holders give security the amount deposited in Court would not be paid to them. On 15th July 1926, the present appellants applied for execution. On 17th September 1926 security was given by Jahangir Sorabji on their behalf in the shape of land, two bungalows at Igatpuri and a fixed deposit of Rs. 30,000 but this security was not accepted by the Additional District Judge. On 21st September the Railway Company deposited a cheque for Rs. 64,255 being the full decretal amount in Court. On 27th September the decree-holder, that is the present appellants, suggested that the money should be deposited in a Bank at fixed deposit and should not be withdrawn. On 4th October the Additional District Judge sent the amount to the Co-operative Central Bank, Amraoti, as a fixed deposit for six months. On 9th and 10th February 1927, the appeal was heard in this Court and on 6th July 1927, a modified decree was passed for Rs. 35,866 in favour of the present appellants with Rs. 261 as costs and interest at 6 per cent per annum from 15th May 1923, till the date of payment. On 22nd September 1927, the decree-holders, i. e., the present appellants applied for the withdrawal claiming Rs. 3,58,66 plus Rs. 261 costs and Rs. 9,369-15-9 interest up to the date of application. The judgment-debtor, that is, the present respondent, denied that they were liable for interest from 21st September 1926, that is, the date on which they made the deposit in Court.

The lower Court in execution of the decree held in favour of the judgment-debtor respondent that interest should not be allowed after the date of the deposit in Court. The lower Court has held that the decree-holders were entirely to blame for the delay in furnishing security and again that they could have made a fixed deposit for one year and got interest in that way instead of making the deposit for six months only. I am not, however, pressed by that reasoning. In the first place, as already stated, the decree-holders did find security but that security was not accepted by the Court. Then it was not, I think in the power of the decree-holders to make a fixed deposit for one year or to renew the deposit already made. Surely the money was not in their power, but was under the orders of the Court, and the Court only could make a deposit. The most the decree-holders could do was to apply to the Court for the renewal of the deposit or to make a fixed deposit for one year. It may be noted that the appeal was kept pending for a very long time in this Court before judgment was delivered. It having been heard in February it was reasonable to suppose that judgment would be delivered in a month or so, but as a matter of fact it was not delivered until July, i. e., after an interval of five months. The fixed deposit for six months would not expire until 4th April 1927, and it would be reasonable to imagine that the appellate judgment would be delivered before the date of the deposit expired. I do not think then that the decree-holders were in any way to blame for not applying for the renewal of the deposit.

The lower Court has followed the ruling in Ramaiaya Shanbogue v. Venkataramanayya (1) and Amtul Habib v Mahammed Yusuf (2) and has held that interest cannot run once the deposit has been made in Court I would point out that a deposit by the judgment-debtor in Court would mean a deposit of the money for payment to the decree-holder but when on an application of the judgment-debtor the money, although deposited in Court is not available to the decree-holders and it is to be kept in suspense under the orders of the Court, I do not see why interest should not run. It is true that the lower Court tried to evade the difficulty by sending the money to the Bank as a fixed deposit and allowing interest on that deposit to the decree-holders, but that, I think, was an evasion and was not really an answer to the question. I am of opinion that even though a deposit is made by the judgment-debtor into Court of the decretal amount, if the judgment-debtor prevents that sum reaching the decree-holder, he is really applying for stay or at any rate a partial stay of the execution and, therefore, he should be held liable for interest until the money is available to the decree-holders. Then I think, it was not for the decree-holders to apply to the Court to place the money in fixed deposit in a Bank to secure interest but it was rather for the judgment-debtor, who made the deposit to make such an application so that the money might not lie idle. Again it may be noted that the original decree was suspended by the appellate Court, and in the appellate decree it is clearly ordered that interest shall run from 15th May 1923, till the date of payment. Now the date of payment must, I think, mean payment to the decree-holder and not merely deposit in Court on a condition that the money would not be made over to the decree-holder that is, payment must mean effective payment.

Again it was urged that the decree-holders made an undue delay in making their application to withdraw the amount of the decree but as already noted, the appellate judgment was not delivered until 6th July 1927 and probably did not reach the lower Court for a week or later. The decree-holders were not living in Amraoti and it must have taken some time for them to be aware of the result and they actually applied within a little over two months. I do not think this can be considered an undue delay. I am of opinion that the order of the lower Court is incorrect and that the decree-holders, the present appellants, should be allowed interest as directed in the appellate judgment till the date of payment, that is, till the date they applied for the withdrawal of the decretal amount. The order of the lower Court is, therefore, set aside and instead the appellants are allowed the further sum of Rs. 2,152 claimed by them as interest, that is, the excess amount of interest claimed by them over the amount allowed by the lower Court. Costs of this appeal will be borne by the respondent. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 50.

Where the right to receive lease money was attached and sold before the period for which the lease money was payable had expired and a decree was passed in a suit for the recovery of the lease money, the decision of the Court is so obviously erroneous and directly opposed

Order.—Under the terms of a lease deed the consideration was payable each year in the month of Baisakh. In execution of a decree the non-applicants obtained a prohibitory order under O. 21, R. 43, Civil P. C., in respect of the right of the lessor to receive lease money for the Fasli year 1333 about eight months before this money was payable. This right was brought to sale and was sold before the payment became due. The suit out of which this application arises was for recovery of the lease money for the Fasli year 1333 and the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the lessee In revision it is first urged that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try this suit. It is sufficient to say that according to the plaint the lease money could be attached and sold After sale the right to receive lease money could not be immovable property. The plaint, therefore, virtually alleged that a debt of a small cause nature existed and the suit was properly tried in the Small Cause Court.

It is next urged that the right to receive lease money at a future date could not be attached or sold. This contention appears to me valid. The lessor and lessee of a moveable property possess as against each other rights detailed in S. 108, T P. Act. The right of the lessee to pay at the time of the attachment was contingent : for the money was not payable if the lessee subsequently lost possession in certain ways. The learned Judge has stated that nearly half the year has passed and the lessee was in possession : but he might not have continued in possession during the remainder of the year. I find no authority for the proposition that the right to receive lease money can be attached before the period for which the lease money is payable has expired. In Lachhmi Narayan v. Dharamchand (1) Hallifax, A. J. C., speaks of a right to recover a share of profits which have already been collected by the lambardar. He refers to Sheogobind Singh v. Gouri Prasad (2), where it was held that an arrear of rent is moveable property. I hold then that the right which is attached was not existing debt.

After holding that the decision of the Small Cause Court was erroneous I have to decide whether it is proper for this Court to interfere : for interference is not proper in every case where an error of law has led to an incorrect decision It appears to me that the error of the Small Cause Court is an obvious one and the decision is directly opposed to settled principles. In my opinion it is necessary to interfere in this case. I therefore set aside the decree of the Small Cause Court and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs. Costs in the lower Court will be borne by the plaintiffs. Costs in this Court will be borne by the plaintiffs-non-applicants. Counsel's fee Rs. 40.

Second Appeal No. 665 of 1927, Decided on 11th July 1929 against decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Nagpur, D/- 24th August 1927 in Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1927.

 * (a) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 1—Decree for plaintiff against three defendants—Both plaintiff and defendants preferring second appeals — Separate judgments delivered—Separate decrees drawn—Result being dismissal of suit—Plaintiff filing one second appeal against both decrees—Two separate second appeals held not necessary.

The first Court passed a decree in favour of plaintiff A against defendants B, C and D. Plaintiff A filed an appeal therefrom and so the defendants B, C and D. The lower appellate Court delivered separate judgments in the two appeals and drew up two separate decrees, the net result being that the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff A came up to the High Court in second appeal desiring that both the decrees of the lower appellate Court should be set aside. The plaintiff filed only a single second appeal.

Held: that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to file two separate second appeals. (Cases Referred.) [P 231 C 2]

R. N. Padhey—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde—for Respondents.

Order of Reference.

Findlay, J. C—An interesting point of law arises in the present case, which in my opinion, should be referred to a Full Bench In the present suit (No 202 of 1926, in the Court of the Additional First Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Nagpur), the plaintiff Sheoram was granted a declaratory decree against four defendants to the effect that he was the owner of a part of an absolute occupancy field. Both the plaintiff and three of the defendants appealed. The Judge of the lower appellate Court delivered a full judgment in the defendants' appeal. In the plaintiff's appeal a formal separate judgment was also recorded and two separate decrees were drawn up. The defendants' appeal succeeded and the suit was dismissed, while the plaintiff's appeal was also dismissed.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court on second appeal desiring that both the decrees of the lower appellate Court should be set aside A preliminary objection has been taken by the counsel for the respondents to the effect that, under O. 41, R 1, Civil P. C, a separate appeal should have been filed against the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court. Reference has also been made to the fact that the Civil Procedure Code makes no provision for the consolidation of appeals and that, even if this be permissible, under the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151, Civil P. C, no consolidation, as a matter of fact, took place in the lower appellate Court, or was even asked for. Reliance has also been placed on two old decisions of the Allahabad High Court Zaharia v. Debia (1), and Dakhni Din v. Syed Ali Asghar (2), in which a view favourable to the respondents' contention was taken. Much water has, however, flown underneath the bridge since those two decisions were given. The earlier Allahabad decision was distinguished by the same Court in the Full Bench judgment contained in Ghansham Singh v Bhola Singh (3), which decision also overruled the judgment in Dakhni Din v. Syed Ali Asghar (2), quoted above.

I do not desire at present to go into the matter at any length, but it certainly seems to me, as at present advised, that the latter Full Bench decision is the more correct exposition of the law. In a very old decision of Phear, J., in Raghubans Sahai v Mt Asloo (4), the learned Judge remarks:

"It is, however, obvious that when two parties to a suit appeal so that the one appeal is but the cross-appeal of the other, there ought to be only one final decree made between two parties."

If the lower appellate Court in the present case had followed this course and made a joint decree dismissing the one appeal and allowing the other, the difficulty I am now confronted with would not have arisen. It is perfectly possible, of course, to argue so far correctly in terms that, under the provisions of O 41, R 1, two separate appeals should have been filed in the present case, but when one gets down to essentials, it seems to me that these two decrees should, for the purposes of second appeal in this Court, be regarded as one. The practice of the lower appellate Court drawing up separate decrees, as it has done in the present instance, seems to me an undesirable and possibly a wrong one. Apart from the question of preliminary and final decrees in suits, the intention of the Civil Procedure Code obviously is that there should only be one decree in any given suit and, therefore, in my opinion, when an appellate Court has to deal with two appeals arising out of the same suit, it is highly desirable that it should draw up, as its single decree, a comprehensive document which would give its adjudication on the whole matter of the litigation involved

I may add for the information of my brothers that the Lahore High Court in a recent Full Bench decision, Mt.

Lachhmi v. Mt. Bhulli (5), took a view similar to the decision in Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (3), quoted above but it is only fair to add that one Judge (Dalip Singh) has written a dissenting judgment which also merits consideration.

I therefore refer the following question to a Full Bench:

"The first Court passes a decree in favour of plaintiff A against defendants B, C and D. Plaintiff A files an appeal therefrom and so do defendants B, C and D. The lower appellate Court delivers separate judgments in the two appeals and draws up two separate decrees, the net result being that the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff A comes up to this Court in second appeal desiring that both the decrees of the lower appellate Court should be set aside. The plaintiff files only a single second appeal in this Court. Can this Court entertain the said second appeal, or is it necessary for the plaintiff to file two separate second appeals?"

Opinion

Macnair, Offg. J. C—The question referred for decision by a Full Bench is as follows:

"The first Court passes a decree in favour of plaintiff A against defendants B, C and D. Plaintiff A files an appeal therefrom and so do defendants B, C and D. The lower appellate Court delivers separate judgments in the two appeals and draws up two separate decrees, the net result being that the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff A comes up to this Court in second appeal desiring that both the decrees of the lower appellate Court should be set aside. The plaintiff files only a single second appeal in this Court. Can this Court entertain the said second appeal, or is it necessary for the plaintiff to file two separate second appeals."

When the lower appellate Court delivers a judgment dismissing an appeal and passes a decree, the decree from which the appeal is preferred is confirmed. This is clear from the language of O 41, R. 32, Sch 1, to the Civil Procedure Code. I may, however, refer to the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6). A decree had been passed by the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, an appeal to the High Court was dismissed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed. The defendant obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council but did not prosecute the appeal which was dismissed for want of prosecution. The chief matter of argument before the Board was a contention that the decree of the High Court had been constructively turned into a decree of His Majesty in Council by virtue of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution, and their Lordships remarked:

"The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from."

They subsequently remarked:

"The only decree for sale that exists is the decree, dated 8th April 1893, and that is a decree of the High Court of Allahabad."

It is clear, then, that, in the opinion of their Lordships, when an appellate Court deals judicially with the matter of the suit, the decree of that Court based on a judgment is the only decree capable of execution An order dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution is not an order confirming the decision, not because it does not expressly state that the decree of the lower Court is confirmed, but because it does not deal judicially with the matter of the suit.

In the case I am considering the decree of the lower appellate Court, which dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff, merely states:

"It is ordered that the appeal be and it is hereby dismissed with costs."

But this decree read by itself is, none the less, a decree confirming the decree of the lower Court and capable of execution to the same extent as if it had contained the provisions of a decree of the lower Court.

The other decree passed by the lower appellate Court set aside the decree of the first Court and stated that the suit was dismissed It is clear that the lower appellate Court should not, on the same day, have passed two inconsistent decrees but the defect in the procedure was one of form; the intention of the Court was clear "The formal expression of an adjudication" by the lower appellate Court was, in form, two contradictory decrees, but was in substance and intention a single consistent decree, substituted in place of the decree of the first Court. In these circumstances, the plaintiff was, in my opinion, entirely justified in treating the two decrees of the lower appellate Court as a single decree dismissing his appeal, setting aside the decree of the first Court and dismissing the suit. The filing of a single second appeal was, therefore, proper. It would have been difficult to file two separate second appeals against the conflicting decrees of the lower appellate Court in a suitable form.

With his memorandum of appeal the appellant filed copies of both judgments and both decrees. The memorandum stated he was appealing from two decrees. It is unnecessary to consider what the result would have been had the appellant attacked one of the decrees (which must, in my opinion, be considered in substance a part of the real decree), and ignored the other It might then have been necessary to consider whether the decisions in the Allahabad Full Bench case Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (3), and in the Lahore Full Bench case Mt. Lachhmi v. Mt. Bhulli (5), were correct. My answer to the question referred to the Bench is, therefore, that this Court can entertain the second appeal.

Judgment—The share of Dhannoo in the village Daryapur and malik makbuza fields recorded in his name were attached by the decree-holders, who got a decree for Rs. 12,294-12-0 against Dhannoo in Suit No. 38 of 1925 on 18th February 1926. The respondent had filed an objection in the Court of Sub-Judge, First Class, Khandwa, and it was allowed on 21st August 1928, and the property attached was released, on the ground that "the holders of the village and the fields in question were only trustees and had no disposing power over the corpus of the estate exercisable for their own benefit."

The decree-holders have filed this appeal against the order dated 21st August 1928.

The earliest document about the village Daryapur which has been filed in this case is a copy of the order (Ex. D-1) passed by Captain Forsythe on 9th November 1866, granting proprietary right to Mohan Gujar. The order begins with these words :

"It appears from the records that this mouzah was in A. D. 1797 khalsa. In A. D. 1846 it was given by H. H. Scindeah to Mohan Gujar in jagir on the tenure of affording drinking water to all travellers."

This shows that the village was given as a jagir for service. In the muafi register for the year 1868 (Ex. D-3) the following words appear :

"stated to be a grant from Scindeah's Government for charitable purposes."

This village was released in perpetuity as a muafi in pursuance of the treaty, which took place in 1860 between British Government and the Indore State. In the muafi register of 1899 in Col. 12 it was recorded that the village Daryapur was a grant for watering cattle of the village said to have been made on a date now unascertainable. All these documents clearly indicate that the village Daryapur was granted by the Scindeah Government as a service grant and the British Government on account of the treaty of 1860 confirmed the grant on the same condition. As pointed out by Schwabe, C. J. in Anjaneyalu v. Venu-Gopal Rice Mill, Ltd. (1) :

"the sale of such property is opposed to the nature of the interest affected and is also contrary to public policy."

Dhannoo cannot render the service attached to the grant, unless he enjoys the revenue of the property which was given to him. The village, therefore, cannot be attached and sold in execution of the decree obtained by the appellants against respondent. The malik makbuza fields were also granted for the same purpose. This is clear from Ex. 5 jamabandi of Daryapur for the year 1926/27 and Ex. O. 5 the jamabandi for the year 1890/91. The fields also are not liable to attachment and sale.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. We allow Rs. 50 as pleader's fee in this case.

Absolute rule of law regarding the evidence of accomplices that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is subject to a rule of guidance in illustration (b) to S. 114 and which says that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. (b) Criminal P. C., S. 288—Evidence in committing Court brought on record under S. 288 on day of examination—No notice given to prosecution or defence—Course irregular and illegal.

At the trial, on the date of the examination of the witness, the evidence of the witness recorded under Ch. 18, Criminal P. C., was brought on record and admitted in evidence under S. 288. The Court did not inform the accused or the prosecution that he was going to treat as evidence under S. 288 the evidence of the witness.

Judgment.—The appellant Mohammad Musa, who is 16 years of age, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Saugor, under S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of Mohammad Ishaq, aged 25 years, which took place on the night of 17th March 1928, and has been sentenced to death.

The corpse of Mohammad Ishaq who was Pesh-Imam of Kasai Mandi Mosque and who was present at the taravi prayer on the night of 17th March, was seen lying near the railway line by many persons on the morning of 18th March, and one of them P. W. 6 Hussaini went to the Police Station House, and made a report, which is Ex. P. 1. After inquest, the corpse was sent to the mortuary and Assistant Medical Officer Deo Rao held the post-mortem examination. He found a number of injuries, which have been mentioned in para. 9 of the Sessions Judge's judgment and expressed the opinion that death was due to fracture of the skull, that the injuries found on the body could have been caused by the knife Art. A, that the deceased was not of a weak constitution and was much older than Musa, that it was improbable that accused Musa would have singly inflicted the wounds on the deceased and that blood must have passed profusely from the body. It is thus clear that Ishaq was murdered by some person or persons, between 9 p. m. and 6 a. m.

The exact time when Mohammad Ishaq was murdered is very important in this case, but the evidence on this point is far from satisfactory. According to P. W 1 Siddiq, Ishaq was murdered before 11 p. m., and he definitely stated that he reached home, after the murder, just as the 11 p. m. train went out. Ismail, P. W. 3, who was staying in the mosque that night stated that after the Bina Katni train had passed at about 11-30 p. m., Siddiq alone came to the mosque for the third time, inquired from Ishaq if he was going to wake up people for saheri, that after this Ishaq went to sleep again, and that about 2 a. m., on being called by some one, Ishaq went out. If Ismail is to be believed on this point, Ishaq was alright and alive at the time, when Saddiq says he was murdered. This is the first important particular, about which there is not only no corroboration, but a direct contradiction. Both the witnesses are definite about the time and their statements are irreconcilable. It is, therefore, not possible to find out.

the exact time, when Ishaq was murdered.

The next important point which is established will be of great help in deciding this case, is the question of motive, the feeling or reason which actuated the appellant to commit this brutal murder. Ths learned Sessions Judge in paras 2 and 3 of his judgment, has stated the prosecution case, regarding motive, in these words :

"The accused Musa and he (Ishaq) had been friends for some time and addicted to sodomy. The accused, however, a few months before the murder became friendly with Mohammad Siddiq P. W. 1, who is about 14 years of age and between them also sodomy took place. Ishaq, aggrieved by the cessation of Musa's friendship, sent him numerous letters expressing his sorrow and hope for a resumption of their former relations . . . . . Musa who had lost interest in Ishaq was irritated by these letters and by the taunt of "Ishaq ka gandu" and eventually decided to kill him."

The evidence on this point has been discussed in paras. 22 to 28 of the lower Court's judgment, and, the conclusion reached has been stated as follows .

"From the tone of the letters and the circumstances in which they were written, it is undisputably clear that both had been on terms of an unnatural intimacy and that Musa had refused to continue this connexion with Ishaq."

Regarding the alleged sodomy between Musa and Siddiq, the learned Sessions Judge expressed his opinion in para. 29 in the following words :

"The friendship between Musa and Siddiq was extraordinary and could only be explained by the fact that they also practised sodomy . . . . . although I consider it must have taken place, I cannot hold that it has been proved. At any rate, there can be no doubt of the existence of a strong friendship between these two."

In arriving at the conclusions mentioned above, the learned Sessions Judge has mainly relied on the following facts :

1. Taunt "Ishaq ka gandu" uttered by Wali Mohd. ; 2. Letters P-21 to 51 written by Ishaq, and P. 52 to 62 in Musa's handwriting, and, 3. Siddiq's statement.

(The learned Judges discussed the evidence and proceeded.) We do not find any reliable material on record from which we could infer that Ishaq and Musa were addicted to sodomy, and, find it difficult to believe that a passive agent would resent the overtures of the active agent, to such an extent, that he will try to get rid of him by murdering him.

The evidence of Siddiq, P. W. 1, the approver who is 14 years of age, has to be considered next He says that he was present at the murder and saw Musa killing Ishaq. He is a competent witness against Musa, and a conviction will not be illegal if it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of Siddiq, according to S. 133, Evidence Act, but this absolute rule of law, as regards the evidence of accomplices, is subject to a rule of guidance which we should also regard and it is contained in illustration (b) to S 114 and runs as follows .

"That an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars."

We will first examine the evidence of Siddiq to find out if he is a reliable witness and later on, see if he is corroborated in material particulars

* * * *

It seems to us that Musa had gone late to the Mosque for the taravi prayers, and after the prayers Musa and Ishaq had gone towards the bridge, and Siddiq went away towards his house, and Ishaq went back to the mosque This is the story which Siddiq had given out first and is corroborated by P. W. 3, Ismail, who was in the mosque that night. Ismail stated before the Sessions Judge that he saw Musa at lamplight, that night, but not again that night, that Ishaq went out to take his food after taravi prayers and returned to the mosque at 10-30 p. m. that Siddiq had come twice to the mosque during the absence of Ishaq and had enquired about him, that Siddiq came again at 11-30 p. m., and asked Ishaq if he was going out to wake up people for sehri, that Ishaq went to sleep after that, and that at about 2 a. m. he heard some one shout for Ishaq and he went out. This witness when reminded of his statement made before the committing Magistrate, admitted that he had stated that he had seen Musa coming at midnight, and explained later on in cross-examination that as Siddiq had told him that the man who had taken out Ishaq was Musa and, therefore, he had mentioned Musa's name. To the questions put by Court, this witness replied that it was a dark night, and the man who came for Ishaq first called from outside the gate and then came inside and entered the hujra and was 40 paces from him. This witness according to his own statement was under police surveillance for a week after the occurrence and was staying in the Police Chauki. He has made different statements about the person who came to call Ishaq and finally stated that he did not recognize the man who had come to the mosque to call Ishaq at 2 a. m. If his statement about the departure of Ishaq from the mosque at about 2 a. m. is correct, in that case, the statement of Siddiq cannot be true, and if Siddiq's statement is true, the statement of Ismail must be false. The witness has made different statements about the persons who had come to call Ishaq and, therefore, reliance cannot be placed on his statement.

The learned Sessions Judge has made the following endorsement on the back of Ex. P-2, Ismail's statement, made before the committing Magistrate :

" Relevant portions read in Court and admitted under S. 288, Criminal P. C "

Ismail was examined on 9th July 1928, in the Sessions Court and the order-sheet of that date does not contain any entry about treating as evidence in the case under S 288, Criminal P C , the evidence of Ismail recorded under Chap. 18. There is no doubt that the evidence of Ismail as contained in Ex P-72 was brought on the Sessions record on 9th July 1928, but this ought to have been done, with full notice to the conductors of the prosecution and defence. The following additional ground was filed in this Court :

" 1. That the lower Court was wrong in transferring the statement of P. W. 2, Ismail made to the committing Magistrate after close of the case under S. 288, Criminal P C , without intimating even his intention to the accused so as to enable him to cross-examine the witness thereon, and this illegality has materially prejudiced your appellant (S. 32). "

There is nothing on record to show that the Court informed the accused, that he was going to treat as evidence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., the evidence of Ismail. The course adopted is contrary to practice and inconsistent with all rules regulating the admissibility of evidence The endorsement mentioned that

We find it impossible, to find out either from the deposition of P. W. 3, Ismail recorded on 9th July 1928, or from Ex. P-72 the relevant portions which were read out in Court, because the relevant portions have neither been mentioned nor marked. Under S. 288, Criminal P. C., the whole of the previous statement is to be treated as evidence and not only portions of it, and therefore, it was essential to put the whole of it to the witness and then after giving notice to the prosecution and the defence, it could be brought on record under S 288, Criminal P. C. It seems to us that the portions which were put to the witnesses were put for the purpose of contradicting him, rather than anything else. The evidence of such witnesses who have resiled from their former statements cannot be relied upon for supporting a case of this sort. The evidence of Ismail was wrongly taken on the record under S. 288, Criminal P. C., and we have no alternative but to reject it.

Wazir D W. 4, is another witness who speaks about seeing Musa at the door of the mosque and Ishaq and Musa entering the hujra. He must have gone to the mosque, if he did at all, at about 10 p. m and seen Ismail sleeping there. Ismail knew Wazir and stated definitely that Wazir did not come to the mosque that night Each and every important prosecution witness in this case has either made different, irreconcilable, contradictory statements or is contradicted by another prosecution witness. We find it unsafe to rely on such witnesses

The learned Sessions Judge inspected the spot on 11th July 1928, but failed to record a memorandum of the relevant facts observed at the inspection, as he was bound to do under S. 539-B, Criminal P. C , and wrote the following in para. 39 of his judgment :

" Having inspected the place mentioned in the evidence, I am satisfied that the uncorroborated portions of Siddiq's testimony are true. "

The learned Judge ought to have stated definitely, what uncorroborated portions of Siddiq's testimony were found by him to be true, on spot inspection. As nothing has been mentioned in the judgment, we have no means of knowing what the learned Judge had in his mind when he wrote what he has written about the corroboration of uncorroborated portions of Siddiq's evidence, and therefore, we have no alternative but to exclude that portion of the judgment, while considering this case. In Hriday Govinda Sur v. Emperor (1); Newbould and Mukerjee, JJ., held that "The omission to place on the record the memorandum of a local inspection is an illegality vitiating the conviction, and not an irregularity curable by the absence of any prejudice resulting from the default," and in a later case reported as Forbes v. Muhammad Ali Haidar Khan (2); Walmsley and B. B. Ghose, JJ., held that "The omission to record a memorandum under S. 539-B, Criminal P. C. in an inquiry under S. 145 is not an illegality vitiating the proceeding, but an irregularity which does not affect it in the absence of prejudice to the parties."

The accused is certainly prejudiced because the learned Sessions Judge relied on his own impression, received at the spot inspection, in coming to the conclusion that the uncorroborated portions of Siddiq's testimony are true, but in this case, as we have decided, for reasons already given, to exclude that portion of the judgment, we do not consider it necessary to order a retrial.

The following articles which were seized either from the person of the appellant or from his house, have been found to be stained with human blood:

Article S Pyjama; Art. V Tape; Art. P Shirt; Art. Q Pyjama, Art. O Battua or purse.

S and V were seized on 19th March 1928, P and Q were seized on 20th March 1928 and O on 21st March 1928. Siddiq definitely stated that Musa was wearing that night shirt, pyjama S and coat R. Coat article R was found to be blood-stained but as the stains were disintegrated, their origin could not be determined. The only article which, therefore, remains is article S, the pyjama. The appellant has offered an explanation as to how the pyjama came to be stained with blood and has examined a witness in support of his statement. The explanation seems to be a plausible one and may be quite true. Anyhow we cannot infer from these human blood-stains on the pyjama, that Siddiq is speaking the truth or that Musa got these stains when he murdered Ishaq. The presence of other clothes stained with human blood, about which the prosecution has nothing to say, beyond producing them in Court, and which were certainly not worn by Musa when he committed the murder, takes away the significance if any, of finding blood-stained clothes with the appellant. No importance can be attached to the blood-stained clothes in this case.

Article O was seized on 21st March 1928, from Musa's house but he did not admit that it belonged to him. The prosecution tried to prove by examining P. W. 24, Alidad Khan that the purse belonged to Ishaq but Alidad Khan expressed his inability to identify it. There is no reliable evidence to show that Art. O belonged to Ishaq and the learned Sessions Judge seems to be wrong in writing in para. 41 of the judgment that the battua Ex. O is admittedly his (i. e. Musa's) property. The finding of a blood-stained purse in the house of Musa, which has not been proved to be that of Ishaq, cannot be said to be a particular which corroborates the statement of Siddiq.

The appellant Musa was sent to Assistant Surgeon Ghulam Ali for examination on 19th March 1928, as some bruises and scratches were seen on his person. The marks were very faint and were observed through a magnifying glass Mr. Ghulam Ali opined that the scratches were very superficial and could be caused by the nails of the accused or by the nails of another person during a struggle or by thorns, if a man falls on a bush of thorns. The medical evidence is consistent with the prosecution theory, as well as with the case put forward by the appellant. There were scratches on the left side of the chest and an abrasion on the right shoulder, which could not be caused by the deceased during the struggle, as the appellant was wearing a shirt and a coat. The scratches and an abrasion, therefore, by themselves do not prove anything.

There are certain other matters, e. g., discovery of blood-stains on the rail at point 1, discovery of blood-stains on the iron fencing at point 12, presence of rose petals near the corpse. Rs. 12-9-0 seized from Ajmeri on 21st March 1928, mentioned in paras. 40 and 41 of the lower Court's judgment, which have been perhaps considered by the learned Sessions Judge, as "the leading circumstances" of Siddiq's story, which may be regarded as corroborating the statement of the approver Siddiq. These are not material particulars and do not afford such corroboration of the approver's statement, as to make his statement reliable.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1246=53 Cal. 46.

After a careful consideration of the entire evidence in the case, we are of opinion, that the charge under S. 302, I. P. C., has not been established against Musa, and, therefore, he is acquitted.

Criminal P. C., S. 233—No question of illegal joint trial arises when accused persons are discharged under S. 253—Criminal P. C., S. 253.

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code requiring a separate inquiry in respect of each accused person. The provision contained in S. 233 relates to separate trials only. Hence no question of an illegal joint trial arises when the accused persons are discharged under S. 253: 9 N. L. R. 42, Rel. on.; 4 N.L.R. 71 and 13 N. L. R. 35, Dist. [P 237 C 2]

Order.—Sub-Judge Sohagpur, filed a complaint against Jhaboolal, Debisa and Premchand in the Court of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sohagpur. from whose file the case was transferred to the file of Mr. Steinhoff, Magistrate, First Class, Hoshangabad, who, on 18th February, 1928, discharged the accused. Manbodh Singh filed a revision application in the Court of Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, which was rejected on 30th June 1928. He has now moved this Court by means of a revision application and prays that the District Magistrate be directed to hold a further inquiry into the case. The first point which was urged was that the joint trial of the three accused was contrary to law and illegal, and a separate trial of each accused should be ordered. In this connexion the rulings of this Court reported as Emperor v. Balwant Singh (1) and Gunwant v. Emperor (2) were cited. In Emperor v. Balwant Singh (1) there was a joint trial of six persons, based on a medley of unconnected transactions some joint and others several, and in Gunwant v. Emperor (2) the scribe and the attesting witnesses of an alleged forged document were tried together. In both the cases it was held that the joint trial was illegal. But these cases have no bearing on the present case, in which there has been no trial at all but only an inquiry. As pointed out by Drake Brockman, J. C. in Manna v. Emperor (3).:

"In a warrant case the trial proper does not begin until the accused is charged and called upon to answer."

A Court seized of a case can at almost any point upto actual judgment separate the trials of persons or offences and in this case, if the learned Magistrate had come to the conclusion that a prima facie case had been made out against the non-applicants, he could have, if necessary, held a separate trial, for each accused As the case never reached that stage, no question of an illegal joint trial arises in this case. There is no provision in in the Criminal Procedure Code requiring a separate inquiry in respect of each accused person, the provision contained in S 233 of the Code relates to separate trials only. The procedure adopted in the case is correct and the point urged does not affect the inquiry which was held It was next urged that the circumstantial evidence of the following fact which proves the offence, was not properly considered:

(1) Omission to mention the chitti in the sale-deed.

(2) Omission to mention the payment of Rs. 400 and,

(3) The existence of Ex. P. 5 which is partly in the handwriting of the non-applicant Jhabboolal.

The above facts, if correct, may raise a suspicion against the correctness of the date mentioned in the receipt but do not prove conclusively that the chitti was really antedated. There is no reference in the sale-deed about the chitti but there is a reference about a previous agreement which perhaps, was meant for the chitti, Ex. P-5 which is a list of the tenants who were in arrears does not really prove anything. Jhaboolal denied the fact that the Ex. P-5 was in his handwriting and there is no independent evidence on the point except the statement of Kamod Singh who stated that a portion of Ex. P-5 was written by Jhaboolal. Under the circumstances of this case no reliance could be placed on the statement of Kamod Singh on that point, when no other evidence was adduced on the point The evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution was carefully considered and the non-applicants were discharged, because a prima facie case was not made out against them. The order of discharge is neither perverse nor incorrect and, therefore, no interference is necessary.

The application is dismissed.

Ratni—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 271 of 1928, Decided on 23rd August 1928, against order of Sub-Divisional Mag., Nagpur, D/- 22nd May 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 488 (5)—Order of maintenance allowance passed in wife's favour—Single act of adultery on her part does not entitle husband to discontinue allowance.

Where an order of maintenance allowance is passed under S. 488 in favour of a wife, High Court will not disturb it in revision unless the applicant satisfies the Court that his wife has, under S. 488 (5), become disentitled to the continuance of the allowance and a single solitary act of adultery on her part does not give the husband the right to discontinue it: 31 Mad. 185, Dist. [P 238 C 2]

M. K. Padhey and Y. V. Jakatdar—for Applicant.

W. R. Puranik—for Non-Applicant.

Order. — The applicant Gopaldeo Raghvi applies for revision of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Saoner, dated 22nd May of this year, ordering him to pay certain arrears of maintenance allowance to the non-applicant, his wife Mt. Ratni. The latter woman obtained an order in her favour on 10th October 1923, and she had, in due course, applied for payment of the allowance for three months from 10th December 1927. The applicant, as on previous occasions, once more raised the contention, hitherto unsuccessful, that the non-applicant was living in adultery and it is undoubtedly true that, about 8th March she had advanced some seven months in pregnancy but says that she had meanwhile had intercourse with her husband. The lower Court, after a careful survey of the evidence, has disbelieved the contention of the applicant that she was living in adultery with one Pandya Mahar, and his review of that evidence is, in my opinion, unexceptionable. I agree with the Magistrate that, if there were truth in this allegation Pandya would undoubtedly, when accused, have attempted to save himself at the expense of the non-applicant Even, however, if I assume that the non-applicant's present pregnancy was the result of a single act of adultery, which is the utmost extent I can go to in favour of the present applicant on the evidence on record, I cannot see that the applicant's case at present is much advanced.

I have been referred to a decision of the Madras High Court in Ponnayee v. Periya Mooppan (1) in which Benson and Miller, JJ , were not prepared to interfere with the discretion exercised by a Magistrate in refusing to grant the maintenance allowance because the applicant there had been guilty of adultery with a low caste man and had been outcasted in consequence. That decision appears to me quite inapposite in the present case. I am not concerned with the order of maintenance which has been passed long ago. Before that order can be disturbed, the applicant has to satisfy the Court that his wife has, under sub-S. (5), S. 488, Criminal P. C., become disentitled to the continuance of the allowance, and this he has most certainly not done in the present case. His attempt to dispute the payment of the arrears seems only one more vexatious effort to avoid a responsibility which has already been imposed upon him in the previous proceedings.

I see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the order of the Magistrate for the payment of the arrears in question, and the present application is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, I order the applicant to pay to the non-appli-

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 423 of 1928, Decided on 5th March 1929, against judgment of Dist. Magistrate, Raipur, D/- 4th October 1928, in Criminal Appeal No. 134 of 1928

Penal Code, S. 265—Principal ingredient of offence under S. 265 is the use of false measure with intent to defraud.

Where the accused was getting his grain measured with two kathas, which he borrowed for the purpose from another person, who told him that the kathas were passed by the Notified Area Committee and which were seized by the police, who found them to measure five tolas more than the standard katha and prosecuted the accused who was convicted under S. 265.

Held, that the accused could not be convicted unless it was proved that he knew that the kathas were incorrect or that before he used them, he tampered with them. Unless this was established, fraudulent intention on the part of the accused so as to convict him under S. 265 could not be presumed, one of the principal ingredients of the offence being the use of false measure with intent to defraud.

D N. Chowdhry—for Applicant

Order—The facts of the case are that on 4th April 1928 in the grain market of the Notified Area Committee of Bhatapara the applicant had purchased some cart loads of wheat and while the same were being measured by two kathas bearing Nos 274 and 275, they were seized by the police who found each of them to measure five tolas more of grain than the standard katha prescribed by the Notified Area Committee. The applicant was accordingly challaned under S. 265, I. P. C, for having fraudulently used a false katha measure and was convicted by Mr. B. L. Verma, Magistrate 2nd, Class, Baloda Bazar, and sentenced to three months rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 100. In appeal the District Magistrate, Raipur, maintained the conviction but increased the fine to Rs. 300 and remitted the sentence of imprisonment.

The applicant has, therefore, come up in revision to this Court and his learned advocate urged that in the absence of any evidence or circumstances showing that the accused knew of the incorrectness of the katha measure in question when he used them, he could not be said to have used them fraudulently within the meaning of S. 265, I. P .C. It is no doubt established by the evidence on record in the case that the applicant did not himself possess any kathas, that those that were seized by police belonged to one Jeetmal from whom the accused had borrowed them on the day in question, and that these kathas were, as a matter of fact, verified by the Officers of the Notified Area Committee, on 21st March 1928, with the result that one of them was found to be correct and the other short by only two tolas. It is also proved by actual test at the trial that these two kathas, on a comparison with the standard one, measured five tolas more and therefore they were false measures within the meaning of S. 265, I. P. C.

In para. 5 of his judgment in spite of the finding that Jeetmal had told the accused, at the time when he lent the kathas, that they had been passed by the Notified Area Committee, the learned Magistrate presumes fraudulent intention on the part of the accused because, according to him, it was possible that the accused could tamper with the kathas on the way. He further states that the accused:

" could very well do it when he was going to make a large profit by its use and at the same time be not responsible for it as the kathas belonged to another man."

It is unfortunate that the learned District Magistrate has fallen into the same error in making a similar presumption for, after concurring with the finding of the first Court that the kathas in question were incorrect, the learned District Magistrate in para. 2 of his judgment states that:

" For the second question therefore whether the false kathas were used fraudulently I must find that they were so fraudulently used on the principle that a man must be presumed to know the natural result of his actions."

The learned District Magistrate even goes further than the trying Magistrate in presuming that the kathas in question were incorrect even when the Notified Area Committee certified them as correct and he could not understand

"the Notified Area Committee certifying as correct katha with a wobbling "sigcutter."

It was the duty of the prosecution to lead some evidence to prove that before he brought the kathas from Jeetmal the accused knew them to be incorrect or that before he used them he tampered with them and there being no evidence on these points the lower Courts could not, in my opinion, presume fraudulent intention on the part of the accused so as to convict him under S 265, I. P. C., one of the principal ingredients of the offence being the use of false measure with intent to defraud.

For the reasons set forth above I allow the application for revision and set aside the conviction of the applicant. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Revn No. 79-B of 1929, Decided on 21st June 1929 against judgment of Sub-Divisional Mag., Basim, D/- 17th March 1929.

Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), S. 162—During trial after charge was framed accused desiring to cross-examine prosecution witnesses further and applying for copies of statements made by witnesses to police—Accused should be allowed such copies and judgment should not be passed without disposing of such application.

If during the course of the trial after the charge is framed the accused desires to cross-examine prosecution witnesses further and applies to the trying Magistrate to grant him copies of the statements made by the witnesses to the police during the investigation, the Magistrate should allow him such copies and should not pass judgment without disposing of such application, and if the appellate Court finds that the statements of witness were recorded in the diary he should remand the case and allow the copies to the accused. *A. D. T. Mangalmurti—for Applicant.

Order.—On 12th February 1929 the applicant was convicted by the Tahsildar and Magistrate, Second Class, Basim, of an offence under S. 354, I. P. C., and sentenced to four months rigorous imprisonment. His appeal to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has been rejected and he comes up on revision to this Court The applicant has already undergone the sentence and therefore the decision of this application is only of an academical interest.

During the course of the trial after the charge was framed the accused desired to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses further and with that object on 22nd November 1928 he presented an application to the trying Magistrate to grant him copies of the statements made by the witnesses to the police during the investigation On 24th November 1928 the Magistrate recorded the following curious order on the face of the application :

"Ask S. I. if the statements are on separate papers or in the general diary. If latter copies cannot be given."

In the order sheet of the same date the Magistrate also noted the following order .

"Read application for copies of statements of P. Ws. made to police. Request S. I. through A. S. P. to send all papers in this connexion for my perusal and reference."

It does not appear from the record whether the police papers were sent to the trying Magistrate or not and judgment was apparently pronounced without disposing of the aforesaid application for copies. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in disposing of the appeal found fault with the trying Magistrate in not passing any final order on the application for copies, but when he found that the statements of witnesses were recorded in the diary, he should have remanded the case and allowed the accused copies thereof as was done in the case of Sulaiman Mohamed Bholai v. Emperor (1). But this apparent illegality cannot now be cured because the accused has already undergone the sentence and his learned pleader very properly objects to a retrial being ordered. With these remarks the application is dismissed.

M. B. Niyogi—for Appellants.

W. R. Puranik—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs came to the first Court alleging that they were the occupancy tenants of fields 397 and 403 of mouza Mohagaon, Tahsil Gondia that their father sublet the said fields to the defendant for the year 1923-1924, and that after this period was over the defendant was wrongfully withholding possession though asked to give it up. The claim was to eject the defendant from the fields. The defendant pleaded that he was lawfully in possession of the fields by virtue of an unregistered usufructuary mortgage-deed which the father of the plaintiffs had executed in his favour, on 15th February 1923, in consideration of having taken a loan of Rs 300. It was, therefore, contended that so long as the debt was not paid off the defendant could not be ejected. In the alternative the defendant prayed that the plaintiffs should be put upon terms : if they repudiated the mortgage, they should get a decree for possession conditional upon their refunding the mortgage debt. The Second Class Subordinate Judge, Gondia, who tried the suit passed an unconditional decree in plaintiffs' favour for possession of the fields, but on appeal by the defendant, the learned District Judge, Bhandara, modified it by making it conditional upon the plaintiffs paying to the defendant Rs 300 which he found to have been received by the plaintiffs' father under the mortgage-deed (Ex. D-1). The plaintiffs have, therefore, come up in second appeal to this Court.

The only point argued by the learned advocate for the appellants was that the order for the refund of consideration of the mortgage debt passed by the lower appellate Court was wrong because once it was held that the transaction was void, being in contravention of the provisions of the Central Province Tenancy Act, the consideration for the contract was unlawful and the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendatis applied, and therefore the money paid under such an illegal contract could not be recovered by the defendant. Reliance is placed on the case of Bhure v. Sheogopal (1), in support of this contention. That was a case in which the plaintiff sued to recover certain sir fields of which the defendants, soon after selling the village share to the plaintiff, had become occupancy tenants but had surrendered the same to the plaintiff. In the alternative a claim for refund of consideration was also made. The learned Judicial Commissioner found that the sale and the surrender being practically one transaction, the latter was void and confirmed the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. In disposing of the claim for refund of consideration the learned Judge made the following observations :

"The actual position obtaining is that the defendants are in possession while the plaintiff seeks to enforce against them an agreement which is void. Both parties knew that when the sale and surrender were executed they were contravening the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff as the defendants' creditor was certainly not less to blame than the defendants, and the maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendatis would seem to apply. S. 65, Contract Act, has no application where the contract embodies a purpose known to be illegal to which both sides are parties. For similar cases I may refer to Muridhar v. Pem Raj (2) and Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan Rao (3). The position in Bahoran Upadhya v

(1) [1920] 54 I.C. 794.
(2) [1900] 22 All. 205=(1900) A.W.N. 10.
(3) [1910] 32 All. 389=5 I.C. 557=7 A.L.J. 390.

Uttamgir (4), was practically the reverse of what obtains here . in that case the plaintiff sued the mortgagee of an occupancy holding to recover possession upon the ground that the mortgage was void under the Tenancy Act without repaying the mortgagee the money he had received, and it was held on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity that the mortgagor could not retain the mortgage money in addition to regaining the property."

It will, therefore, appear clear that on the facts found in the case that possession was not transferred the learned Judicial Commissioner disallowed the claim for refund following the two Allahabad cases in which the facts were similar to those in the case before him. The case of Bohoran Upadhya v. Uttamgir (4), the facts of which are identical with those of the present case, was only distinguished. The case cited can, therefore, afford no precedent for the decision of the present case. On the facts the present case is similar to the case of Bohoran Upadhya v Uttamgir (4) and the law propounded therein must, in my opinion, be followed for the decision of the present case. In a later case decided by Prideaux, A. J. C., and reported as Narayan v. Motisa (5) the dictum laid down is that :

"before an illegal purpose is carried out, wholly or in part, and when the parties are in pari delicto, the general rule is that no suit will lie to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement. But when the parties have done nothing illegal with their eyes open but have been caught by the fiction that they should have known the law, a suit for refund of the consideration is maintainable."

Applying this principle to the present case, it is evident that the plaintiffs' father as well as the defendant being mere agricultural rustics could not be expected to know the intricacies of the tenancy law as to transfer of holdings, and have been caught by the fiction that they should have known the law. It would be manifestly unjust that the defendant should be made to lose both money and the fields, and equity demands that in such a case as the present restitution must be made An earlier case of this Court reported as Durgai v. Ajab Singh (6), was also decided on the same equitable principles and the plaintiffs there were given a decree for possession conditional upon their refunding a proportionate part of premium received by them under an illegal lease which they wanted to avoid.

There only remains the consideration of two other cases cited by the learned advocate for the respondents which also support his case. They are Vijendra Mohan v. Monorama Dasi (7) and Harnath Kuar v Indar Bahadur Singh (8). In the first of these cases the dispute was between the two rival purchasers of certain properties belonging to a minor and conveyed to them separately by the certificated guardian at different times. The plaintiff was the subsequent purchaser and sought to oust the defendant, who was the prior purchaser, from possession of the properties on the ground that his purchase was not legal because of certain irregularities committed by the guardian in effecting the sale. In confirming the dismissal of the plaintiff's claim the learned Judges made the following observations :

"Nothing can be more unjust than to permit a person to sell a tract of land and take the purchase money, and then, because the sale happens to be informal and void, to allow him or, which is the same thing, the person on whose behalf he acts, to recover back the land and keep the money , any Code of law which would tolerate this would seem to be liable to the reproach of being a very imperfect or a very inequitable one."

In the second case the plaintiff had filed the suit to recover possession of certain properties conveyed to him in consideration of the advances received by the defendant as loan, and in the alternative for recovery of the money. It was found that the sale was void at its inception because the defendant had, at the date of transfer, no interest capable of transfer but merely an expectancy. The claim for possession was, therefore, disallowed, but that for the recovery of money decreed on the ground that S 65, Contract Act, governed the case. The controversy that so long raged as to the correct interpretation of the provisions of S. 65, Contract Act, was thus set at rest by the following pronouncement to be found in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council :

"The section deals with (a) agreements and (b) contracts. The distinction between them is apparent from S. 2. By Cl. (e) every promise and every set of promise forming the consideration for each other is an agreement, and by Cl. (h) an agreement, enforceable by law

(4) [1911] 33 All. 779=12 I.C. 112=9 A.L.J. 981.
(5) A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 132=20 N.L.R. 87.
(6) [1902] 15 C. P. L. R. 33.
(7) A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 150=49 Cal. 911.

is a contract. S. 65, therefore, deals with (a) agreements enforceable by law and (b) with agreements not so enforceable. By Cl. (g) an agreement not enforceable by law is said to be void. An agreement, therefore, discovered to be void is one discovered to be not enforceable by law, and, on the language of the section, would include an agreement that was void in that sense from its inception as distinct from a contract that becomes void. The agreement here was manifestly void from its inception, and it was void because its subject-matter was incapable of being bound in the manner stipulated."

In the light of these observations of the Privy Council the view of the learned Judicial Commissioner expressed in the case of Bhure v. Sheogopal (1) that S. 65, Contract Act, has no application to the case of contracts which are void ab initio must, therefore, be held to be no longer good law. The present case must also be governed therefore by S. 65, Contract Act. Upon a review, therefore, of the authorities considered above, I hold that the plaintiffs were rightly directed to pay, before receiving possession of the holding, the amount of Rs 300 to the defendant which their father had received as consideration for the transfer The appeal fails and is dismissed with all costs, HALLIFAX AND KINKHEDE, A. J. Cs.

Commissioner of Income-tax—Applicant.

v.

Jainarain Motiram—Non-Applicant.

Misc. Ref. No. 20-B of 1927, Decided on 18th July 1928, made by applicant on 14th December 1927.

(a) Income-tax Act, S. 62 (2)—Question of law not raised before Commissioner—High Court can direct to refer if it arises out of his order.

An assessee is entitled to move the High Court for a direction to the Commissioner to refer questions of law raised by him in his petition to the High Court even though they may not have been raised before him in the course of the proceedings under S. 62 (2) provided they are questions of law arising out of the Commissioner's order passed in appeal. [P 244 C 2]

(b) Income-tax Act, S. 23 (4)—If assessee disputes authority of the Income-tax Department to adopt flat rate, then question of law may arise for consideration whether in absence of reliable data of income from certain source, Income-tax Officer can make assessment based on formula by taking certain percentage of gross turnover as representing fair margin of profit.

If an assessee disputes in his statement the authority of the Income-tax Department to adopt a flat rate, then a question of law may arise for consideration of High Court as to whether in the absence of other reliable data as to income of an assessee from a certain source an Income-tax Officer is justified in making an assessment based on a formula deduced by taking a certain percentage of the gross turnover as representing a fair margin of profit. But if assessee admits that he has nothing to say if some percentage is adopted to find out income from a particular source, it is not open to him to urge merely the question of the reasonableness of the extent of the percentage adopted. [P 245 C 1]

An assessee is not entitled to deduct an expenditure (adat, interest etc.,) not actually incurred by him before the close of the account year and a deduction can be claimed only if the expenditure is actually incurred or the liability incurred is satisfied before the close of the year. [P 245 C 2]

D. N. Choudhary—for Applicant.

A V. Khare—for Non-Applicant.

Kinkhede, A. J C—This is a case referred for decision to this Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (3), Income-tax Act (11 of 1922), upon a requisition made by this Court as per its order dated 16th February 1927. The facts are stated in sufficient detail by the Commissioner of Income-tax in his reference and I need not repeat them here The assessee had filed a return showing Rs. 20,374-9-6 as his approximate (Ajmasa) income for the year ending Divali 1922. He could not vouchsafe for the correctness of his figures as required by law, as is clear from the word "Ajmasa" (approximately) used by him. This was not accepted, as the Assistant Commissioner himself puts it, "as he was said to have a large trade in cotton." The Assistant Commissioner asked him to produce his account books which being produced were inspected and found to be "unclosed." He was asked to close them, but he pleaded his inability to close them for want of accounts from other firms with which he had dealings.

After some investigation the Assistant Commissioner assessed him on a total income of Rs. 1,79,905 and by an order dated 20th February 1924 directed him to pay Rs. 17,453-10-0 on account of income-tax and super-tax. The assessee appealed to the Commissioner who ordered reduction of tax by Rs. 2,884-5-0. Not being satisfied he applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state his case on points formulated by him but the Commissioner thinking that they did not constitute points of law, asked him to submit a revised petition But even then the Commissioner was not satisfied, and the assessee then put in a third application through a pleader. Still it was not clear

"as to what point of law arose out of this case and on what point of law the reference to the High Court was sought."

The application was therefore refused.

The assessee then presented a petition to this Court setting forth the points of law arising out of the Commissioner's order. Both parties were heard, and this Court passed the order dated 16th February 1927 compelling the Commissioner to make the reference. The Commissioner in submitting the case as ordered has raised a preliminary question and requested this Court to decide it before giving its opinion on the points raised. That question is whether or not an assessee is entitled to move the High Court for a direction to the Commissioner to refer questions of law which have not been raised before him in the course of the proceedings under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act ?

Before dealing with the question referred it is necessary to dispose of this preliminary objection. In my opinion, the wording of S 66 (2) does not bear the construction put by the Commissioner. It does not lay on the assessee the duty of formulating any question of law, although it is open to him to do so for the benefit of the Commissioner. It ought to be sufficient for him to indicate that the order of the Commissioner upholding the assessment gives rise to questions of law and that he wants him to state his case for the decision of this Court. The law casts on the Commissioner the duty of drawing up a statement of the case. Had the wording of the section been that the petition for reference shall be drawn up in the form laid down for a memo of appeal under S. 30 (3) or 32 (2), Income-tax Act, and shall also specify the questions of law, then there was some force in the contention raised by the Commissioner. No rules or departmental instructions have been brought to my notice by the learned counsel who appeared for the Commissioner, making it obligatory on the assessee to specify or even to formulate the questions of law arising out of the Commissioner's order at the time when he moves the Commissioner to state his case under S 66 of the Act. It thus follows that the duty of stating the case for the decision of the High Court in such a clear manner as "to enable it to determine the question raised thereby" rests on the Commissioner and not on the assessee. After the Commissioner refused to state his case, the law vests in the assessee the right to move this Court for compelling the Commissioner to make a reference on the ground that his case involves questions of law, and this Court on being satisfied that the Commissioner's view that no questions of law are involved is not correct, can issue directions to him to state the case. It is sufficient for the purposes of the reference if the questions set forth in the petition to this Court arise out of the Commissioner's order passed under S. 31 or S 32 of the Act. I therefore hold that an assessee is entitled to move the High Court for a direction to the Commissioner to refer questions of law raised by him in his petition to this Court even though they may not have been raised before him in the course of the proceedings under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, provided that they are questions of law arising out of the Commissioner's order passed in appeal. For these reasons I overrule the preliminary objection and proceed to deal with the questions involved in the reference.

The Assistant Commissioner stated in his order of assessment that the accounts of the Shegaon business which were examined and scrutinized by the Income-tax Officer as also by himself disclosed that they were "unclosed accounts" and that the total turnover was of Rs 16,48,928. The Income-tax Officer therefore applied 2½ per cent rate, whereas the Assistant Commissioner reduced it to 2 per cent. The Commissioner has upheld this rate. He says it is not an unreasonable or arbitrary rate.

The scheme of the Income-tax Act shows that under S. 22 and S. 23 (4) it is the duty of the assessee to supply the materials of his assessment. If he fails to supply or having supplied fails to substantiate the same under S. 23 (3) the Income-tax Officer has still "to assess the total income of the assessee " to the best of his judgment " as contemplated by S. 23 (4). The assessee's accounts being unclosed he was unable to supply the full material, much less to substantiate the same. Realizing this difficulty the assessee's agent in his oral statement dated 11th January 1924 before the Income-tax Officer expressly admitted that he had nothing to say if some fair percentage is adopted to find out his income from the cotton business of Shegaon. The owner of the shop also did not object to the adoption of a percentage. He simply objected to the rate of 2½ per cent as being high. On the facts ascertained by the Assistant Commissioner in his enquiry he had no reason to think that the rate of 2 per cent was unreasonable and the Commissioner also has confirmed the same. The reasonableness or otherwise of the rate applied cannot be a question of law which he can agitate before us. Had the assessee disputed in his statement, the authority of the Income-tax Department to adopt a flat rate, then I think a question of law might have arisen for consideration "as " to whether in the absence of other reliable data as to income of an assessee from a certain source an Income tax Officer is justified in making an assesment based on a formula deduced by taking a certain percentage of the gross turnover as representing a fair margin of profit."

But on the admission made by the assessee in this behalf that question does not arise. Therefore it follows that it is not open to him to argue merely the question of the unreasonableness of the extent of the percentage adopted.

I am satisfied that the opinion given by the Commissioner on the second point leaves no ground for complaint. I therefore hold that it does not raise any question of law.

I now come to the third point. It raises a question of law whether the assessee is not entitled in law to deduct the adat charges Rs. 4,692-6-0 payable but not paid to the adatya from the amount of the gross income derived from the business of purchases and sales of the Telahara branch carried on by him in the adat of another firm, irrespective of the fact that the actual payment of the adat charges came to be made to the adatya when the whole account was settled later on. It is an admitted fact that even though the liability for adat charges was incurred during the sambat year 1978-79, the same had not been paid to the adatya before the close of the year. The Commissioner was, therefore, right in disallowing this item as it was not " expenditure incurred " for earning the profits of the account year within the meaning of S. 10 (9) or S. 11 (2) of the said Act. No doubt it could be termed a liability incurred so long it is not satisfied. But it appears the Income-tax Act for obvious reasons does not take into account mere monetary obligations or liabilities incurred The Income-tax Commissioner was, therefore, right in refusing to allow this deduction

The sum of Rs 4,468-13-0 paid on account of interest to others for the business would certainly be debitable against the gross income of the business under S. 11 (2), Income-tax Act. The Commissioner's opinion shows that he might have allowed these deductions had the assessee furnished the necessary details and shown that the payment made was before the end of the account year. A part of this amount was paid after the assessment order was made, i. e., after the accounts were examined. Thus the Commissioner entertained doubts about the correctness of the debit and thought fit to disallow it. My answer to this question is that an assessee is not entitled to deduct any expenditure not actually incurred by him before the close of the account year and that a deduction can be claimed only if the expenditure is actually incurred or the liability incurred is satisfied before the close of the year.

Hallifax, A. J. C.—I agree with my learned brother in the general conclusion of his judgment delivered two days before my return from three months' leave. The petitioner has put in from time to time four lists of verbose and involved arguments or contentions. To understand them involves considerable labour, but they all seem to cover the same ground. My learned brother was " of opinion that the Commissioner's decision that no questions of law are involved is not correct " and required the Commissioner " to state the case and refer it to this Court." The point of law which he was to refer, with his statement of the case on it, was not mentioned

It may be correct to say that the petitioner may raise questions in this Court which he never raised before the Commissioner, though it would certainly be difficult to do so, but that hardly needs consideration as no question, whether of law or of fact, was raised in this Court that had not already been raised three times before the Commissioner. But I am at a loss to see how the Commissioner can refer a question of law to the Court, with a statement of the case on it, unless it is formulated for him. The Commissioner was apparently aware of this, but he has courteously done his best by stating the case on all the points raised in the petition presented to this Court, whether of fact or law

But after a laborious examination of all the petitions I am still unable to discover a single question of law in any one of them. The only questions that emerge from them are these;

1. Was the income derived from the Shegaon business less than 2 per cent of the total " turnover " ?

2. Is money that a person owes, but has not paid and may never pay, money that he has expended ?.

3 Can a sum of Rs. 4,692-8-0 admittedly not expended during the year in question be called money expended in that year ?

4. Was a sum of Rs. 4,468-13-0 spent at all " for purposes of profession or vocation " or as interest ?

The Commissioner's answer in the negative to each of these questions of pure fact is undoubtedly correct, as my learned brother holds, and indeed it would be hard to answer any one of them incorrectly. But we are not concerned with questions of fact. I am of opinion further that the assessee should be ordered to pay the whole of the costs of these proceedings including a pleader's fee of Rs. 50.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes—General statute cannot be impliedly repealed by local or special statute.

A general statute cannot be treated as impliedly repealed by a local or special statute because ordinarily the general law of the country is not altered by special legislation made without particular reference to it. A statute must necessarily be repealed by express legislation. Repeal by implication, which whenever it occurs is the consequence of inconsistent legislation, should never be favoured and judicial interpretation should be directed to avoiding consequences which are inconvenient and unjust if this can be done without violence to the spirit or language of a statute. [P 249 C 1]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes — General words and phrases.

General words and phrases, however wide and comprehensive they may be in their literal sense must usually be construed as being limited to the actual objects of the Act and as not altering the law beyond. [P 249 C 1, 2]

On the principle that a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong, he may not plead in his own interest a self-created necessity, a mortgagee who forecloses a mortgagor, omitting to implead the owner of the equity of redemption as a party to the suit and at a time when he had left in him no interest to foreclose, cannot plead that the settlement entry based on a foreclosure, which brought him no part of the equity of redemption that had already vested in another person and gave him nothing beyond his own right as prior mortgagee, secured to him the status of an absolute occupancy tenant under the provisions of S. 80, Tenancy Act and S. 104, Land Revenue Code, and deprive the owner of the right of redemption which the Transfer of Property Act secures to him. A mortgagee who forecloses his mortgagor or a person who purchases at a mortgage sale, behind the back of the owner of the equity of redemption or of other persons interested in the said equity does not by foreclosure or purchase get the right to sue for khas possession of the property as against the transferee of the equity of redemption who were not parties to the suit on the mortgage, but his only remedy is to bring a suit against such transferee to have his right declared to sell or foreclose the property to satisfy his mortgage-debt. Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order of remand passed by the lower appellate Court. One Damodar was formerly an absolute occupancy tenant of fields old Nos. 150, 151, 152, 162, 163/1, 163/2, 164/1, 164/2, 165, 195 and 197, total area 29 83 of mouza Tinsara. Their new numbers are 109, 132, 133, 134, 160, 204, 205 and 206, area 29.83, rent Rs. 70. He mortgaged them all to plaintiff under a registered mortgage-deed, dated 10th August 1911. Subsequently he leased field No. 195=109 to one Godhan under a deed of lease, dated 25th January 1913 (Ex. P-14), for the period Samat 1970 to Samat 1984 and mortgaged the rest to him by a deed, dated 17th September 1915 (Ex. P-15). Thereafter he mortgaged on 17th February 1917 to Patiram and Barelal fields Nos. 150, 151, 152, 195 and 197 without possession and fields Nos. 162, 163/1, 163/2, 164/1, 164/2 and 165 with possession for Rs. 400. In execution of his own money decree against Damodar, defendant 1 Hazarilal purchased at auction all the aforesaid fields of the aggregate area of 29 83 acres rental Rs 70 on 27th June 1918, the auction sale being confirmed in his favour on 30th July 1918, and a sale certificate (Ex. 1-D-1) was issued to him on 14th August 1918.

In this way after the equity of redemption had become vested in virtue of the subsequent lease, mortgages and auction sale in different persons, the mortgagee plaintiff instituted his suit No. 227 of 1918 for foreclosure of the mortgaged property on 10th September 1918 only against his mortgagor and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on 7th January 1919 (Ex. D-3) and made it absolute on 16th December 1919. In pursuance of this foreclosure decree the plaintiff alleges he got possession of the property foreclosed on 30th July 1921. He admits that the delivery of possession to him was formal, so far as the fields in the possession of Godhan and Patiram were concerned, and asserts that it was actual as regards the rest. He contends that having thus obtained actual physical possession of the fields bearing old Nos. 150-152, and 197, he was illegally dispossessed by Godhan and Hazarilal from old No 150=new No. 206, old No. 152= new No 205, area 1.11 and 7.10 acres on 24th June 1926, and from old No 197= new No. 160 area 2 39 in Jeth Samat 1983 He, therefore, instituted the present suit for ejecting the defendants as trespassers from the aforesaid three fields on 24th February 1927

Defendant Hazarilal alone contested the suit ; the representatives of Godhan did not. The defence was that plaintiff having failed to implead him as a party to the mortgage suit, his foreclosure decree, dated 16th December 1919, gave him no right to eject him and that his proper remedy was to let him redeem the mortgage and not to treat it as foreclosed even as against him. The plaintiff's allegation that he got into possession of the land in suit and was subsequently dispossessed by the defendants was of course denied by defendant Hazarilal, who asserted that, in pursuance of the right which he acquired by the purchase at auction, he got into possession of the fields on 13th July 1919 which was at any rate before the date of the foreclosure decree. He also raised the defence that plaintiff, not having taken possession of the land within two years of the date of his decree, had lost his right to the tenancy, and that he never was in possession, and was, therefore, never dispossessed by himself. He admitted the plaintiff's allegation that at the recent settlement there was a dispute between him and the plaintiff as regards the right to obtain the settlement parcha and that the same was granted to plaintiff. He, however, disputed the right of the plaintiff to eject him from the land merely on that ground, in the absence of a foreclosure decree against himself.

The first Court recorded oral pleadings and framed a few issues of a preliminary character and fixed the case for the evidence of parties. After some evidence was gone into, the parties came to an understanding that, in case the Court held that defendant 1's right to redeem plaintiff was subsisting, he may be allowed to redeem the mortgage, in this suit, on certain terms. Issue 4 was accordingly amended and parties closed the case on the preliminary issues. As the Judge thought that the decision on the preliminary issues was sufficient for the decision of the case he proceeded to record the judgment in the case and decreed the plaintiff's suit against defendant 1 for possession and discharged the heirs of Godhan.

The defendant Hazarilal, therefore, appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Narsinghpur, contending that the said decision was incorrect on several grounds, and chiefly on the ground that, in view of the agreement between the parties, they had altogether dispensed with the necessity of the Court's giving any findings on the questions of fact involved in issues 1 to 3 and simply invited it (the Court) to decide the legal question whether defendant 1 had a subsisting right of redemption in view of the fact that he was not joined as a party to the mortgage suit irrespective of the question whether the tenancy right of the respective parties had or had not become barred by limitation. It was also urged that defendant 1 had not produced his evidence, in view of the agreement arrived at, in support of his contentions

It will not be out of place to note here that the Court of first instance really went off the rail when it considered that the decision on the preliminary issues was sufficient to dispose of the case. It is undisputed that the case was brought to an abrupt close by virtue of the agreement of the parties; but the scope of the agreement was really misunderstood by the Judge of the first Court. It was not proper for that Court to take into consideration the one-sided evidence of possession and to base its findings on it, and then deduce the conclusion that defendant 1's equity of redemption was extinguished by the adverse possession of Damodar, and that he, therefore, had no subsisting right to redeem the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's final decree for foreclosure furnished a starting point for his adverse possession, and perfected his title by prescription as against defendant 1. The Court also held that defendant 1, not having sued within one year for setting aside the settlement entry recording plaintiff as a tenant of the land, could not contest the latter's status as a tenant In this view of the case the plaintiff's suit was decreed. The defendant, therefore, appealed.

The learned Additional District Judge, however, upset the first Court's decision on the ground that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee not having come to an end as between the plaintiff and defendant 1, plaintiff's possession could not be adverse to defendant 1 and that defendant 1's right to redeem could not be lost by reason of plaintiff's possession (even if the same were held to have been actually taken), and further that defendant 1's right of redemption could not be lost or affected by his failure to set aside the settlement entry, as the foreclosure decree made plaintiff the owner of the land subject to the rights of defendant 1. Thus the findings of the first Court on issues 1 to 4 were set aside as being wrong and that Court was ordered to decide the case after framing the necessary issues The effect of this decision was to hold that the mortgage though foreclosed as against the mortgagor was subsisting as against defendant 1 under the Transfer of Property Act.

The plaintiff contests the correctness of the remand order on the ground that the entry recording him as a tenant of the land in suit having become conclusive as against defendant 1 by reason of his omission to sue to set it aside, the latter was not entitled to contest his right to be restored to possession as a tenant. In other words, the appellant's contention amounts to a plea that, with the loss of his right to contest the correctness of the entry describing the plaintiff as the tenant of the land, defendant 1 must be deemed to have also lost the right of redemption which the Transfer of Property Act preserves for him It is also contended that, though the auction sale, dated 27th June 1918, clothed defendant 1 with a right to possession as against the judgment-debtor Damodhar, the latter continued in forcible possession of the land down to the time when the appellant entered into possession under his foreclosure decree, and that whatever right defendant 1 had was extinguished under S. 104, C. P. Ten. Act, on 1st

May 1921, i. e., one year after the new Tenancy Act of 1920 came into force.

In my opinion this contention is fallacious and cannot prevail. The Transfer of Property Act enacts the general law of transfer for British India, whereas the Central Provinces Tenancy Act is nothing more than a subsequent local legislation made for a particular purpose and with reference to a particular locality. A general statute cannot be treated as impliedly repealed by a local or special statute, because ordinarily the general law of the country is not altered by special legislation made without particular reference to it. A statute must ordinarily be repealed by express legislation. No doubt a statute is repealed by implication also, if its provisions are wholly incompatible with a subsequent statute or if the two standing together would lead to wholly absurd consequences, or if the entire subject-matter of the first is taken away by the second Repeal by implication, which, whenever it occurs, is the consequence of inconsistent legislation, is never to be favoured, and should not be imputed to Parliament. Lord Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 27, p 197. But judicial interpretation should be directed to avoiding consequences which are inconvenient and unjust if this can be done without violence to the spirit or the language of a statute.

There are certain objects which the legislature is presumed not to intend, and a construction which would lead to any of them is therefore to be avoided One of these presumptions is that the legislature does not intend to make any substantial alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares, either in express terms or by clear implication, or, in other words, beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute In all general matters beyond, the law remains undisturbed. It is in the last degree improbable that the legislature would overthrow fundamental principles, infringe rights, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness; and to give any such effect to general words, simply because they have that usual or their natural sense, would be to give them a meaning other than that which was actually intended. General words and phrases, therefore, however wide and comprehensive they may be in their literal sense, must, usually, be construed as being limited to the actual objects of the Act, and as not altering the law beyond: Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 6th Edn., pp. 148 to 150.

Similarly, where Courts avoid a construction that leads to obvious injustice or to absurd results, they act upon the view that such a result could not have been intended unless the intention has been expressly manifested in the express words. On the general principle of avoiding injustice and absurdity, any construction would, if possible, be rejected (unless the policy and object of the Act required it) which enabled a person to defeat or impair the obligation of his contract by his own act, or otherwise to profit by his own wrong.

"a man may not take advantage of his own wrong; he may not plead, in his own interest, a self-created necessity: Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes pp. 369-370."

Bearing these rules of interpretation in mind while dealing with the contentions raised by the appellant, I say that, having omitted to implead the respondent as a party to his mortgage suit, and having, behind his back, sued and foreclosed the mortgagor at a time when he had left in him no interest to foreclose, he cannot under law be allowed to profit by his own wrong In other words, on the principle that

"a man may not take advantage of his own wrong, he may not plead, in his own interest, a self-created necessity," the plaintiff-appellant cannot plead that the settlement entry, based on a foreclosure which brought him no part of equity of redemption that had already vested in other persons including the respondent and which gave him nothing beyond his own rights as a prior mortgagee, secured to him the status of an absolute occupancy tenant. To interpret the provisions of S. 80, C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, and also those of S. 104, C. P. Ten. Act, 1920, in a manner which will give to the appellant the status of an absolute occupancy tenant and also the right to eject the respondent without obtaining a foreclosure decree against him, and thus to deprive the latter of the right of redemption which the Transfer of Property Act secured to him, would be to permit plaintiff to "plead, in his own interest, a self-created necessity." Such a construction would lead not only to inconvenience and injustice but to absurd results, and if I may be permitted to say, would render the legislature open to the charge that its local legislation tends

"to overthrow fundamental principles, infringe rights, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness."

The general words used in S. 80, C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, that "the entry shall . . be conclusive" however wide and comprehensive they may be in their literal sense, must be construed as being limited to the actual objects of the Act, and not altering the law beyond, namely, the law of transfer as enacted in the Transfer of Property Act

This brings me to the consideration of the question whether, under the general law of transfer, the plaintiff-appellant, by obtaining a foreclosure decree against the mortgagor at a time when he had ceased to be the owner of the equity of redemption, could have acquired such ownership of the mortgaged property as entitled him to say that his own right is not qualified by the respondent's right of redemption, and that he can eject the latter as a trespasser. It must be clearly understood that the foreclosure vested the estate in plaintiff subject to redemption by the person interested in it who was not made party to the proceedings. In other words, "omission to join keeps intact rights of persons not joined" The plaintiff thus did not get clear title to the property, but got all the title which the mortgagor would give and that was a title subject to the equity which the present respondent had of redeeming plaintiff's mortgage and preserving the property for himself. The plaintiff's title, if any, was thus subject to the infirmity that the present respondent had not been impleaded and consequently he must suffer by his neglect to implead him. It is on this principle that in a long series of cases it has been laid down that, a mortgagee who forecloses his mortgagor, or a person who purchases at a mortgage sale, behind the back of the owner of the equity of redemption or of other persons interested in the said equity, does not, by the foreclosure or purchase, get the right to sue for the khas possession of the property as against the transferees of the equity of redemption who were not parties to the suit on the mortgage, but his only remedy is to bring a suit against such transferees to have his right declared to sell or foreclose the property to satisfy his mortgage debt: Radha Pershad Misser v. Monohar Das (1), Aghore Nath Banerjee v. Deb Narain Guin (2), Krishtopada Roy v. Chaitanya Charan Mandal (3), Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (4), Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (5), Hajra Bibi v. Shiam Narain (6), Mahadeo Rai v. Baldeo Rai (7), Hukum Singh v. Lallanji (8) and Entholi Kizhakkikandy Kanaran v. V. K Unnooli (9). The case of Sheoram v Jamnabai (10), also contains very valuable observations in the same connexion.

Moreover, the principle that a right to redeem is co-extensive with the right to foreclose cannot be lost sight of. If the provisions of S 104, C. P. Ten. Act, read with Art. 1, Sch. 2, were interpreted so as to destroy the tenancy right itself after two years' non-possession by or on behalf of the tenant mortgagor, then many a mortgagee would find himself stranded into difficulties by his mortgage becoming unenforceable even before the expiry of the period of twelve years limitation prescribed for a mortgage suit, for no fault of his, on the ground that the tenant right on which the mortgage was engrafted has ceased to exist This would throw on the mortgagee an additional duty or obligation which the law never intended to impose on him to see that none but the mortgagor or person having title from him keeps any touch with the mortgaged land down to the date when he (mortgagee) himself effects his own entry into possession as owner after foreclosure, or the auction purchaser makes a like entry into possession on the basis of his purchase at auction. If, as a result of want of possession by mortgagor for two years even the right to redeem is to be treated as lost by the operation of Art. 1, Sch. 2 and S. 104, C. P. Ten. Act, then it would follow as a natural consequence thereof that with the extinction of the mortgagor's right of redemption the mortgagee's right to foreclose may have to be treated as extinguished for no fault of his own. These and several other anomalous results may ensue if the construction sought to be put by the appellant were to be accepted.

The present suit as laid asked for an absolute decree, and not a conditional one, for ejectment of the respondent, and as such, it was liable to be dismissed in view of the aforesaid decisions. But in view of the agreement arrived at in the lower Court, I take it that plaintiff is prepared to abandon his prayer for an absolute decree, if his contention based on the effect of S. 80, C. P. Land Revenue Act, and of S. 104, C P. Ten. Act, were overruled. He has thus very narrowly escaped from a summary dismissal of his suit as being not maintainable under the general law of transfer. The remand order virtually gives effect to the agreement between the parties and gives them an opportunity of having the question of the price of redemption determined in the trial Court I must, therefore, decline to interfere with the remand order; I cannot of course vary it in favour of the respondent by dismissing the suit upon an appeal by the plaintiff-appellant. To say the least the appeal was ill-conceived and plaintiff should have thought twice before he lodged it. The appeal is dismisssd with costs. Pleader's fee Rs 25.

 (c) Civil P. C , S. 151—Order based on erroneous view that incorrect procedure was followed—It cannot be varied for ends of justice.

It is not necessary for the ends of justice, or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court that orders based on an erroneous view that an incorrect procedure has been taken should be varied. There is no greater injustice or abuse when a claim is wrongly dismissed on the ground that the wrong procedure has been followed than where it is wrongly dismissed on the ground that the claim is invalid.

Order of Reference.

Findlay, J. C.—This is an application for review of the order of this Court, dated 28th April 1925, in Civil Revision No. 295 of 1924 The circumstances of the case are rather peculiar In Sitaram v Kaniram (1), I have held that recourse could not be had to S. 151, Land Revenue Act, for the purpose of enforcing a right to pre-empt in execution proceedings. In confirming the order of the lower Court to the same effect, I pointed out that the then applicant Sitaram had his remedy by way of suit open to him. In pursuance of the said order, the present applicant instituted a civil suit (No 138 of 1925) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Sakoli, to enforce his right of pre-emption. That Court decreed the suit, and the said decree was upheld on appeal by the District Judge, Bhandara. The defendants-purchasers, Kaniram and Hiralal, instituted second appeals Nos. 343 and 344 of 1927. Both these appeals were disposed of by one judgment, dated 30th August 1928, on the ground that in the meantime a Full Bench of this Court had, in Govinda v. Murlidhar (2), overruled my decision in Sitaram v.

Kaniram (1) quoted above. The Full Bench finding was that a claim to pre-empt under S 151, C. P. Land Revenue Act, is enforceable in execution proceedings. The result of this curious combination of circumstances undoubtedly constitutes a grave hardship on the present applicant who had, in the first instance, adopted the right procedure as laid down by the Full Bench in the case quoted ; yet the result for him has been that he failed on the view of the law taken by me, which has, in the meantime, been overruled by a Full Bench In these circumstances, the applicant has applied for review of the order of this Court, dated 28th April 1925, and claims that the said order should be set aside

The application has been attempted to be supported on the ground that, in view of the decisions in Sharup Chand Mala v. Pat Dassee (3) (at p. 630) and Brindaban Chandra v. Damodar Prosad (4) (at p. 150 of 29 C W N.), the language of R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C. is sufficiently wide to embrace a case like the present. In Sudananda Moral v. Rakhal Sana (5) Mitter, J., however held that the words "sufficient reason" must be some reason analogous to the previous one included in the rule and, in so doing, he followed the Privy Council decision in Chhajju Ram v Neki (6) cf also Ramchandra v. Govindrao (7).

As at present advised, I am still inclined to the view that the words "sufficient reason" cannot be so interpreted as to bring a case like the present within the terms of R. 1, O 47, Civil P. C. The mistake or erroneous view of this Court cannot be said to have been "apparent on the face of the record" at the time the Court passed the order which is now sought to be reviewed. On the contrary, the difficulty and complexity of the matter was such that a Full Bench was constituted to deal with it. I do not think therefore that the present case comes within the terms of the rule in question, but, in view of the widely discrepant case-law on the point, I am of opinion that it is highly desirable that a Full Bench should deal with this question, as also with the further one as to whether, even assuming that a case like the present does not come within the terms of the rule quoted, it is open to this Court, in the exercise of its inherent powers, to remedy what has caused an obvious injustice to the present applicant.

I am of course aware of my decision in Nizamuddin v. Jumma (8), but I am not at present prepared to admit that that decision is an erroneous one. I am nevertheless, of opinion that it is desirable that a fundamental important question like the present should be considered by a Full Bench : cf. Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (9) and Chhayemannessa Bibi v. Basirar Rahman (10) (at p. 404). I am therefore of opinion that it is desirable that the following questions should be referred to a Bench :

(i) Whether, on the facts stated in the first part of this order, a case like that of the present applicant can be brought within the letter of R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C. ; and

(ii) Whether, even if the first point be held against the applicant, the circumstances of such a case would permit of this Court reviewing its order in the applicant's favour in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151, Civil P. C.

A Full Bench consisting of the J. C. and the 1st and 3rd A. J Cs. will be constituted accordingly.

Macnair, Offg. J. C. — The facts which led to this reference are stated in the order of reference, dated 5th February 1929. In execution of a money decree certain village shares were sold. The applicant Sitaram preferred a claim to pre-empt these shares to the executing Court ; that Court held that S. 151, C. P Land Revenue Act did not authorise investigation of such claims by the executing Court. Sitaram applied in revision to Findlay, J. C., who refused to interfere and in the order dismissing the application remarked that the applicant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the executing Court to consider his claim to pre-emption, but still had a remedy by suit open to him. The applicant then filed a suit to enforce his right of pre-emption. The trial Court decreed the suit and an appeal was dismissed. In second appeal, however, the suit was dismissed as a Full Bench—Govinda v. Murlidhar (2)—had ruled that a claim to pre-empt under S. 151, C. P. Land Revenue Act, was enforceable in execution proceedings and could not be enforced in a separate suit. The present application was then filed; the applicant asked for review of the order of Findlay, J. C. Findlay, J. C., considered it highly desirable that a Full Bench should deal with two questions :

"(a) Whether, on the facts stated in the first part of this order, a case like that of the present applicant can be brought within the letter of R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C.,

"(ii) Whether, even if the first point be held against the applicant, the circumstances of such a case would permit of this Court reviewing its order in the applicant's favour in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151, Civil P. C."

The non-applicant urges a preliminary objection. His first argument was that Findlay, J C., had in reality held that the application for review should be dismissed. I am unable to follow this argument. It is quite clear that Findlay, J C., considered that the opinion of a Bench on certain questions should be obtained before he disposed of the application.

The next point urged is that the provisions of O. 47, R. 5, Sch. 1, Civil P. C., make it necessary that Sir Charles Findlay himself should be a member of the Bench. It seems sufficient to say that S. 9, C P. Courts Act, does not make it necessary that the Judge who is disposing of the case should be a member of the Bench for the decision of which a question of law is referred. I add that Sir Charles Findlay would probably have been a member of the Bench had he not taken nine months leave directly after making the order of reference.

The applicant urges that review can be granted in accordance with the provisions of O. 47, R 1, Sch. 1, Civil P. C., both on the ground that new and important matter has been discovered and on the ground that there is something analogous to an error apparent on the face of the record. Now, for the purpose of deciding whether the applicant is entitled to apply for a review under O. 47, R. 1, I have to consider only whether the conditions mentioned in the rule are satisfied. The question of hardship to the applicant does not arise. The facts material for decision of this point then are simply these : A Judge took a certain view of the law and dismissed an application : subsequently a tribunal whose decision that Judge was bound to follow took a contrary view of the law The applicant's counsel admitted that an application did not lie in the numerous cases were these facts exist. These were the facts which were considered by a Bench of this Court in Ramchandra v. Govindrao (7) and in that case for reasons with which I am in entire agreement it was held that there was not ground for granting a review. I add that in a Full Bench ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council Chhajju Ram v. Neki (6) (at p. 133 of 3 Lah.), their Lordships state that :

"the three cases in which alone mere review is permitted are those of new material overlooked by excusable misfortune, mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or 'any other sufficient reason'."

Review then is not permitted where new material comes in existence subsequently. In the same judgment their Lordships have clearly held that review cannot be granted on the ground that the previous decision of the case had proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law.

In the second question of the reference the referring Judge appears to have used the word "reviewing" in a very general sense. Clearly S. 151, Civil P. C., does not enable a Court to follow the procedure laid down in O. 47, where the conditions under which review can be granted are not satisfied. In my opinion the point raised in the question is the power of the Court to vary the previous order. For consideration of this point the only material facts are in my opinion these : Findlay, J. C, erroneously held that the applicant adopted a wrong procedure and for this reason refused the relief . it appears to be a fact that the applicant was entitled to the relief claimed by him. The fact that the applicant subsequently adopted the procedure suggested by Findlay, J. C, does not appear to me to have any bearing on the decision of the question I remark that, as the applicant has not challenged the judgment in which it was held that the procedure first adopted by him was correct, it must be assumed for the purposes of this opinion that the decision of Findlay, J. C., was erroneous.

It is not urged that that Court has inherent power to vary at any time a final order merely because that order was incorrect. In my opinion it is not necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse to the process of the Court that orders based on an erroneous view that an incorrect procedure has been taken should be varied There is no greater injustice or abuse when a claim is wrongly dismissed on the ground that the wrong procedure has been followed than where it is wrongly dismissed on the ground that the claim is invalid

The applicant has cited Pandu v. Rajeshwar (11) and other cases in which effect has been given to the principle that the act of the Court should prejudice no one, but the Judge decided the case with due care and did not act wrongly even if his decision was incorrect. These cases then have no application.

The applicant has also cited cases such as Sarat Chandra Bose v. Bisweswar Mitra (12), in which it has been held that where there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code expressly providing for a remedy and none which prohibits a remedy being obtained, the provision of S 151 may in a suitable case apply. But these rulings do not justify the application of S 151 where such application would contravene the fundamental principle that there must be finality to litigation. A final order passed after proper consideration must not be set aside if it cannot be challenged by methods expressly provided by the Code.

I add that I am not considering the power of the Court. If I had to decide whether that power should be exercised in this particular case, I should have to consider the question whether or not it would involve hardship to the non-applicant to allow pre-emption to the applicant so long after the sale to him had been confirmed.

In my opinion then both the questions must be answered in the negative.

Opinion

Jackson, A. J. C.—The question we have to decide is whether, in a Lahan Gahan mortgage, that is, a mortgage in which the remedy provided is foreclosure in default of payment by given date and in which the only remedy expressly given is that of foreclosure, there is by implication no covenant of personal liability. The reference has been made necessary by the decision in Gopikisan v. Mt. Mankuarbai (1) which applied Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) as interpreted in Jiwandas

(2) A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 119=44 Cal. 388=44 I. A. 87 (P.C.).

v. Mt. Janki (3). According to Seth Gopikisan v Mt. Mankuarbai (1) the Privy Council decision in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) must be considered to have overruled Govind v Jagannath (4), in which it was laid down that "where in a mortgage-deed the remedy of the mortgagee is expressed to be foreclosure the mere fixation of a date by which the mortgagor undertakes to pay the mortgage-money does not amount to a stipulation binding him to repay the same within the meaning of clause (a), S. 68, T. P. Act."

As has been held in Jag Sahu v. Mt. Ram Sakhi Kuer (5) and Dattambhat Rambhat v. Krishnabhat (6), the insertion in a usufructuary mortgage of a covenant by the mortgagor to repay the consideration money on a particular date may entitle the mortgagee to a personal decree against the mortgagor, but it does not follow that that would be the effect of inserting such a covenant in a mortgage by conditional sale or in a mortgage of a similar nature to one by conditional sale. It has been pointed out in Govind v. Jagannath (4) that a Lahan Gahan mortgage does not come within the definition of a mortgage by conditional sale in S. 58 (c), T. P. Act. Nevertheless, the effect of a Lahan Gahan mortgage is the same as that of one by conditional sale and mortgages in forms similar to that of Lahan Gahan, such as "kutkubala" or "bai-bil-wafa," were recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkishen Das v. W. F Legge (7), in a passage that occurs at p. 159, as standing on the same footing as mortgages by conditional sale. In that case their Lordships said that it is not necessary in such mortgages that the mortgagor should make himself personally liable for the repayment of the loan. Again, in Kalka Singh v. Paras Ram (8), another Privy Council decision, the following occurs:

"In the next place, although an unqualified admission of a debt no doubt implies a promise to pay it, their Lordships are not prepared to hold that that is necessarily so where there is an express promise to pay in a particular manner."

(4) [1916] 12 N. L. R. 19=33 I. C. 753.
(5) A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 167=1 Pat. 350.
(6) [1910] 34 Bom. 462=7 I. C. 446=12 Bom. L. R. 491.
(7) [1900] 22 All. 149=27 I. A. 58=7 Sar. 601 (P.C.).
(8) [1895] 22 Cal. 434=22 I. A. 68=6 Sar. 545 (P.C.).

These decisions are authority for the view that a personal covenant is not necessarily implied in every mortgage. In Narotam Das v. Sheo Pragash Singh (9) their Lordships have held that there was no personal covenant to pay in an instrument which contained a promise to repay the loan within a fixed period and then provided, in default of payment, for satisfaction of the debt out of the property hypothecated. This is exactly the same view as has been taken in Govind v. Jaggannath (4). It goes further than the two Privy Council decisions already cited and makes it clear that in some mortgages the nature of the mortgage gives rise to the implication that there is no personal covenant.

It has now to be considered whether the Privy Council have taken a different view in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2). At p. 400 (of 44 Cal.) the following passage occurs:

"In considering this question it must be borne in mind (i) that a loan prima facie involves such a personal liability; (ii) that such a liability is not displaced by the mere fact that security is given for the repayment of the loan with interest; but (iii) that the nature and terms of such security may negative any personal liability on the part of the borrower."

The interpretation of this passage in Jiwandas v. Mt. Janki (3), as applied in Gopikisan v Mt. Mankuarbai (1), is that a personal covenant to repay the money lent exists in every mortgage transaction unless it is negatived expressly or by necessary implication by the terms of the bond or the circumstances of the case. It is argued before us that the mortgage-deed is an acknowledgment of the debt, that such acknowledgment implies a personal promise to pay the debt and that, therefore, the law is correctly laid down in Gopikisan v. Mt. Mankuarbai (1). It is difficult, however, to hold that their Lordships of the Privy Council have, in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2), taken a different view to those expressed in the earlier decisions already referred to. Another judgment of their Lordships delivered in the same year as Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhihdra Nath Mukherji (2) is that in Jatindra Nath Basu v. Peyer Deye Debi (10). At p 255 (of 31 M. L. J.) they seem to repel the argument now sought to be based on Ram Narayan Singh v Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) by the following words :

"The Subordinate Judge and the High Court have assumed from the mention in that document that the Rs. 1,90,000 had been advanced that it might be inferred that it was the intention of the parties that the Maharaja Ram Narayan Singh should be personally liable to repay the advance. Their Lordships do not draw that inference from that document. On the contrary, their Lordships draw the inference from that document that the Maharaja Ram Narayan Singh did not intend that he should be personally liable."

From the words used in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) I do not think that their Lordships' pronouncement in that case supports the argument taken before us. In my order of reference I have pointed out that the learned Judge, who interpreted their Lordships' pronouncement in Jiwandas v. Mt. Janki (3), interpreted it, in my opinion, somewhat inaccurately, because he referred only to the terms of the deed and not to the nature thereof. It is argued before us that the nature and the terms of a mortgage-deed are the same thing, but I cannot agree. It is true that the nature of the deed must be set forth in the terms and it is set forth, in my opinion, in the terms which state how the property is to be used in satisfaction of the debt It is also argued before us that the nature of a mortgage deed has nothing to do with the remedy but it seems to me clear that it is the remedy which decides whether a mortgage is by nature a simple mortgage, or a mortgage by conditional sale or a usufructuary mortgage and so on. This is indeed clear from the words used by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) at p. 401 (of 44 Cal.) :

" having regard to the nature of the deed of 14th April 1896, which was a usufructuary mortgage only."

It seems to me that the nature of the deed, that is, the terms relating to the remedy, has been given special importance by their Lordships and that the nature of the deed may by itself negative a personal covenant. That is also I think in accordance with S. 68, T. P. Act. That section gives the mortgagee a right to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage money in three cases only the first of which is where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage money. Reference to S. 58 will show that it is in only two of the four mortgages there defined that the mortgagor binds himself to pay the mortgage money ; he does not do so in a mortgage by conditional sale or in a usufructuary mortgage and as I have said, a mortgage such as that we are considering, stands on the same footing as a mortgage by conditional sale.

Although I have expressed the opinion that the learned Judge who interpreted Ram Narayan Singh v Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) in Jiwandas v. Mt Janki (3) has restated their Lordships' pronouncement somewhat inaccurately, it is clear from what he goes on to say that he was in no danger in that case of applying that pronouncement wrongly. After his statement :

" In every mortgage bond there is a personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt unless the contrary is expressly stated or appears by necessary implication from the terms of the bond, " the following sentence occurs : " Where there is no express covenant, that necessary implication " that is, that there is no personal covenant :

" arises out of the terms of most foreclosure and many usufructary mortgages, but not out of those of a simple mortgage for sale. "

By these words he gives the requisite value to the nature of the mortgage. In Gopikisan v. Mt. Mankuarbai (1) he seems to have misapplied his own judgment and to have omitted to consider that the provision of foreclosure and no other remedy in a deed might imply the absence of a personal covenant.

I am of opinion that Seth Gopikisan v. Mt Mankuar bai (1) has been inaccurately decided and that Govind v. Jaagnnath (4) has not been overruled by Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji (2) I consider that in a Lahan Gahan mortgage it is necessarily implied that there is no covenant of personal liability if no such covenant is included in the terms of the deed ; and that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

Macnair, Offg. C. J.—I agree.

Subhedar, A. C. J.—I also agree.

After receiving the opinion of the Full Bench, Jackson, A. J. C. delivered the following :

Judgment.—In accordance with the opinion given by the Full Bench I hold that there is no personal covenant in the mortgage-deed on which the suit out of which this appeal arises is based. There is one other point to be considered and that is the claim of the plaintiffs to a decree for sale with a personal decree against the defendant, in the event of the sale proceeds being insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, on the ground that the defendant misrepresented to the plaintiffs the value of the property mortgaged at the time the mortgage deed was executed. Both the lower Courts have recorded that the defendant has admitted that he told the plaintiffs that the value of the property was about Rs. 9,000. I do not so read the defendant's deposition but assuming that he did make a statement as to the value of the property and that his deposition shows that that statement was to the effect that the value was Rs. 9,000 and assuming further that that was a false statement of the value of the property mortgaged, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are still not entitled to the decree that they claim.

Under S 19, Contract Act, the rights given to a party, who has entered into a contract under fraud or misrepresentation, are to avoid the contract or to insist on the contract being performed. The section does not entitle the party to insist on an entirely different contract being performed. Moreover, the rights given by S. 19 are given only to a party whose consent to the contract was, in fact, caused by the fraud or misrepresentation. I agree with the trial Court that it is impossible to believe that the plaintiffs relied solely on the statement of the defendant as to the value of the property. They had materials or could have obtained them without much trouble on which to form an independent opinion of the value and I am convinced that it was not the statement of the defendant that induced the plaintiffs to enter into a contract and that any statement of the value made by the defendant does not entitle them to the decree that they claim. I dismiss the appeal with costs. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 150.

Judgment.—Bhagwat, the father of the plaintiff-respondent, on 22nd March 1919 sold a one-anna share of mouza Sulsuli to the defendant-appellant for Rs. 400. On 1st July 1919 he surrendered to the appellant his occupancy rights in what had been his sir land. The respondent and his brother, who is now dead, sued for a declaration that the sale and surrender were not binding on them and for possession. Their claim has been decreed by the trial Court, whose decree has been upheld by the lower appellate Court, though that Court has held that the sale was invalid and not merely as the trial Court did, that it does not bind the respondent.

I propose to refer first to a new plea raised here on behalf of the respondent. The fact that there was both a sale and a surrender of occupancy rights in what had been sir land is made a ground for attacking both. This is based on the pronouncement by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Second Appeal No 530 of 1918 that :

"if a covenant to relinquish the sir lands is part of the transaction of sale or of mortgage then the agreement to surrender will be void and unenforceable, no matter what ingenious devices may be employed to give colour to it."

The decision of the learned Judicial Commissioner would render invalid only the surrender and not both transactions; but I consider that I must reject the plea even as regards the surrender. It does not involve only a question of law; there was a difference of more than three months between the dates of the two transactions and obviously evidence would be required to show that the two transactions were really one. There is no such evidence and the plea must fail.

The sale has been held invalid on the sole ground that it was effected while the property sold was under the management of the Collector in execution of a decree against Bhagwat. It is alleged that on 22nd March 1919, the date on which the sale-deed was executed and registered, Bhagwat made a deposit in the Collector's Court of a sum sufficient to satisfy the decree that the Collector was executing ; but it has been held by the lower Courts that the deposit was not made before the sale and consequently that the property was still under the management of the Collector when the sale took place. That is a finding of fact but it is challenged on the ground that the burden of proof has been wrongly laid. It seems to me clear that the lower Courts have considered that the burden of proof lay upon the defendant He examined two witnesses to prove that the deposit was made before the sale-deed was executed, but they have not been believed. It is argued that the burden of proof really lay upon the plaintiffs, that although the witnesses called by the defendant have been disbelieved there is no evidence that the sale deed was executed before the deposit was made and that the result is the same as if no evidence had been given on either side and the suit, as the burden of proof lay on the plaintiffs, must fail.

It might be possible to apply in principle the presumption mentioned in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, Edn. 8, p. 803, that, where more documents than one bear date on the same day they are presumed to have been executed in the order necessary to effect the purpose for which they were executed. That is, it might be presumed that persons who are presumed to know the law observed it and that, when two acts are done on the same day, the one necessary to be done first to give the other validity was, in fact, done first There are, however, circumstances which seem to me to justify the Court in refusing to draw this presumption in the present case. The plaintiffs' plea regarding their father's incompetence to sell owing to the Collector's proceedings was not replied to by the defendant in the trial Court. In first appeal, he put in, by order of the Court, a written statement dated 8th April 1924 in which he did not assert that the deposit was made before the sale-deed was executed. He first made the assertion, through his pleader, on 26th August 1926 when he admitted that he could not say how many days or hours before execution of the deed the deposit was made. Moreover, I find that, when the defendant was examined as a witness on 28th March 1923, he made a statement which I read as meaning that the sum out of which the deposit was made was paid to Bhagwat at the time of registration of the sale-deed. I cannot then draw the presumption that the learned counsel for the defendant-appellant suggests, and the appea must fail in so far as it is based on the validity of the sale.

The defendant is on firmer ground when he claims refund of the consideration under S. 65, Contract Act. It has been found that the sale was effected to satisfy debts of Bhagwat which would have been binding on his sons, who have therefore been benefited by the sale. For the defendant the Privy Council decision in Harnath Kunwar v Inder Bahadur Singh (1) has been cited, in which the following remarks occur :

"Before this Board, the claim has been based on S. 65, Contract Act. It is there provided that "when an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it to the person from whom he received it." So framed, the plaintiff's claim to compensation rests, not on any principle or formula of English law, but on the words of this section and it has to be seen whether the facts of this case come within its scope. The section deals with (a) agreements and (b) contracts. The distinction between them is apparent from S. 2. By Cl. (e) every promise and every set of promises forming the consideration for each other is an agreement, and by Cl. (h) an agreement enforceable by law is a contract. S. 65, therefore, deals with (a) agreements enforceable by law and (b) with agreements not so enforceable. By Cl. (g) an agreement not-enforceable by law is said to be void.

An agreement therefore discovered to be void is one discovered to be not enforceable by law and, on the language of the section would include an agreement that was void in that sense from its inception, as distinct from a contract that becomes void.

The agreement here was manifestly void from its inception, and it was void because its subject-matter was incapable of being bound in the manner stipulated."

As against this the plaintiff-respondent relies on the following passage from the Privy Council judgment in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2) (at p 548) as showing that S 65, Contract Act does not apply :

"A new point was raised here by the appellant's counsel founded on S. 65, Contract Act, a section not referred to in the Courts below, or in the cases of the appellants or respondent. It is sufficient to say that this S. 65 starts from the basis of there being an agreement or contract between competent parties, and has no application to a case in which there never was, and never could have been any contract."

It is the former ruling that seems to me to be applicable. In the latter, their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a case in which a contract was entered into by a person who was totally incompetent to contract, a minor. In the former the contract was entered into by a person who was not incompetent to contract but was incompetent to transfer the property that he purported to transfer and the position is the same in the case with which I am now dealing It is true that in Mt. Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (3) Drake Brockman, J. C., has said that in S. 325-A, Civil P. C. of 1882 and its counter-part in the current Code there is a legal disqualification to alienate at all which mutatis mutandis puts the judgment-debtor affected on a par with a minor ; but para. 11, Sch 3, Civil P. C. of 1908, which corresponds to S 325-A of the Civil P. C of 1882, only makes the judgment-debtor incompetent to alienate his immovable property which is under the Collector's management. He is otherwise competent to contract and can only be considered on a par with a minor in respect of that property. That being so, I hold, on the authority of Harnath Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1) that S. 65, Contract Act, applies and that the appellant is entitled to recover the consideration that he paid to Bhagwat.

The trial Court has decreed possession of the malguzari share and the sir fields to the plaintiffs ; but as its finding was that the sale was not binding on them because it was not effected to pay off antecedent debts of Bhagwat, a declaration was added that the appellant had acquired interest to the extent of a one-third joint share in the malguzari share. Though the lower appellate Court has found the sale null and void, it has not ordered deletion of that declaration but has simply confirmed the trial Court's decree. That declaration must now be deleted ; and in view of my decision in the last preceding paragraph, the decree must be further modified by making the respondent's right to possession subject to the payment to the appellant of the consideration that the latter paid to Bhagwat. In view of the result I consider that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

First Appeal No 65-B of 1928, Decided on 22nd July 1929 against the decree of 1st Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Khamgaon, D/- 16th April 1928.

(a) Tort—Malicious proceedings—It cannot be said that because accused is acquitted complainant must have deliberately made false complaint.

Although it is true that if a deliberately false complaint is proved to have been made, no further proof of malice and want of reasonable and probable cause would be required, but it cannot be said that because the accused in the criminal case is acquitted and because the complainant must, if the complaint was false, know that it was false, he must be held to have deliberately made a false complaint. [P 260 C 2]

(b) Tort—Malicious proceedings—It is not sufficient in suit for malicious prosecution to prove mere fact of acquittal.

It is not sufficient, in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution to prove the mere fact of acquittal. The plaintiff can establish the other facts necessary to entitle him to damages without proving his innocence, but if he relies on the falsity of the complaint to establish those other facts he must prove his innocence by proving the complaint to be false; and he cannot do this by simply putting in the judgment of the criminal Court which acquitted him *A. M. R. Bobde—for Appellant.

M. B. Niyogi—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises from a suit for damages for malicious prosecution which the lower Court has dismissed The prosecution arose out of a dispute regarding the succession to the property of one Maroti. Maroti had two brothers, Janji, the father of the defendant 1, Kisan, and Sakharam, the husband of defendant 2, Bindi. Both these brothers predeceased him, and after he too died, Kisan claimed his property on the strength of a will made by Maroti in favour of Kisan and Sakharam. Maroti's widow, Lakshmi alias Gangu Bai, resisted Kisan's claim, and a contest took place for possession of the cotton crop obtained from Maroti's fields after his death. Kisan and Bindi made reports to the patel and to the police, that one Khair Muhammad, Lakshmi's agent, and certain other Mahomedans, had broken the lock put upon Marot Dhaba by Kisan, had taken out the cotton there from and carried it away and had assaulted Kisan and Bindi in doing so. No action was taken by the police, and on 11th January 1924 Kisan lodged a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Jalgaon. Five of those against whom Kisan complained, including the plaintiff appellant, were eventually charged with an offence punishable under S 147, but in the end they were acquitted on 23rd December 1924 On 1st December 1925 the plaintiff-appellant Hussenuddin instituted his suit for damages.

The lower Court has found that Kisan alone was responsible for instituting the criminal proceedings against Hussenuddin but that though Hussenuddin was acquitted in those proceedings, he has failed to prove that Kisan acted maliciously or without reasonable and probable cause. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the complaint was false to the knowledge of the defendants and that is sufficient to show both malice and want of reasonable and probable cause. I agree that if a deliberately false complaint is proved to have been made, no further proof of malice and want of reasonable and probable cause would be required. No authority, I think, is necessary for that proposition, but it does not follow that because the accused in the criminal case were acquitted and because the complainant must, if the complaint was false, know that it was false, he must be held to have deliberately made a false complaint It is true, as has been contended on behalf of the appellant on the authority of the Privy Council decision in Balbhaddar Singh v. Budri Sah (1), that the plaintiff in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution need not prove that he was innocent of the charge made against him, but their Lordships do not indicate that it can ever be sufficient, in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, to prove the mere fact of acquittal. The plaintiff can establish the other facts necessary to entitle him to damages without proving his innocence; but if he relies on the falsity of the complaint to establish those other facts he must, in fact, prove his innocence by proving the complaint to be false; and he cannot do this, as has been held in Gobardhan Singh v. Ram Badan Singh (2) by simply putting in the judgment of the criminal Court which acquitted him.

For purposes of the suit that judgment proves nothing but the acquittal, but I should like to point out that the criminal Court did not find the complaint to be false as regards Hussenuddin. He pleaded an alibi and it is asserted that that alibi was accepted; but I do not find this to be the case. There is no definite finding as to the alibi and the general remark:

"The prosecution story is rebutted by the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the defence and as such the charge is not substantiated against any of the accused,"

cannot be interpreted to mean acceptance of the alibi. What the criminal Court found was that Khair Muhammad and his companions did use force to break open the lock of the Dhaba and removed the cotton, but that they were justified in doing this and in using force. In the suit the only evidence to show that Hussenuddin was not present when Khair Muhammad and others removed the cotton is that of Luxmi (P W. 7), whom the lower Court has, I think, rightly disbelieved. Hussenuddin (P. W. 1) himself has not in his deposition asserted his innocence and the other oral evidence adduced by him relates merely to the part taken by Bindi in the institution of criminal proceedings and to the fees paid to pleaders by Hussenuddin in connexion with them.

I agree with the lower Court that Hussenuddin has failed to establish that Kisan brought his complaint maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, and that his suit therefore had to be dismissed. In view of this finding I need not consider the question whether Bindi, who was not a party to the complaint, could be held to have joined with Kisan in instituting the criminal proceedings. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Chandanbai sued the defendants for possession of a one-anna malguzari share of mauza Panjra Gondi. That suit was dismissed on 10th April 1926. An appeal was filed on 16th June 1926, in the name of the plaintiff Chandanbai who had, however, died on 22nd May 1926 On 24th September 1926, the pleader for the respondents brought this fact to the notice of the lower appellate Court, the fact being admitted by the pleader for the appellant who stated that the name of Chandanbai had been inserted in the memorandum of appeal through an accidental mistake, the appeal really having been filed by Chandanbai's two sons. It was argued for the respondents that the appeal being filed in the name of a dead person, abated. The lower appellate Court, following the case of Veerappan Chetty v Tindal Ponnam (1) which deals with a suit against a deceased person dismissed the appeal with costs.

It is here contended that the intention was to bring the appeal in the name of Chandanbai's heirs who gave a power-of-attorney to the pleader who filed the appeal, but that by a clerical error the name of the original plaintiff was entered as the appellants and the present appellants ask for permission to correct the misdescription. Reliance is placed on Manjula v Shankar (2) a case which, in my opinion, does not apply. Another case quoted is Bakaram v. Hiralal (3) a case of a misdescription of a plaintiff. In that case the managers of a temple filed a suit when the temple itself was the real plaintiff. It was held that the omission to mention the temple in the heading was merely a mistake in the description of the plaintiff and that no question of limitation arose when that description was corrected. It is difficult to see how the decision in that case applies to the facts of the present case, the appeal here having been brought in the name of a plaintiff who is dead. Other cases quoted are Saraspur Manufacturing Co. Ltd., v B. B & C. I. Ry Co. (4) and Nanak Chand Mukandi Lal v. East-Indian Ry. (5). These are two cases where the agent of a railway was sued as such, while the case was against the railway itself. They again do not apply to the circumstances of the present case.

Another case referred to by the pleader for the appellants is Seodoyal Khemka v. Joharmull Manmull (6). But the circumstances there are not on all fours with those of the present case. It is noteworthy that the power signed by the sons of Chandabai to the pleader does not state under what authority they wished to file the appeal. There is nothing to show that they did so as the legal representatives of the deceased ; and as the facts stand, the appeal was filed in the name of a dead person, and further until September 1926, no application was made to get the error rectified. I do not think that the present case can be properly called one of a misdescription of the plaintiff: there is no misdescription at all. The appeal was filed in the name of a dead woman when it should have been filed in the name of her representatives, and it is difficult to see what the lower appellate Court could have done under these circumstances except to dismiss the appeal with costs. I am told that the sons have now filed an appeal in their own name, asking for time under S. 5 Lim. Act, but that is a separate case and will be dealt with by the original Court. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondent's costs.

Second Appeal No 12-B of 1929, Decided on 5th July 1929, from decree of Spl. Addl Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 17th October 1928, in Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1928.

Mahomedan Law—Divorce— False tcharge of adultery against wife—Conditional retraction is not retraction in law and wife is entitled to decree.

A person preferred a false charge of adultery against his wife. He made a conditional retraction in the course of the pleadings in the suit brought by the wife for dissolution of marriage.

Judgment — This second appeal is directed against the decree for dissolution of plaintiff's marriage with the defendant passed by the Subordinate Judge Second Class No. 3, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 301 of 1927 and confirmed by the Special Additional District Judge in Civil Appeal No 47 of 1928. Both the lower Courts have concurrently held that the defendant did prefer a false charge of adultery on oath against the plaintiff, his wife, that he did not make retraction of the same as required by law and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to have a decree for dissolution of marriage passed against the defendant

There is no force in either of the grounds of appeal. It is abundantly proved by documentary evidence on record that the appellant on two occasions before the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had stated on oath that "her uncle Abdul Rahim is having immoral relation with her," the plaintiff. The defendant was also subsequently convicted under S. 500, I. P. C, with respect to this defamatory statement. The conditional retraction made by him in the course of the pleadings in the suit is no retraction in law. The plaintiff was, therefore, rightly given a decree for dissolution of marriage: Zafar Husan v. Ummatur-Rahman (1). The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 50.

W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

G. L Subhedar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts which I have to consider are these: A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed by which the defendants were directed to pay over Rs. 7,000 to the plaintiff on or before 13th February 1927. An appeal was decided on 5th February 1927, and the decretal amount was reduced considerably. Mr. Subhedar for defendant 3 asked that the date for payment should be extended and on 10th February 1927, the date fixed for payment was changed from 13th February 1926 to 10th March 1927. It may be conceded that as the fixation of the date for payment was not discussed when defendant 3 was present in person, Mr. Subhedar was unable to press for a longer date, but the fixation of a date one month ahead should have impressed upon defendant 3 the necessity for prompt payment. The payment was not made before the due date and an application for final decree was made on 22nd March 1927. The case was adjourned for hearing twice for want of time. Then on 25th June 1927, defendant 3 tendered Rs. 2,500 in part payment and prayed for time till the next harvest to pay the balance. The plaintiff refused to accept part payment and defendant 3 was directed to deposit the amount in Court and submit in writing his grounds for extension of time. The case was adjourned till 16th July 1927. Defendant 3 submitted his statement and on 16th July 1927, he was ready to pay the decretal amount. He had, however, not brought any amount as interest by way of compensation or as costs to be paid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff again refused to receive the amount. Statements were taken and on 19th November 1927, the Judge held that an extension of time should be granted on condition that some interest was paid. Interest was paid and the Judge passed a final decree to the effect that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied.

In appeal it is urged that as the judgment-debtors did not show sufficient cause for their failure to pay the amount within the time fixed, the lower Court could not legally extend the time. Now, the reasons given by the lower Court are: (1) that it was not a small amount that the defendant had to pay and (2) that payment had been made after a small delay of four months, It appears to have followed the dictum in Govinda v. Gangaram (1) that

"where a few days after the fixed time the mortgagor pays down the whole of the mortgage-money he should not forfeit his estate."

This dictum is quoted with apparent approval in Balkishan v. Atmaram (2) but this judgment contains a statement on p. 157 that the Court has to be satisfied that there is good cause for extending time and that this good cause is not to be assumed either from non-payment or delayed payment. The judgment of the Privy Council in Motilal v. Ujjar Singh (3) makes it clear that an extension cannot be granted unless good cause is shown The facts that the amount is large and that payment has been made within a few months do not, by themselves, constitute good cause The first Court, then had no material before it to use the discretion to enlarge the time fixed. The decree passed must, therefore, be set aside

But the facts of this case differ from those considered in Motilal v. Ujjar Singh (3) In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council had before them a definite finding that there was no good cause for extension In the present case defendant 3 asked for extension by a statement referring to the bad harvest during the previous year and other matters This statement is belated and appears to refer primarily to a difficulty in raising the money in July 1927, but it can be considered an attempt to show that good cause existed for non-payment prior to 10th March 1927 The truth of the statement and its sufficiency, if true, has not been considered by the first Court. I, therefore, direct the first Court to consider the reasons given by defendant 3 and to come to the conclusion whether he had good cause for the delay in making the payment. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the suit.

W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

Judgment —The plaintiff's suit was for recovery of Rs 40 as damages for the breach of contract of marriage. Defendant 1 was to have been married to the plaintiff. Defendant 2 is her brother and defendant 3 a mere stranger but is alleged to have contributed to the breach Defendants 1 and 3 denied knowledge of the contract but defendant 2 admitted its existence but pleaded breach on the part of the plaintiff.

The pleadings led to the framing of the following issues for trial :

1. Had the plaintiff agreed to give a field to defendant 1 before the performance of marriage ?
2. Who is responsible for the breach of the contract of marriage ?
3. Whether plaintiff incurred actual damages on account of the breach of contract, if so, to what extent ?
4. What amount of damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover from the defendants ?

Before, however, the evidence was recorded the matter in dispute was referred by the parties to the arbitration of certain panchas who submitted their award on 7th December 1926. But as award gave no findings on issues 2, 3 and 4, it was remitted to the panchas for proper disposal with directions that, if they thought it necessary parties or witnesses may be further examined. The award was duly completed and again filed in Court on 20th December 1926 and defendant 2 filed certain objections to the same. His principal ground of attack against the validity of the award was that he or his witnesses were not further examined by the arbitrators after the award was returned to them. It was, however, admitted that he and his witnesses were already examined before the award was first drawn up.

The trial Court found no substance in this objection and passed a decree in terms of the award directing defendant 2 to pay to the plaintiff Rs 141 as damages The Court further ordered defendant 2 to pay the costs of the plaintiff. Against this decree all three defendants appealed though no decree was passed against defendants 1 and 3 The lower appellate Court held that no appeal lay against the decree and assuming that it did lie, it held that no irregularity of procedure adopted by the arbitrators was pointed out to justify the upsetting of the award. The first appeal was accordingly dismissed and again all the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

It was urged by the appellant's learned pleader that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that no first appeal lay to that Court. But in view of the principle laid down in Ibrahim Ali v. Mohsin Ali (1), Ravjibhai v. Dahyabhai (2) and Gulam Khan v Muhammad Husain (3), it is clear that no appeal lay against the first Court's decree which was in accord with the terms of the award and particularly when the trial Court did entertain and decide all the objections preferred by the appellants against the validity of the award.

It was also contended that because the arbitrators did not make any notes of the statements of the parties or take down the depositions of the witnesses examined by them their proceedings were void but no authority has been shown to me in support of this contention. Para. 10, Sch 2, Civil P. C, only says that the award is to be filed in Court :

"together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved" before the arbitrators and it was suggested that this paragraph postulates that depositions of witnesses must be reduced to writing. I do not think this suggession is sound. The paragraph in question undoubtedly contemplates the possibility of the depositions of witnesses being reduced to writing by the arbitrators but does not oblige them to keep such a record. The appeal fails and is dismissed with all costs

Misc Petn. No 15 of 1929, Decided on 1st August 1929, for leave to appeal to Privy Council from the decision of this Court reported in A I. R. 1929 Nag. 50

(a) Income-tax Act, S 66-A (2)—When the matter referred to comes before civil Court, Commissioner is a party.

The Act in providing that the Commissioner in proper cases should make references to the civil Court, merely provides a convenient procedure for obtaining the decision of the Court with regard to the matter in dispute and so when the matter comes before the civil Court the Commissioner is a party A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 1, Rel. on. [P 266 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 110—Question to decide when debt becomes bad—Case is "otherwise" fit.

The question whether an assessee has an absolute option to decide in what year a debt due to him or any of that debt is to be treated as irrecoverable and therefore to affect an amount of profits received in that year is of great public importance and the case is "otherwise" fit for appeal to the Privy Council A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 242 and 23 All. 227 (P.C.), Ref. [P 266 C 1, 2]

D N. Choudhri—for Applicant.

M. R. Bobde—for Non-Applicant.

Order.— The Commissioner of Income-tax asks for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of S. 66-A (2), Income-tax Act, 11 of 1922, against the final order of this Court passed on a reference under S. 66 (2) of the Act. The respondent raises a preliminary objection that S. 66-A does not authorize an appeal by the Commissioner of Income-tax to the Privy Council. His ground is that the Commissioner of Income-tax cannot be considered a party as he exercises the functions of a Court in making a reference to the civil Court. We hold that the Income-tax Act, in providing that the Commissioner in proper cases should make reference to the Court, merely provides a convenient procedure for obtaining the decision of a Court with regard to the matter in dispute. When the matter comes before the civil Court the Commissioner of Income-tax is a party A Collector also can make a reference under the Land Acquisition Act, and it has never been doubted that the Collector is a party in the proceedings of a civil Court. The practice of the Privy Council is sufficient to remove any doubt on this point. In appeals by the assessee the Commissioner of Income-tax is treated as respondent and in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Western Indian Turf Club, Ltd. (1) the Commissioner of Income-tax was considered to be the appellant.

In Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi (2), it was held that the provisions of S. 66 A, Income-tax Act, exclude from any right of appeal cases which fall within the requirements of S. 110 of the Code and are operative to confine that right to cases which are certified to be otherwise fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We have, therefore, to decide whether this case is "otherwise" fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Banarsi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (3), have stated that the provision authorizing a High Court to certify that the case is fit for appeal "otherwise" is clearly intended to meet special cases: such, for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. The applicant urges that the point in dispute is of great public importance.

The point which is in dispute is briefly this. Has an assessee an absolute option to decide in what year a debt due to him or any part of that debt is to be treated as irrecoverable and therefore to affect the amount of profits received in that year? It cannot, we think, be denied that this point is of great public importance. Every trader or money lender contracts bad debts. If he is aware that he has an absolute option to abstain from writing off these debts in a year when such abstention will not greatly increase his tax, he will frequently or even generally utilize that option in order to save income-tax. A petty trader, whose income but for this device would in many years exceed the taxable minimum, can write off in a considerable proportion of these years just enough of a bad debt to bring his income below the minimum. As assessee with a considerably larger income can write off just sufficient to reduce the rate of assessment in years in which, if he has not full option to choose the time of writing off, his income would be slightly above the maximum for which a certain rate is taken. A still wealthier trader or money lender can utilize the option in order to escape super-tax, refraining from writing off bad debts in years when his income is below the super-tax limit. The existence of this option then whon it becomes known will have a very considerable effect on the receipts of Government from income-tax.

The sum in dispute in this case is stated to be about Rs. 1,000, but the sums affected in individual cases by exercise of the option, will in most cases be even smaller. In the present case the point in dispute was referred to a Full Bench. We do not consider it likely that a case more suitable for certification will come before this Court in the near future. The counsel for the non-applicant did not urge that the grant of the certificate when the sum in dispute was so small would involve great hardship on his client, and we do not think that the grant does involve undue hardship The amount placed in jeopardy by the grant is a small fraction of the income of the non-applicant for a single year, and the non applicant will not be saddled with the costs of the applicant in appeal unless their Lordships of the Privy Council consider that this is just. We therefore certify that the case is fit for appeal on the ground that the point in dispute is of great public importance. Costs incurred in this Court will be borne as incurred.

Second Appeal No. 419-B of 1927, Decided on 29th July 1929, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 30th September 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 96 of 1925.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 95 — Transfer by mortgagee of mortgaged property—No mention in deed that only mortgage rights were intended to be sold—Presumption is that whole property is sold—If absence of assertion of absolute ownership in the deed makes it possible to hold that only mortgagee's rights were sold, there is latent ambiguity and evidence can be given to remove it—Limitation Act, Art. 134.

Where a mortgagee transferred the mortgaged property and there was no mention in the deed that only mortgage rights were intended, to be transferred the mere fact that it is mentioned in the deed that the property stood in the khata of the mortgagor and that there is an indemnity clause cannot justify the contention that only mortgage rights were intended, and if the absence of any assertion in the deed of absolute ownership on the part of the vendor mortgagee makes it possible to hold that mortgagee's rights were sold, there is a latent ambiguity to remove which evidence can be given. 14 *M. Judgment.—This appeal arises from a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage. After the death of the mortgagee his son sold the property mortgaged in 1907 The suit for redemption having been brought more than 12 years after the transfer has been held to be time-barred under Art 134, Sch. 1, to the Limitation Act It is urged, in the first place, that the sale was merely of the mortgagee's rights and not an absolute sale of the property and that the finding of both the lower Courts that it was an absolute sale is based on an inadmissible oral evidence as to the intention of the parties There is no mention of mortgage rights in the deed and prima facie it purports to be a sale of the property and not of those rights. The fact that it is mentioned in the deed that the fields comprised in the property stood in the khata of Baliram Kunbi, the original mortgagor, and the fact that there is an indemnity clause cannot prove that mortgage rights only were transferred. If it can be held that the absence of any assertion in the deed of absolute ownership on the part of the vendor makes it possible to hold that only the mortgagees's rights were sold, a view which appears to have been taken by the Privy Council in Radanath Doss v Gisborne & Co. (1), then, there is a latent ambiguity to remove which evidence can be given.

For the appellant it is argued that the fact that no enquiry into the title of the vendor was made by the purchasers is evidence that only the mortgage rights were transferred This argument is based on Muthaya Chetti v. Kandhappa Chetti (2) in which at p 438 it is said :

"If, for instance, it should appear that the purchaser refrained from calling for and examining the title-deeds and from examining the register of assurances, or from enquiry as to who was in possession of the property, or otherwise abstained from means available to him of ascertaining the title or that he in fact inspected the mortgage document under which the vendor claimed the property, there would be evidence upon which the Court might hold that the parties did not intend to transfer an absolute property but such interest only as was vested in the transferrer, or possibly that the mortgagee intended to commit a fraud upon the mortgagor and that the transferee was accessory thereto or did not act in good faith."

It will be seen that this decision does not lay it down as a necessary deduction from the fact that no enquiry was made, that only mortgage rights were intended to be transferred ; and the oral evidence makes it clear that in the present case that was not the intention, a point on which there are concurrent findings by both the lower Courts.

As to the other possible inference suggested in the Madras decision, it appears to me immaterial whether the purchasers acted in good faith or not. The words "in good faith" occurred in the provisions of the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871, which correspond to Art. 134 of the present Act. They have, however, been omitted in the Acts of 1877 and 1908, and their omission cannot be without significance. It has been held in Keshav Raghunath v. Gafurkhan (3), Baluswamy Ayyar v. Venkataswamy Naicken (4), and Rukku Shetti v. Ramachandraya (5), that good faith is immaterial and that Art. 134, applies, even if the transferee knew that the transferrer was only a mortgagee. Art. 134 applies to transfers by trustees and mortgagees, and in Rustomji's Law of Limitation a distinction is suggested between transfers by these two classes. That distinction has been rejected in Rukku Shetti v. Ramchandraya (5), and it is difficult to see how it can be drawn, in face of the clear wording of the Article, which leaves no room for any such distinction.

Prima facie then the suit was time-barred, but the plaintiff-appellant relies on the fact, that he has brought his suit within three years of his attaining majority, in order to save limitation. The lower Courts have, however, held that S. 7, Lim. Act, applies ; firstly because time began to run in the lifetime of the plaintiff's father, who was the manager of the joint family, and, secondly, because the plaintiff's elder brother did not sue for redemption within three years of attaining majority : he also is held to have been the manager of the family It has been argued that the inaction of the elder brother does not affect the plaintiff's right to sue. Reliance is placed in the decision in Shampuri v. Ramchandra (A. I. R. 1925 Nagpur 385) and the Privy Council decision in Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (6) In the first of these cases the decision appears to me to have turned on the fact that the elder brother was not necessarily and had not been proved to be the manager of the family ; and in the second also the elder brother does not appear to have been the manager In cases in which the elder brother was the manager of the family Rati Ram v. Niadar (7), and Bupu Tatya v. Bala Ravji (8), a suit barred as against him has been held barred as against the younger brother. Moreover, no argument has been addressed to me to show that the inaction of the plaintiff's father does not lead to the plaintiff's suit being barred He clearly was in a position to bind the plaintiff, and time began to run against him from the date of the transfer I agree with the finding of the lower Courts that the suit is barred The appeal is dismissed with costs

D W. Kathaley and T. Hiralal—for Appellant.

W. R. Puranik and M. R. Bobde—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the judgment of the lower Court. The only question with which I am concerned is whether the payment of court-fees by the present plaintiff-appellant on 1st October 1924 has retrospective effect, or whether the suit should be deemed to have been instituted on the actual date of payment of court-fees. The plaintiff-appellant's contention is that he is entitled to exclusion of time from 18th June 1923 to 1st October 1924, which time is said to have been spent in proceedings in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge first class, taken with a view to being allowed to sue as a pauper The said application for leave to sue as a pauper was dismissed by the Court in question on 22nd February 1924, but thereafter the applicant asked the Court to keep the case pending as he intended applying for revision to this Court against the dismissal of the application. Meanwhile, the application was dismissed and the Court gave time until 1st October 1924 for payment of court-fees There can be no question in the present case but that the applicant was able to pay court-fees and that his application to sue as a pauper was one made in bad faith

An argument has been addressed to me in this Court to the effect that the provisions of S. 149, Civil P C., apply to the case It is urged that the payment of court-fees made on 1st October 1924, in effect, validated the original application for leave to sue as a pauper and the decision in Achut Ramachandra v. Nagappa Bab Balgaya (1) has been referred to in this connexion I am wholly unable to accept the view that S. 149, Civil P. C, has any application to the facts of the present case No suit had been instituted when the application for leave to sue as a pauper was filed, that was a preliminary proceedings as laid down in O. 33, Civil P. C.

The only question, therefore with which I am concerned, is whether if there has been fraud on the part of the plaintiff in applying to sue as a pauper by setting up a false case of pauperism he is entitled, nevertheless, to claim the benefit of S 14, Lim. Act, if his application to sue as a pauper has been dismissed and he pays court-fees on a date when the limitation for suit has expired. I have not the slightest hesitation in holding that the position urged on behalf of the plaintiff in this connexion cannot for a moment be supported. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Stuart Skinner v. William Orde (2) clearly cannot govern the present case because, in it, there was no question of malafides or fraud on the part of the plaintiff. That their Lordships might have come to a different decision had such mala fides or fraud been proved, is clear from the remarks at p. 248 of the judgment. The view I take in this connexion finds support in the decision of Sargent C. J., and Parsons, J., in Keshao Ramchandra v. Krishna Rao Venkatesh (3) and in Aubhoya Churn Dey v. Bissesuari (4). I am of opinion that where an application for leave to sue as a pauper has been disposed of and dismissed and where, moreover, it has been found that the application was made in bad faith, any payment of court-fees made thereafter cannot operate retrospectively for the purpose of calculation of limitation. The suit has, therefore, been properly dismissed as time barred and I dismiss the present appeal. The appellant must bear the respondent's costs. Costs in lower Court as already ordered Only pleaders fees will be allowed.

Second Appeal No. 215 of 1928, Decided on 25th July 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 26th January 1928, in Civil Appeal No. 126 of 1927

 Easements Act, S. 60 (6)—Licensee constructing permanent building on licensor's site under implied license— License is irrevocable as to building and licensee cannot be ejected—Irrevocability is restricted to portion covered by building.

If a person constructs a permanent building on a portion of the site belonging to another under an implied license from him, the license cannot be revoked and the licensee cannot be ejected from the building. The irrevocability of the license in such a case applies to that portion of the site which is covered by the building and not to any other open portion of the site: 8 All. 69, Rel. on. [P 270 C 2]

Abdul Razak—for Appellant.

Fida Husain—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts leading to this second appeal are briefly these: About 30 years ago the plaintiff's husband died leaving three kachcha houses in the town of Mandla. The defendant is the plaintiff's brother's son and lived at Jubbulpore with his mother. In 1901 he was invited by the plaintiff to come and stay with her in one of these houses and since then the parties are admittedly occupying the house which is the subject matter of the present suit All the three houses were dismantled and new ones put up in their places at different periods of time from 1908 onwards. The plaintiff's story is that the cost of construction of all the three was borne by her though the money was actually disbursed through the hands of the defendant, while the defendant's version is that after he came over to the plaintiff she gifted the whole of her property including the old houses to him on condition of his maintaining her all her life, and that he rebuilt all the three houses at his cost and had otherwise acquired a title thereto by adverse possession.

The plaintiff had brought the present suit to eject the defendant from the occupation of the parties, though each of them occupy separate portions. The trial Court held that the alleged gift was not proved, that the houses were not constructed at the defendant's expense, and that the defendant did not become the owner of the house in dispute by adverse possession. The claim was accordingly decreed

On defendant's appeal, the District Judge, Jubbulpore, concurred with the trial Court in holding that the alleged gift was not proved and that no question of adverse possession arose in the case, but he dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that because the defendant had spent his own money in rebuilding the house with plaintiff's acquiescence he could not be turned out of it by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff has come up in second appeal and it is contended on her behalf that the lower appellate Court erred in holding that because the defendant paid for the construction of the house he had become the owner of it. Mr. Fida Husain, who appeared for the defendant respondent, stated that the lower appellate Court has not decided that the defendant had become the owner of the house. All that is decided by the District Judge is that the defendant was a licensee of the land, and since the superstructure was constructed by the defendant at some cost and was of a permanent character the license could not be revoked under S 60 (6), Easement Act. But in view of the principle enunciated in the Land Mortgage Bank of India v. Moti (1) the irrevocability would only apply in the present case to that portion of the site which is covered by the building and not to any other open portion of the site. The result indeed is very unsatisfactory to both sides, but as the law stands there is no escape from it I would, therefore, uphold the decision of the lower appellate Court and declare that because the defendant has constructed permanent building on a portion of the site belonging to the plaintiff under an implied license from the plaintiff the license cannot be revoked and defendant cannot be ejected from the building; but that so far as the unbuilt portion of the site is concerned there is no license in favour of the defendant and the plaintiff is the owner thereof along with the building in dispute itself stands

After the conclusion of the arguments Mr Abdul Razak for the plaintiff presented an application for permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the allegation that the pleadings were defective and the whole trial consequently unsatisfactory. As the application is opposed by the respondent I see no reason to grant it. The second appeal fails and is dismissed. But as the operative finding of the lower appellate Court was not very clear I direct that the costs of the second appeal be borne by the parties as incurred.

The finding of the lower appellate Court cannot be set aside merely on the ground that undue weight was laid on certain facts which it was proper to consider. [P 271 C 2]

(c) Hindu Law—Debt—Manager — Bonds executed by adult members—Subsequent borrowing on bond executed by only one such member and executant not described as manager—Creditor must prove that money was borrowed on subsequent bond by him in capacity of manager and that there was necessity.

Where a joint Hindu family was in difficulties and borrowed money on bonds executed by certain adult members of the family and subsequently money was borrowed on a bond executed by only one of such members but he was not described in the bond as manager, the creditor must prove that money was borrowed in his capacity of manager and that either there was necessity for the loan or the creditor after due enquiry had reason to believe that there was such necessity. [P 271 C 2]

D. W. Kathalay—for Appellant

M. R. Bobde—for Respondents.

Judgment—The suit out of which this appeal arises was based on bonds executed by Manaji. It is admitted before me that Manaji, in the bonds, is not described as manager of the joint Hindu family. The lower appellate Court has held that Manaji was the manager of the joint family but has disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiffs that the money borrowed was taken for family purposes and that the bond executed in 1924 acknowledged the debts due in the previous bonds on behalf of the family Manaji is dead and the suit against the surviving members of the joint family has accordingly been dismissed

The argument in appeal is as follows: The District Judge has based his judgment, to a very large extent, on an inference drawn from the fact that the plaintiffs obtained the signatures of other adult members of the family on previous bonds. This inference, which is not justified, caused him to reject the evidence of respectable witnesses which had been accepted by the first Court. Therefore, although the first Court's decision regarding the effect of the evidence must stand final as to the facts, it is the soundness of the conclusions drawn from the facts that is in question, and this is a matter of law: Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (1). The conclusions of the District Judge can, therefore, be challenged in appeal.

Now, in 1916 the bonds were executed in favour of the plaintiffs by three adult members of the family. In 1920 plaintiff 1 Balwant Rao (P. W. 1) wrote to Nago Rao about one or both of these bonds and, in consequence, in July 1920, a fresh bond was written. It is admitted before me that this fresh bond was executed by the three adult members. Part of the debt, on account of which the present suit is instituted, was lent in August 1920; the bond was signed by Manaji alone. Plaintiff 1, as P W. 1, states that Manaji said it was unnecessary for the others to come and execute the bond, as he had authority to borrow on behalf of the family. It must be admitted that the lower appellate Court was correct in laying some weight on the fact that, whereas the signatures of three members had been taken on the former bond, the signature of Manaji alone was taken on this bond.

The family has been in money difficulties for many years and it is not improbable that the money was borrowed by Manaji for purposes of cultivation, but it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the money was borrowed by Manaji in his capacity of manager and that either there was necessity for the loan, or the plaintiffs, after due enquiry, had reason to believe that there was such necessity The plaintiffs' evidence on these points has been disbelieved I might have come to a different conclusion with regard to this evidence, but I am unable to set aside the finding of the final tribunal merely on the ground that undue weight was laid on certain facts which it was proper to consider. The evidence of the plaintiffs has been rejected and, without that evidence, it is not possible to hold that the money must have been borrowed by Manaji in his capacity of manager for the purpose of carrying on the agriculture of the family since it is not impossible that the plaintiffs were content to lend money to Manaji in his personal capacity. The same considerations apply to both bonds on which money was advanced and to the bond which was the renewal of one of the former bonds. The appeal therefore, fails and is dismissed. Costs on appellant.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 426 of 1928, Decided on 10th July 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Damoh, D/- 8th October 1928 in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1928.

J. Sen—for Applicant.

N. G. Bose—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This is an application for revision against the finding of the Additional District Judge, Damoh, on an issue framed in the suit with regard to a document tendered in evidence, its admissibility and the value of the stamp payable upon it The document in question purports to be a deed of adoption executed by Motiram in favour of the applicant Ajodhya Prasad. It was written upon a stamp of Re. 1, but was produced before the Collector under S. 41, Stamp Act, and has been certified and endorsed by the Collector under S. 42 of the Act upon payment of R. 20 as duty.

The lower Court has held that the document, although purporting to be a deed of adoption is really a deed of gift as it transfers the whole of the executant's property in favour of the applicant Adjodhya Prasad, and has relied upon Bhagwan Prasad v. Hari Singh (1). The lower Court has then proceeded to hold that the document is inadmissible in evidence without a proper stamp and has declared the stamp duty to be Rs. 1,500 and the penalty Rs. 15,000 and has recorded a finding that the document is not admissible as a deed of gift until the applicant, defendant 1 pays Rs 16,500 as duty and penalty The application for revision is against this finding.

Two points appear to have been overlooked by the Judge of the lower Court. The first is that the deed does not mention the value of the property and therefore according to In the matter of Muhammad Muzaffar Ali (2) which was a decision upon a reference made by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority under S. 57, Stamp Act, the deed does not require a stamp under the Act; the second point is that, as mentioned above the deed has been validated and certified by the Collector under S. 42 of the Act and is therefore admissible in evidence. The lower Court has brushed this fact aside by simply stating that the document has been stamped as an authority to adopt and not as a deed of gift. But whether the Collector made a mistake or not in the matter, I am of opinion that this decision is now binding and final and that it cannot be disturbed or set aside by the civil Court. In this connexion I have been referred by the learned counsel for the applicant to Tukaram v. Somaji (3). I am of opinion, then, that the finding of the lower Court is bad on both grounds and cannot be upheld. I therefore set aside the finding of the lower Court as regards the stamp duty leviable upon the document and its admissibility in evidence, and instead record a finding that the deed must now be held to be sufficiently stamped and that it is admissible in evidence. Costs of this application will be payable by the non-applicant. I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 10 as the application was not opposed and was heard ex parte.

Misc. Appeal No. 10-B of 1929, Decided on 3rd July 1929, against the order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amraoti, D/- 17th April 1929.

When the Code specifically gives a right of appeal against order passed under O. 39, R. 2, a person cannot be deprived of his right of appeal merely because the lower Court acts under O. 39, O. 2 by virtue of S. 141. 9 N. L. R. 33, Expl.; A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 62, Rel. on. [P 273 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 39, R. 2—Temporary injunction against person not to get girl married—He not responsible for promoting marriage but not doing all to prevent it—He does not actually disobey order as passed and order for his detention in prison cannot stand.

Where a temporary injunction was obtained against a person directing him not to get the girl who had gone to his house married and when the person was not responsible in promoting or bringing about the marriage but did not do all that he could do to prevent it, it cannot be said that he actually disobeyed the order as it was passed and so an order for his detention in prison is incompetent. [P 274 C 1]

W. A. Forbes—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case the appellant, Mohammed Wazir Agha, has been directed to be detained in the civil prison for a term of one month under O. 39, R. 2, in Sch. 1, Civil P. C. The proceedings arose out of a case under the Guardians and Wards Act. A girl, Rahimatbi, who had been living with the respondent Abdul Gafoor, left his house and came to that of the appellant. Abdul Gafoor applied to be appointed guardian of the girl and obtained a temporary injunction against Mohammad Wazir Agha directing him not to get the girl married pending disposal of the application. The girl, nevertheless, was married on 1st August 1927. Action was then taken under O 39, R. 2, against Mohammad Wazir Agha for his disobedience of the Court's injunction after an application for the prosecution of Mohammad Wazir Agha under S. 188, I. P. C., had failed.

It has been argued on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies in this case and reference has been made to Faridbi v. Mohammad Amin (1). The argument is that the Court in a case under the Guardian and Wards Act could only act under O. 39, R. 2, by virtue of S. 141 and that S. 141 relates to procedure only and does not confer a right of appeal. Gabba v. Kanchhedilal (2), which was decided by the same Judge as Faridbi v. Mohammad Amin (1), shows that the latter ruling was not intended to have a very wide effect that the respondent would give it and when the Civil P. C. specifically gives a right of appeal against orders passed under O. 39, R. 2, I am unable to hold that the appellant is deprived of his right of appeal merely because the lower Court has acted under O. 39, R. 2, by virtue of S. 141.

The question then is whether the appellant has disobeyed the injunction of the Court His plea is that it was the girl herself who, with the connivance of some of the inmates of the house, left his house and went and got married without his knowledge. It is clear that the appellant himself was not present at the marriage but the lower Court has found that he arranged it. If the evidence of the Kazi, Nur Mohammad and of a tongawala, Sheikh Hussain, is believed, then the case against the appellant is clear. Nur Mohammad says that a week or ten days before the marriage actually took place Mohammad Wazir Agha asked him to perform it and that he promised to do so if someone was responsible for the girl. Sheikh Hussain, who carried the girl and two others from the appellant's house, says that his hire was paid by the appellant I cannot, however, believe these two witnesses. Even if the appellant was responsible for the marriage, it is clear that he was keeping himself carefully from taking any ostensible part in it and I do not think that he would himself have approached the Kazi or would himself have paid the tongawala, thereby clearly implicating himself It is noteworthy that the Kazi knew of the Court's injunction but said nothing to the appellant about it and made no objection to performing the marriage on that account. This seems to me to throw additional suspicion upon his evidence.

Ignoring the evidence of Nur Mohammad and the tongawala all we have proved is that Rahimatbi got married with the assistance of Mohammad Yusuf, who lives in the appellant's house but is not related to him. I do not for a moment believe the evidence of the girl Rahimatbi that she fled alone from the appellant's house, that she met by chance the brother of the man to whom she is now married and told him that she wanted to get married, although she did not know him previously, and that he then arranged for her marriage to his brother; but I do not think that it necessarily follows that the appellant was responsible for the marriage. It is not clear what his interest in the girl was or why he should want to get her married, while it is clear that the girl did not want to go back to Abdul Gafoor's house. It seems to me quite possible and, in view of the Court's injunction, very probable that the appellant did not take any part in promoting the marriage. He may not have done all that he could do to prevent it; but then he was not ordered to prevent the marriage but merely not to arrange for it himself and I am unable to find that he has disobeyed the order as it was passed.

He has put in an affidavit to show that he reported to the police the girl's disappearance from his house and the likelihood that she would get married. I think that he might reasonably have been expected to do more and might have told the Court what the position was and that he was not in a position to prevent the marriage although he could undertake not to promote it. He appears to have done the minimum to comply with the Court's order but as he has not been proved actually to have disobeyed it, I do not think that the lower Court's order for his detention in prison can stand. It is accordingly set aside. As I cannot approve of the appellant's conduct, I do not propose to give him costs. Each party will bear his own costs.

(c) Practice—New plea.

A new cause of action cannot be taken in second appeal. [P 275 C 2]

M. B. Niyogi—for Appellant.

N. G. Bose—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises from a suit on a promissory note executed by Kesheo, defendant 2, in favour of the plaintiff, Bankidas. Tanabai has been impleaded on allegations that Kesheo, who is her son-in-law, had been managing her estate and had authority from her to pass document as her agent, and that the promissory note in suit was passed by him in that capacity. The lower appellate Court relying on the decision in Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kisan Pershad (1) has found that Kesho alone is liable on the promissory note.

It is first contended in second appeal on behalf of the plaintiff that the document in question is not a promissory note and is not governed by the Negotiable Instruments Act. Reference has been made to Venku v. Sitaram (2) in which it was held that a document, not dissimilar in terms from the one that I am considering, was a bond and not a promissory note, because it was attested and was not payable to order or bearer and because the executant obliged himself to pay the amount to another. This decision merely reproduced the terms of Cl. (b) of the definition "bond" in S. 2 (5), Stamp Act 1899, and it was not because the document was not payable to order or bearer that it was excluded from the definition of "promissory note" in S. 4, Negotiable Instruments Act. Under that section a document like the present one, which contains simply a promise to pay on demand a certain sum to a specified person, is a promissory note: see Ill. (b). To be a negotiable instrument a promissory note, under S. 13 (1), must be payable either to order or to bearer, but explanation (i) to S. 13 (1) shows that a promissory note, which is expressed to be payable to a particular person, and does not contain words prohibiting transfer or indicating an intention that it shall not be transferable, is payable to order.

Under this explanation the promissory note that I am considering is a negotiable instrument, and will be governed by Ss. 27 and 28 of the Act. With regard to S. 27, it has been remarked in Subba Narayan Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar (3), that the effect of this section is that the principal can only be made liable through his agent on a negotiable instrument when the agent acts, as here prescribed in his principal's name, that is, when he signs as agent, and that an undisclosed principal cannot be sued on a negotiable instrument. In the case of Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kisan Pershad (1), relied on by the lower appellate Court it was decided by the Privy Council that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable document should be clearly stated on the face or on the back of the document, and that it is not sufficient that the name of the principal should be "in some way" disclosed; it must be disclosed in such a way that on any fair interpretation of the instrument his name is the real name of the person liable on the bill. The principle on which this case was decided was applied in Sreelal Mangtulal v. Lister Antiseptic Dressing Co. Ltd. (4) and Sitaram Krishna v. Chimandas Fatechand (5). In those two cases the question was whether the name of the principal had been sufficiently disclosed on the document. In the present case no such question arises, as according to the promissory note only Kesheo is liable.

It is urged, however, that the suit has not been brought on the promissory note alone but also on the debt for the satisfaction of which the promissory note was executed That, however, does not appear to me to be the case. There are pleadings as regards the debts to satisfy which the note was executed and as to Tanabai's liability for those debts, in support of the plea that Kesheo acted as her agent in executing the note But the suit was, in fact, on the note and has been dealt with by the lower Courts on that basis. The plea that Tanabai is liable on another cause of action cannot be taken in this Court for the first time for one reason, the question of limitation would at once arise and would, as far as I can see, defeat the plea, but that is a question that I need not go into I hold that the suit is on the promissory note and that Tanabai whose liability is in no way shown upon the document cannot be made liable to the plaintiff The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Order.—On the basis of a promissory note the applicant defendant was sued by the non-applicant plaintiff in the Court of Second Class Subordinate Judge No. 4, Akola. During the pendency of the suit it was alleged that the matter was compromised and a decree in terms of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. was asked for. After investigation the trial Court, however, held that no compromise was made and proceeded with the trial of the case in the ordinary way. The defendant preferred an appeal against the finding that no compromise was proved but the First Additional District Judge, Akola, rejected the appeal holding that no appeal lay from such an order under O. 43, R. 1 (m), Civil P. C. It is against this order that the present application for revision has been filed.

It is contended that the wording of O. 43, R. 1 (m) is clear and that a finding that no compromise is effected would fall within its purview. The view expressed in the case of Shanti Sarup v. Jahangir, A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 248 on which the lower appellate Court relied appears not to have been followed by the same Court in a later case of Kishore Chand v. Hans Raj, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 39 wherein it was held that all orders refusing to record a compromise under O. 23, R. 3, would be appealable whatever the reasons for refusal may be. This view appears to be in consonance with common sense and can also come within the purview of the wording of O. 43, R. 1 (m), Civil P C. If an appeal is permissible to a party who is aggrieved by an order recording a compromise, whatever the reasons behind the order may be, it is but just that similar remedy should be available to a party aggrieved by the order refusing to record a compromise. I, therefore, allow this application for revision, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal to that Court for disposal on merits. Pleader's fee in this Court Rs. 25. Court-fees Act, S. 7 (5)—Suit not for declaration but merely for possession—Court-fee on actual relief only need be paid.

If the plaintiff does not claim a declaration in his plaint that a decree under which the defendant holds possession is not binding upon him but sues for possession simpliciter, he need pay court-fee only on the actual relief claimed: 50 All. 610, Rel. on; 38 Mad. 1184, Ref. [P 276 C 2]

W. B. Pendharkar—for Applicant.

Order.—The only question for decision in this application for revision is if the plaint is properly stamped. The plaintiff claimed two reliefs : (1) for possession of a field and (2) for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with plaintiff's possession of two fields, and has valued the claim for the first relief for purposes of court-fees under S. 7, Cl. 5 by paying court-fees on five times the revenue payable in respect of the said field. The lower Court following the principle laid down in Rajagopala Naidu v Vijayaraghavalu (1) held that the court-fee was correctly paid.

In support of the revision it is contended that since the grant of the relief for possession involves the setting aside of a decree under which the contending defendant holds possession, the relief claimed should be for declaration that the decree is not binding on the plaintiff and therefore the court-fee should be paid upon Rs. 1,179-12-0 which is the amount of the decree which has to be rendered ineffectual by the declaration. Reliance is placed upon the case of Tula Ram v. Dwarka Das (2) for the contention advanced. But that case clearly decides that if the plaintiff does not claim declaration in the plaint and sues for possession simpliciter he need pay court-fee only on the actual relief claimed. I think the lower Court has decided the point of court-fee correctly

Namdeo—Respondent.

Second Appeal No 67-B of 1928, Decided on 17th April 1929, from decree of 1st Addl. Dist Judge, Akola, D/- 10th October 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 223 of 1927.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Widow—Next reversioner female entitled to absolute estate—Consent of immediate male reversioner is necessary.

Even under the Bombay school where the next reversioner is a female entitled to an absolute estate upon succession the consent of the immediate male reversioner is necessary in order to estop him from challenging the alienation. Mere consent of female reversioner is not sufficient 5 Bom. 563; 25 Bom 129; 34 Bom. 165, Rel. on., 38 Bom. 224, Dist. [P 277 C 2]

M. B. Niyogi and W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

A. S. Athale and G. A. Pande—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this second appeal are shortly these: One Laxman had two daughters Mt Bajai and Mt Sonai and the plaintiff is the son of the latter. After Laxman's death his widow Mt Uma succeeded to the property in dispute and alienated the same to defendant 2 in 1926 for a consideration of Rs. 1,200 said to have been required to meet certain objects of legal necessity. Mt. Uma died about four years ago and the plaintiff brought the present suit as a reversioner of his maternal grandfather for possession of the property in dispute on the allegation that it was illegally alienated by his grandmother.

The suit was resisted on various grounds the principal one being that since the plaintiff's mother, who was the immediate reversioner, had joined her mother in the alienation the same was binding upon the plaintiff. It was also denied that the plaintiff was a reversioner. Both the Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's claim on the finding that the plaintiff was a reversioner and that the sale was not proved to have been for legal necessity. Defendant 2 has, therefore, come up to this Court in second appeal. It is contended for the appellant that the consent of the plaintiff's mother, who was the next reversioner, should be held sufficient to validate the transfer as against the plaintiff. No question of the validity of the alienation does, however, arise in the present case. Mere consent of the next reversioner does not validate an alienation, it is only of evidential value though not conclusive proof of the existence of legal necessity. It merely raises a presumption of the existence of legal necessity and throws the burden of proving the contrary on the actual reversioner, who questions the alienation after the death of the transferring widow. If the consenting reversioner himself is the actual reversioner claiming the alienated estate he will be precluded by his consent from questioning the alienation.

In the present case it is concurrently found by the two lower Courts that the plaintiff was a reversioner of Laxman though not the next reversioner. Therefore, under the Bombay school of Hindu law, when the next reversioner in the present case was a female though entitled to an absolute estate upon succession, the consent of the immediate male reversioner, i. e, the plaintiff, was necessary in order to estop him from challenging the alienation: Varjivan Rangji v. Chelji Gokaldas (1), Vinayak v. Govind (2) and Pilu v. Babaji (3). The case of Mallik Saheb v. Mallik Arjunappa (4) cited by the learned advocate for the appellant was decided on different facts and is no authority for saying that the earlier view of that Court as propounded above was departed from in that case. The case has been correctly decided by the Courts below and this appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

SUBHEDAR, A. J. C.

Emperor

v.

Bhaiyalal—Accused—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 169 of 1929, Decided on 8th June 1929, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Nagpur.

(a) Hindu Law—Marriage—Discarded wife of Kori cannot remarry in absence of legal divorce.

In the absence of a legal divorce even the discarded wife of a Kori will not be able to remarry. [P 278 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Scope.

High Court has got power under S. 439 to grant the permission necessary for compounding offences under S. 345 (2). [P 279 C 1]

(c) Criminal P C., S. 438—Kori convicted for branding his wife and only fined — Recommendation that sentence be enhanced—Compromise between parties and application to High Court for permission to compound offence—In view of nearness of relationship between and interest of parties case was allowed to be compounded.

A Kori branded his wife with hot iron tongs in three places. He was convicted and fined. The District Magistrate reported the case to the High Court for enhancement of sentence. But the parties had compromised their differences and an application was made to High Court signed by the husband and the father of the wife, a minor girl, for permission to compound the offence under S. 345 (2). Compromise was effected in mutual interest of husband and wife.

Held: that the case was a fit case to be compounded in view of the nearness of relationship between parties. A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 191, Rel. on. [P 279 C 1]

Razak—for Non-Applicant

Order.—The non-applicant Bhaiyalal alias Chhotelal Kori who is young lad of 20 years of age was convicted, practically on his own admission, by the Tahsildar & Magistrate, Second Class, Nagpur, under S. 324, I. P. C, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 50 only. The case against the accused was that he had branded his wife Mt Gulabboo with hot iron tongs in three places on account of a petty domestic quarrel.

The District Magistrate, Nagpur, has, under S 438, Criminal P C. reported the case to this Court with the following recommendation:

"The brutality of the act of the accused calls, in my opinion, for a sentence of imprisonment of at least six months. In awarding the sentence of fine, the Magistrate has been influenced by the consideration that the accused was the husband of the girl, who was branded. But I do not consider this a sufficient reason for taking a lenient view of the case. I may note that the accused and his wife are Koris by caste, and remarriage amongst them is permissible."

Mr. Razak who appeared for the non-applicant in showing cause against the recommendation of the District Magistrate presented an application to this Court signed by his client and Hiralal, the father of the minor girl, stating that since the parties have compromised their differences permission of the Court be granted to compound offence under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C.

The principal grounds for the necessity for compounding the offence are given in paras 3 and 4 of the application in these words:

The applicant is a young girl of 16 years and if her husband, the non-applicant, were to be sentenced to imprisonment, the whole family would suffer disgrace, and in that eventuality there is every apprehension of the non-applicant marrying another woman and deserting the applicant. The applicant will not, according to the law governing the parties, be able to marry another person and her whole life will be ruined and blasted.

"It is therefore in the mutual interest of the applicant as well as the non-applicant that the differences between them be removed and the compromise effected and the parties have therefore compounded the offence and seek permission of this Hon'ble Court to file this compromise in Court. As the applicant is a minor her father who is her present guardian is acting on her behalf in this compromise."

It was this consideration of the close relationship between the accused and the assaulted girl wife that led the learned trying Magistrate to deal with him leniently, apparently not to embitter their relationship any further The learned District Magistrate in his recommendation for enhancement of sentence seems to suggest that even if a sentence of imprisonment is inflicted upon the accused with a possible eventuality of his discarding his wife it would not matter at all because the parties "are Koris by caste and remarriage amongst them is permissible" He fails to take account of the fact that in the absence of a legal divorce even the discarded wife of a Kori would not be able to remarry, and that a revengeful husband is not likely to grant the divorce though he may himself marry a second wife.

Hiralal, the father of the minor girl to whom the hurt was caused was examined by me and he admitted having come to terms with his son-in-law, the non-applicant. He also stated that the girl was only 16 years of age and had been staying with him since she was assaulted and that it was at his suggestion that the girl had made a report to the police who after investigation put up the case against the accused before the Court. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case Hiralal must therefore be considered to be competent to compound the case on behalf of his minor daughter under S. 345 (4), Criminal P. C.

There is no doubt that this Court has got the power under S. 439, Criminal P. C., to grant the permission necessary for compounding offences under S 345 (2) ibid. Having regard to the nearness of the relationship between the parties to this case and for the reasons enumerated in grounds 3 and 4 of the petition of compromise, I consider this case to be a fit one to be compounded and therefore accord the necessary permission. In Aminulla v. Emperor (1) it was very pertinently remarked by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court that :

"it is a great pity when parties who are apparently nearly related to one another succeed in patching up their quarrels, that the Magistrate should not do what he can to restore peace and goodwill."

As the matter has now been compounded sub-S 6, S. 345, Criminal P. C., comes into play and I must record an order of acquittal against the accused. The fine paid by him will be refunded.

P S. Kotual, M. B. Niyogi and W. R. Puranik—for Appellant.

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The prosecution of the appellant Tarachand for an offence under S. 193, I. P C, has been ordered by the District Judge, Chhindwara, on 11th July 1928. Neither in the order in question, nor in the complaint sent to the Magistrate of the First Class, Chhindwara, was the particular section of the Indian Penal Code concerned mentioned, but the offence for which the appellant was ordered to be prosecuted, was apparently one under S. 193, or that section read with S 511, I. P. C.

It is unnecessary here to repeat in any detail the facts of the case. It will suffice to say that, in the year 1916, the question of the validity of the adoption of one Uderam was concerned, and the present appellant, who is an influential and old member of the community concerned, gave evidence testifying to the existence and validity of an orphan-adoption in the caste. Curiously enough, in the suit, out of which the present proceedings arose, the validity of the adoption of the same Uderam was again in question and, in his examination-in-chief in the Court of the District Judge, the appellant's evidence was of a kind which was to some extent prima facie contradictory of his earlier statement in 1916. When, in cross-examination, however, that statement was brought to his notice, the appellant then more or less resiled from the position he had taken up in his examination in-chief and admitted the existence of the custom of orphan-adoption as well as its validity ; he, in fact, went back, to all intents and purposes, to the position he had taken in 1916. The learned District Judge was of opinion that a prosecutions for perjury prima facie lay, for alleged contradictions between the appellant's deposition of 1916 and his examination-in-chief in the present case, and for contradictions existing in his later deposition between the examination-in-chief and the cross-examination.

The attention of the District Judge had been called to the decision of Hallifax, A. J. C., in Local Government v. Gambhir Bhujua (1), a decision which, as at present advised, I may say, I see no reason to differ from. In considering this decision, the District Judge has allowed himself to be influenced by the terms of the head-note thereto. I may at once say that if a head-note to a reported case is, in any way, inconsistent or not wholly reconcilable with the body of the judgment, it is the latter that must undoubtedly be looked upon as authoritative The head-note is little more than an index summary, or memoriser, abstracted from the judgment for purposes of quick reference by those having occasion to refer to the reported decision in question. It is in no way authoritative and in practice, it is often not even prepared by the Judge, who has delivered the judgment, for the simple reason that when the case comes to be reported, that Judge may not be available. In practice, therefore, such head-notes are not infrequently prepared, not only by Judges of this Court other than the one who delivered the judgment but, in certain instances, by other officials of this Court. The head-note, therefore, cannot, in any way, be looked upon as authoritative.

It will be convenient, first of all, to deal with the deposition of the appellant, as given in the District Judge's Court, There can be little doubt indeed but that, in the initial part of that deposition, the appellant was anxious to suggest, as regards the custom of orphan adoption in the caste concerned, that the practice in question did not exist, or at least that he was unaware of it. That his action in this connexion was dishonourable and possibly perverse cannot be doubted for a moment. At the same time, even in the examination-in-chief, it was obvious that the witness was only prepared to make a half-hearted attempt in support of the plea he was called on to support, because, even in that examination-in-chief, he explicitly stated that he was not prepared to say that an orphan-adoption was invalid; all the length he would go, was to say that the caste opinion was in favour of its invalidity. However this may be, I fully agree with the remarks of Hallifax, A. J. C., in para. 6 of his judgment in Local Government v. Gambhir Bhujua (1), quoted above, and I am of opinion that the deposition must be taken as a whole and, in the cross-examination, it is obvious that the appellant fully retracted the statement in the examination-in-chief and went back to the position he had taken in 1916. It not infrequently occurs in criminal and civil Courts that a witness, who begins by making, or attempting to make a false statement, is cautioned by the Magistrate or Judge concerned and is informed of circumstances which seem to him to establish the falsehood of that statement; it frequently ensues that the witness, after such caution, corrects his earlier statement and proceeds, to put it bluntly, to tell the truth. I have never known of any case, where in such circumstances, a Judge or Magistrate has thought it desirable to prosecute such a witness either for perjury or for an attempt to commit that offence. This is precisely what we have occurring in the present case, the only difference being that the witness proceeded to tell the truth, not as the result of a caution from the Judge but on his being confronted with his earlier statement of 1916. I myself am of opinion that, in such circumstances, if it be true that a very technical offence, attempt to commit perjury, has been committed by such a witness, it is inadvisable and perhaps unreasonable to order his prosecution. The very gist of an offence of perjury is the fact that it amounts to an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court. For the offences to be complete, the deponent must, in my opinion, leave the Court under the lie with which he began by deceiving it.

In the present instance, the result has been precisely the reverse When the appellant left the Court, the latter was doubtless by that time imbued with the truth of the later statement of the witness as given in his cross-examination. It might be advanced in this connexion that the motive, which led the deponent eventually to tell the truth, was an unworthy one, viz., the mere fear that he might otherwise incur a penalty under the Criminal Law. I fully concur that this was probably so in the present case, but, nevertheless, I do not think that, in such circumstances it is advisable to order a prosecution for perjury, or for an attempt to commit perjury of a most technical nature, a prosecution in which, moreover, there is not, in my opinion, any large degree of certitude of conviction.

Taking the view I do, it pari passu follows that, if the whole of the evidence of the appellant in the lower Court is read together, there is no essential contradiction between it and his deposition of 1916. I do not, therefore, think that, in the present case, a prosecution lay at all for a contradiction between the earlier deposition and the examination-in-chief in the later deposition. Similarly, I have already given my reasons for holding that it is inadvisable to prosecute the appellant for an attempt to commit perjury in respect of the discrepancies and contradictions between his oxamination-in-chief and his cross-examination in the later deposition.

Rife though the offence of perjury may be and although it may be most desirable to bring offenders in the matter to justice, I do not think that, for other reasons, a prosecution was advisable in this case. The question of whether an orphan-adoption is valid or invalid in the case concerned is obviously a vexed one, on which opinions differ, even among the caste people. It is difficult, therefore, to arrive at any degree of certitude as to the existence of the validity or invalidity of any such custom, at any rate, as regards the degree of certitude required in a criminal trial, in which the onus of proof would lie on the prosecution.

Secondly, I am of opinion that, in view of the long lapse of time since the earlier deposition, the appellant was worthy of some consideration in this connexion. Finally, it is impossible to overlook the extreme old age of the appellant who is a man of 74. If his respectable position in the past is taken into account, he has certainly disgraced himself in the present proceedings and, in the circumstances, I should be inclined to hold that his punishment will be sufficient. Moreover, there occur many worse and much more manifest cases of perjury than the present one which is, as I have shown, from the legal point of view, of an extremely doubtful nature as to whether even a technical offence was committed; and which has, moreover, in it incidents I have referred to above, which make the case one of a very marginal nature. I do not think, therefore, that, in the circumstances, the learned District Judge exercised a sound discretion in ordering the prosecution of the appellant and I do not think that that prosecution would be likely in any way to further the ends of justice The order appealed against is accordingly reversed and the prosecution of the appellant for the offence in question in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Chhindwara, is quashed.

Criminal Appeal No. 74 of 1929, Decided on 12th August 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Saugor, D/- 4th March 1929, in Criminal Appeal No. 10 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 476 (B)—Meaning of words "and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly," explained.

The words "and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly" refer to the procedure laid down in S. 476 about the filing of such complaints and not to the act of making the complaint. [P 282 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C, S. 476 (B)— No appeal lies against order by appellate Court under S. 476 (B).

The policy of the Code is not to allow two appeals in criminal matters and no appeal lies under the provisions of the Code against an order made by an appellate Court under S. 476 (B). *A. I. J. Sen—for Appellant.

Judgment.—Mukundram moved the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rehli, by an application to file a complaint against Chinai and this application was rejected on 5th January 1929 and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mr G P Saraiya, declined to lodge a complaint. This was done under S. 476, Criminal P.C. Mukundram filed an appeal under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., in the Court of Sessions Judge, Saugor, who allowed the appeal, and filed a complaint which the Subordi- Court might have made under S. 476, Criminal P. C. Chinai has filed this appeal under S. 476 B, Criminal P. C., and the learned Government Advocate has taken an objection to the effect that no appeal lies against the order of the Ses-Sessions Judge passed under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. Chinai's learned pleader relies on a judgment of the Patna High Court in Ranjit Narain Singh v. Rambahadur Singh (1), and the learned Government Advocate cites the following cases in support of his contention : Somabhai Vallavbhai v Aditbhai Parshottam (2), Muhammad Idris v. Emperor (3) and Ma On Khin v. N. K. M. Firm (4).

I have read carefully the reported cases on the subject and am of opinion that no appeal lies against the order passed by the appellate Court under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C Great stress was laid on the following words in S. 476-B:

"and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly," and it was argued that if the appellate Court files a complaint, it is a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and an appeal lies. The words :

"and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly," refer to the procedure laid down in S. 476, Criminal P. C., about the filing of such complaints and not to the act of making the complaint. The policy of the Criminal Procedure Code is not to allow two appeals in criminal matters, and, if the construction put by the Patna High Court is accepted, there would be two appeals under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. S. 476 B, Criminal P. C., does not seem to provide for a second appeal As pointed out by Martineau, J., in Muhammad Idris v Emperor (3)·

"Section 476-B of the Code gives a right of appeal only when a Court has made or refused to make a complaint under S. 476 or S. 476-A, and neither of those sections relates to a complaint made by a Court on appeal from an order of a subordinate Court refusing to make a complaint."

I therefore hold that no appeal lies under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code against an order made by an appellate Court under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C.

This Court will exercise its revisional powers in suitable cases where justice demands it, but no good case is made out for interference in revision in this case. The learned Sessions Judge has given good reasons in his order dated 4th March 1929 why a complaint should be filed and in my opinion the order is correct. The appeal is dismissed.

Civil Revn. No. 58 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, against the order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Betul, D/- 22nd December 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 115—Election—Order thereon is revisable.

High Court has jurisdiction to revise an order passed in connexion with an election petition under the Municipal Election Rules : A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 935, Rel. on. [P 282 C 2]

(b) C. P. General Clauses Act, S. 5 (c)—Scope.

It cannot be said that S. 5 (c) requires the proceedings to continue before the original Court and not before the Court to which jurisdiction may have been transferred by the repealing Act. [P 283 C 1]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Amendment of law.

An amendment of the law which changes the forum and does not take away the right to institute proceedings, relates to procedure only and has retrospective effect : A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 983, Appr.; A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 97, Dist.; A I. R. 1927, Mad. 977, Ref. [P 283 C 2]

G. R. Pradhan—for Applicant.

A. V. Vazalwar—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Betul, in connexion with an election petition under the Municipal Election Rules. The jurisdiction of this Court to interfere in revision has been questioned ; but it is a fact that such applications have been hitherto entertained and I find that in Chellaswami Konar v. Sangama Nayakar (A. I. R. 1927 Mad 935) the jurisdiction of the High Court has been efinitely asserted. That is a view from which I am not prepared to dissent, particularly as the wording of the rules appears to give the civil Court as such the jurisdiction to deal with election petitions.

The election petition was originally presented, as the rules then in force required, to the Deputy Commissioner. While it was pending, the rules were amended and the jurisdiction was given to the civil Court. The petition was accordingly transferred, but the applicant objected to the civil Court's jurisdiction on the ground that the amendment of the rules had not a retrospective effect. The learned Subordinate Judge has held against the applicant and revision of his order is now sought. Reliance is placed on S. 5, Cl. (c), C P. General Clauses Act, which deals with the continuance of proceedings after the enactment, under which they were instituted, has been repealed ; but it does not seem to me that that section requires the proceedings to continue before the original Court and not before the Court to which jurisdiction may have been transferred by the repealing Act. Moreover, legislation is regarded as having retrospective effect in so far as it relates to procedure.

It is argued, however, that this is not a mere matter of procedure and that the right to present a petition to a particular authority is a substantive right which cannot be taken away with retrospective effect. Various decisions have been cited before me dealing the effect of legislation which takes away a right of appeal, but I cannot find in any of them any decision that the right to appeal to a particular Court cannot be taken away, what is decided in those cases is that the right of appeal is not affected by subsequent legislation. One of the decisions Daivanayaga Reddiar v Renukambal Ammal, A I.R. 1927 Mad 977 (F.B.) seems to me to have no bearing at all on the present case; it decides that a question of valuation of an appeal, namely, that an amendment of the Court-fees Act, does not alter the money value of the original suit, calculated under the law in force when it was instituted, by which jurisdiction throughout the subsequent litigation in its several stages is fixed. The Privy Council decision in Keshoram Poddar v. Nundo Lal Mallick A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 97, upon which great reliance was placed, does not help the applicant. It dealt with a right of appeal to the President Improvement Committee, Calcutta, under the Calcutta Rent Act. An appeal had been preferred, but before it could be decided the Act had ceased to be in force as regards premises, the rent of which exceeded Rs. 3,000 a year The rent of the premises occupied by the appellant did exceed this amount and the President of the Improvement Committee decided that he had no jurisdiction to decide the appeal. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the President had jurisdiction ; but the position there, was that no appellate Court had been appointed to succeed the President with jurisdiction in respect of premises such as those occupied by the appellant ; and I cannot infer from the decision of their Lordships that, if jurisdiction had been transferred from the President to another authority, the appellant would have had the right to continue his appeal before the President.

On behalf of the non-applicant I have been referred to the decision in Rajib Lochan Dhar v. Jogesh Chandra Das (A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 983). It dealt with an amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, which made an offence previously triable only by the Court of Session triable by a Magistrate of the First Class. It was held that the amendment related to procedure and had retrospective effect and that a case, commenced before the amending Act came into force, could be disposed of by a Magistrate. That is a view with which I respectfully concur. I am of opinion then that an amendment of the law, which changes the forum and does not take away the right to institute proceedings, relates to procedure only and has retrospective effect. That being so, I must hold that the Subordinate Judge, in the present case, has jurisdiction to deal with the election petition presented to the Deputy Commissioner. The application for revision is dismissed with costs. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 20.

Order 40, R 1 (2), deals with cases in which the property is in possession of a person who is not a party to the suit. [P 284 C 2]

Where a creditor, who had purchased the rights of a person in execution of a decree, is made a party to a suit brought by the person's wife and son for partition and declaration that certain decrees, mortgages and attachments were not binding on them, a Court can on creditor's application appoint a receiver although such creditor has no present right to possession of the property 18 Mad. 23, *A. In a suit brought by a minor son and a wife of a person against him and his creditors for a partition and declaration that certain decrees, attachments and mortgages were not binding on them on the ground that the debts were incurred by the person for immoral and illegal purposes, the whole estate is prima facie liable for the debts unless it is proved that the debts were so incurred. [P 285 C 1]

T. L. Sheode—for Appellants.

M. B. Niyogi—for Respondents.

Order.—This is an appeal against an order appointing a receiver. The plaintiffs are the minor son and the wife of defendant 1 and they have sued for a partition and a declaration that certain decrees, attachments, mortgages and simple money debts are not binding upon them on the ground that the debts incurred by defendant 1 were for illegal and immoral purposes. Defendant 1's creditors have been joined as defendants and they made an application for a receiver which was rejected on 13th August 1928. They were, however, permitted to apply again if they failed to realize the sums due to them by sale of the right, title and interest of defendant 1. A part of the property has been sold, but there still remained debts of Rs 18,000 outstanding. A second application for a receiver has now been granted on the ground that if no receiver is appointed, defendant 1 in collusion with the plaintiffs will do away with as much of the produce as they can.

The first point taken in appeal is that the creditors, who have purchased the rights of defendant 1, have no present right to possession of the property. It has been laid down in Abdul Aziz v. Ajudhia (1) and Mohanlal v. Tekchand (2), that a purchaser of an undivided share can only obtain separate possession by enforcing partition of the whole estate. On this it is urged that no receiver can be appointed because of O. 40, R. 1, sub-R. (2) which runs as follows:

"Nothing in this rule shall authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove."

But that subrule seems to me clearly to deal with cases in which the property is in possession of a person who is not a party to the suit. If applied, as the appellants desire, it would mean that a receiver could not be appointed in suits for partition and that a receiver can be appointed in such suits as has been recognized in Hanumayya v. Venkatasubbayya (3) and Bhagwan Das v. Sheonandan Prasad (4). It has been sought to distinguish those cases on the ground that no strangers were parties to the suits; but that would not take them out of the operation of O. 40, R 1, sub-R. (2) if the appellants' interpretation of that subrule is correct.

It is next contended that, as the only ground for appointing a receiver is a fear that defendant 1 and the plaintiffs will do away with the produce and as the creditors are not entitled to mesne profits before partition, they are not entitled to obtain the appointment of a receiver. Reference has been made in this connexion to Amritrao v. Govind (5) and Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramarajulu Naidu (6). In Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramarajulu Naidu (6), it is laid down that a purchaser of the undivided share of a member of a joint Hindu family does not thereby become a tenant-in-common with the other members and hence he is not entitled to any mesne profits in respect of his share for the period between the date of his purchase and the date of his suit for partition. It may be pointed out that here the suit for partition has been instituted though not by the purchasers, but the real answer to the appellants' contention is that the creditors are not claiming mesne profits; what they claim is that the whole property and the produce

The plaintiffs have to prove that the debts were incurred for illegal or immoral purposes and until they do so, the whole property is prima facie liable for the debts. Criminal Revn. No 107 of 1929, Decided on 19th August 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Wardha, D/- 22nd January 1929, in Criminal Revn. No. 33 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Order regarding future possession is wrong.

Section 145 relates simply to the fact of actual possession at the date of the preliminary order. No question of title can be taken into consideration, nor can any order be passed as regards future possession with reference to the actual possession at the date of the preliminary order. [P 286 C 2]

Where a Magistrate, in proceedings under S. 145 passed an order according to an agreement between the parties, for future possession :

Held : that the order regarding future possession on the strength of the agreement was wrong. [P 286 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 145 — Proceedings under S. 145 cannot be compromised nor can they be referred to arbitration.

Proceedings under S. 145 cannot be compromised, nor can they be submitted to arbitration : all that can be done is that there may be an agreement as to the mode of taking evidence as regards actual possession on the date of the preliminary order either by a commissioner or by arbitrators. Such a commissioner or arbitrators have no power to decide the case, but can only submit a report, and the Magistrate would then be bound to take that report into consideration before passing an order. It has, however, always to be borne in mind that if the parties come to any agreement with regard to a dispute even an agreement as regards the mode of ascertaining actual possession it at once becomes doubtful whether there is any likehood of a breach of the peace, and if the Magistrate is satisfied that no likelihood of a breach of the peace exists he should cancel his preliminary order under S. 145 (5). *A. Order.—The applicant applies for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Wardha, which confirmed an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Wardha, passed under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The applicant had made an application to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 145, alleging that the non-applicants had changed the boundary between their fields and had taken possession of about a quarter of an acre of his field, No. 35, by force. A preliminary order was passed, and after a short written reply by the non-applicants the applicant's pleader Mr. Kale stated that the boundary line between the two fields was unchanged, that he was prepared to have the boundary measured by the Court with the help of any revenue officer according to the settlement record and that he would abide by the decision of the Superintendent of Land Records about the exact boundary. Mr. Ghate pleader for the non-applicants stated that he had no objection if a revenue officer was directed by the Court to fix the boundary lines between the fields according to the settlement record and that any encroachment would be condoned and that the non-applicants would abide by the decision of the revenue officer. On these statements the Magistrate directed that the Superintendent of Land Records should be asked to measure the boundary line between the fields Nos. 35 and 40 according to the settlement record and put the parties in possession accordingly. The Superintendent of Land Records submitted a report by 18th September 1928 but the applicant's pleader stated that he wished to examine him. He was so examined on 21st September and then the Court examined the patwari, who actually did the measurements, on 2nd October arguments were heard on the 6th October and on 11th October further statements of the parties were recorded. At that time Mr. Manohar Deshpande for the applicant stated that his client was not satisfied with the measurements taken by the Superintendendent of Land Records and the Revenue Inspector and wanted to revoke his previous statement. Mr. Ghate for the non-applicants stated that the settlement map could not now be challenged and that it was binding, that no flaw had been shown in the measurements taken by the Revenue Inspector and permission could not be granted to the applicant to revoke his former statement and agreement to submit to the measurements. The Magistrate then passed an order and held that the arbitration was not on the point of determining the fact of possession, but was to determine the boundary line according to the settlement record, according to which the parties undertook to maintain future possession. He held, then, that the parties, when they agreed to abide by the settlement dhura and to maintain future possession in accordance therewith, gave up their right to determine actual past possession. He further held that according to the spirit of S. 145, if the parties agreed to maintain future possession in accordance with a certain order, the findings on their statement would be legal. The Magistrate refused therefore to allow the applicant to revoke his statement and passed an order that the parties should maintain possession of their respective fields in accordance with the boundary as pointed out by the Superintendent of Land Records until the matter was finally decided by the civil Court. On an application for revision the Sessions Judge held that the rulings cited by the applicant as regards arbitration in such proceedings did not apply and that the method of survey was agreed upon by the parties to decide the dispute as to the extent of possession of each of the parties He further held that the primary object of proceedings under S. 145 was as stated by the Magistrate to prevent a breach of the peace and that it was not for the Court in these proceedings to adjudicate upon the title or right of possession. He added :

" The parties in this case had agreed to have the question of their possession decided by the result of the survey, and the lower Court did not act illegally in accepting it. "

I am of opinion that the view taken by the Sessions Judge is incorrect. The agreement between the parties was not to have the question of past possession decided by the result of the survey as is quite clear from the settlements and from the order of the Magistrate ; the agreement was that measurements should be taken and that the boundary should be fixed according to the settlement map. The Magistrate has made it clear that he has made no order as regards past possession but has ordered that future possession should be maintained according to the boundary fixed by the Superintendent of Land Records after measurements. I am very clearly of opinion that such an order under S. 145, Criminal P. C., is wrong. That section relates, as has been held in numerous cases simply to the fact of actual possession at the date of the preliminary order. No question of title can be taken into consideration, nor, in my opinion, can any order be passed as regards future possession without reference to the actual possession at the date of the preliminary order. The order of the Magistrate, therefore, is on the face of it, incorrect and cannot be upheld.

I am further of opinion that, strictly speaking, proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C , cannot be compromised or settled by agreement, though possibly, there may be an agreement as to the mode of ascertaining the possession of each party, e. g by appointing a commissioner or commissioners to enquire into the fact of actual possession. In this connexion I have been referred to Uttim Singh v. Jodhan Bai (1) and Banwari Lal Mukerjee v. Hriday Chakravarti (2). In the latter case it has been held that even the question as to who is in actual possession should not be delegated even by consent of parties, to arbitrators, whilst in the former case it has been held, firstly, that an order could not be passed upon a reference to arbitration, and then it was held that a local enquiry might be directed and the enquiry report might be brought on record as evidence. I would quote the following passage from that case :

" There are decided cases in which the delegation of the jurisdiction of the Court, under S. 145, to arbitrators has been condemned. In the case of Banwari Lal Mukerjee v. Hriday Chakravarti (2) this procedure was condemned on the ground that the law does not allow delegation. The utmost that the Code allows in a proceeding under S. 145 is that the Court may direct a local enquiry and bring the enquiry report on the record as evidence. In the case Hamidul Haque v.

(2) [1905] 32 Cal. 552=1 C. L. J 432.

Alait Hussain (3) the procedure was also condemned on the ground that it was not in accordance with the specific directions given S. 145. An analogous case to this, bearing out the same principle, is to be found in case of Sadhu Biswas v. Mahammad Ali Biswas (4) where a compromise was filed in a proceeding under S. 145."

It seems clear, then, that proceedings under S. 145 cannot be submitted to arbitration and that all that can be done is that, in certain cases, the Court may appoint a commissioner or commissioners to conduct a local enquiry and to report as regards actual possession.

Another point which must be made clear is that, when once the parties have agreed to arbitration or to a compromise there can be no question really of a breach of the peace and that the preliminary order should therefore be cancelled under S. 145 (5), Criminal P. C. For this I would again rely upon Uttam Singh v. Jodhan Rai (1) at p. 294 of 3 Pat. and upon the case there quoted, viz., Sadhu Biswa sv. Mahammad Ali Biswas (4).

The learned Standing Counsel who appeared for the Crown argued that a case under S. 145 might be submitted to arbitration and cited Gopi Das v. Madho Lal (5), Taramoni Chaudhurani v. Gyanendra Mohan Chaudhuri (6), Kalananda Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (7) and Jamunadas Kyriwala v. Hanuman Baksh (8). As regards these cases, I would point out that in Gopi Das v. Madho Lal (5), it has not been laid down that proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. can be compromised. That case was a second appeal from a decree passed in a civil appeal. The civil appeal related to a suit which was brought after proceedings under S. 145. All that has been stated in the judgment is that the case under S. 145 was compromised, but nothing has been said as regards the legality or otherwise of the compromise. What has been held is that the compromise could, at the outset, amount to an admission of title, but that it could not be deemed to have the effect of estoppel and that therefore the compromise or agreement in the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., would not preclude either party from having recourse to the civil Court. In Taramoni Chaudhurani v. Gyanendra Mohan Chaudhari (6), it is true, it has been held that when the question of possession in proceedings under S. 145 has been referred to arbitrators and the arbitrators have submitted an award as regards the question of actual possession, the Magistrate was bound to take the finding of fact by the arbitrators into consideration. This view, perhaps, may be accepted, though it directly conflicts with the view expressed in Banwari Lal Mukerjee v. Hriday Chakravarti (2); but, at any rate, all that it amounts to is that there may be an agreement, as already held above, as regards the mode of ascertaining actual possession; it cannot mean that the question of possession can be compromised nor does it even say that the Magistrate is bound by the award or report submitted by arbitrators. All that has been held is that the Magistrate is bound to take the finding of fact by the arbitrators into consideration, which of course, would apply to any evidence or report submitted by a commissioner. Kalananda Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (7), is somewhat similar to Sadhu Biswas v. Mahammad Ali Biswas (4) already referred to above, and the chief point there laid down is that, when once a dispute has been referred to arbitration in proceedings under S. 145 and the Magistrate has stayed further proceedings as unnecessary, the order really amounts to an order under S. 145 (5) and that the preliminary order should be cancelled. In Jamunadas Kyrawala v. Hanuman Baksh Marwari (8) it has been clearly held that a reference to arbitration is not contemplated under S. 145, but that if the parties privately referred the dispute to arbitration and the award has been accepted, the Magistrate would have grounds to proceed under S. 145 (5).

On a review of the authorities, then, I am of opinion that proceedings under S. 145 cannot be compromised, nor can they be submitted to arbitration: all that can be done is that there may be an agreement as to the mode of taking evidence as regards actual possession on the date of the preliminary order either by a commissioner or by arbitrators. Such a commissioner or arbitrators have no power to decide the case, but can only submit a report, and the Magistrate would then be bound to take that report into consideration before passing an order. It has, however, always to be borne in mind that if the parties come to any agreement with regard to a dispute, even an agreement as regards the mode of ascertaining actual possession, it at once becomes doubtful whether there is any likehood of a breach of the peace, and if the Magistrate is satisfied that no likehood of a breach of peace exists he should cancel his preliminary order under S. 145 (5).

For these reasons I am of opinion that the order of the Magistrate in the present case is wrong, in the first place, as it relates to future possession and not to actual past possession, and, secondly, it is wrong because, when once the parties had agreed to maintain possession according to the measurements made by a revenue officer, there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace existing, and the preliminary order should be cancelled under S 145 (3). I therefore now set aside the order of the Magistrate and under S 145 (5) cancel the preliminary order which was passed on 20th July 1928.

Civil Revn No 136 of 1929, Decided on 7th August 1929, from order of 2nd Class Sub-Judge, Chanda, D/- 8th February 1929, in Misc. Judicial Case No. 84 of 1928.

Evidence Act, S. 65 –Trial Court is to decide whether or not sufficient proof of search for or loss of, original documents for admission of secondary evidence is given—Loss of original held to be not proved—Secondary evidence refused—Order of refusal is not revisable.

Whether or not sufficient proof of search for or loss, of an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of the first instance and depends very much on his discretion. Thus if such Court finds the loss of a document not proved and refuses to admit secondary evidence it cannot be said that it has refused to exercise jurisdiction or has exercised jurisdiction with material irregularity, nor is there any gross or palpable error to justify interference in revision : *A. V. V. Kelkar—for Non-Applicants.

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order dismissing an objection under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. The non-applicant has argued that there can be no revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., and he has relied upon the ruling in Samsherkhan v. Abdul Sattarkhan (1), in which it has been held that this Court will not interfere in revision when another remedy is open to the aggrieved party and where no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from its refusal to act In any case, it is urged that there has been no material irregularity in the exercise of the lower Court's jurisdiction. This appears to me to be correct What is objected to in the lower Court's decision is that it has found the loss of a document not proved and has therefore refused to admit secondary evidence. As their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down in Harripria Debi v Rukmini Debi (2), whether or not sufficient proof of search for, or loss of, an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance, and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. In coming to a conclusion of fact that the loss of the document was not proved, it is impossible to say that the lower Court has refused to exercise jurisdiction or has exercised its jurisdiction with material irregularity.

I have been referred to the decision in Joqunnessa Bibi v. Satish Chandra (3) which lays it down that the expression "acted illegally" in S. 115, Civil P. C., is an indefinite expression which empowers the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, the justification for the interference being determined upon the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of and upon the gravity of the injustice resulting from it. I am not prepared to say that there is any gross or palpable error in this case which would justify interference in revision. Moreover, as I have already pointed out, the applicant has another remedy and so there is no grave injustice to be redressed.

I have been referred to the decision of this Court in Pandurang Govind v. Maifuzbai (4), but that decision gives no assistance in the present case, as it dealt with a case in which an erroneous view of the scope of a section of the Civil Procedure Code had been taken by the lower Court. Again in Sujat Ali v Bhao Singh (5), it was held that the word "conclusive" in R. 63, O. 21, does not preclude revision and the order of the lower Court was reversed but on the ground that it had wrongly gone into the question of title, that is, it had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it. This decision also is no authority for interference in the present case. I dismiss the application with costs I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 25

First Appeal No. 2-B of 1927, Decided on 24th July 1929, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Yeotmal, D/- 15th September 1926, in Civil Suit No. 6 of 1924

(a) Hindu Law—Partition—Evidence of—Entering widow's name in place of that of husband is not sufficient—Application by mother to enter share in minor son's name is also not sufficient.

The fact that a Hindu widow's name has been entered in the revenue records in place of her husband does not prove partition. Nor is an application by the mother of a Hindu, asking for a specific share of the property, which belonged entirely to the family, to be entered in the name of her son, then a minor, an unequivocal declaration of an intention to separate from the rest of the family.  (b) Hindu Law — Adoption — Bombay School—Husband dying joint—Property not vested in widow—Widow cannot adopt.

A Hindu widow in the Maratha country of the Presidency of Bombay, who has not her husband's estate vested in her and whose husband was not separate at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of her father-in-law of her husband's undivided coparceners ;6 Bom. 498 (F.B), held not overruled by A.I.R. 1922 P C. 216, A I.R. 1926 Bom. 435 (F.B.); Appr. [P 290 C 1, P 291 C 2]

M. B Niyogi and W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellants.

K V. Deoskar—for Respondents 3 to 6.

Judgment—This appeal arises from a suit for partition of the Nim Jagir village of mouza Pardi, Tahsil Kelapur The family to which the appellants belong owns a half share in this village, and the question I have to decide is whether the appellants are entitled to half of that share.

The first appellant Tani is the widow of Kesho, who, with his brother Raghunath and Raghunath's sons, formed a joint family owning the whole half share. Kesho died, according to the finding of the lower Court, in a state of jointness, without issue, but after the institution of the suit out of which this appeal arises, Tani adopted to him the second appellant, Wasanta The lower Court has held that this adoption is invalid.

As regards the finding that there was no partition between Kesho and the rest of the family, I agree with the lower Court Tani's pleading is that in 1917, her husband Kesho declared to his brother Raghunath, his intention to separate, and that the home-farm was then divided, the division of the rest of the property being postponed. The evidence adduced does not support this pleading. Tani herself (6 D. W. 1) gives very confused evidence, and obviously she has no personal knowledge of the facts to which she deposes, because on her own showing she can only have been nine or ten years old at the time of the alleged partition, and she had not then been married to Kesho. The other oral evidence is mainly to the effect that Kesho had for some years before his death lived separately from Raghunath and had separate cultivation. Kesho died in 1918 and it is clear that his living and cultivating separately from Raghunath did not indicate partition, because it began before the partition is alleged to have taken place There is some evidence to prove that the partition went further than the division of the home-farm, but that is not in the pleadings, and in any case I agree with the lower Court that the evidence is unreliable

It was decided in a case before the Munsif, Kelapur, that Kesho did separate from the rest of the family, but the judgment in that case, Ex 6 D 3, does not operate as res judicata. The fact that Tani's name has been entered in the revenue records in place of Kesho's does not prove partition, and I agree with the lower Court's view of the statement made by Shivappa then a youth of 18, in the proceedings relating to mutation of names after Kesho's death. Great reliance is, however, placed on the application, of which 6 D 3 is a copy, made by Kesho's mother on 9th April 1918, in which she asks to have a 4-anna share of mouza Pardi and an 8-anna share of mouza Palsi, which belonged entirely to the family, entered in the name of her son Kesho, who was then a minor. This application is not an unequivocal declaration of an intention to separate from the rest of the family. It makes no mention of the alleged separation in 1917, and its object is clearly to have it recorded that Kesho is entitled to a 4-anna share and not to an equal share with each of his nephews, Raghunath's sons It does not prove that partition had already taken place, nor does it operate to effect partition

The question then arises whether no partition having taken place in the family, Tani had authority to adopt a son to her deceased husband. In Ramji v Ghamau (1), it was held by a Full Bench that a Hindu widow in the Maratha country of the Presidency of Bombay, who has not her husband's estate vested in her and whose husband was not separate at the time of his death, is not competent to adopt a son to her husband without his authority or the consent of her father-in-law or her husband's undivided coparceners. That decision has been considered by the Privy Council in Yadao v Namdeo (2), and there are passages in their Lordship's judgment from which it may be inferred that they have overruled Ramji v Ghamau (1), but I do not think that they have gone so far as that.

In Yadao v. Namdeo (2) the facts were as follows: One Pundalik died while still joint with his cousin Namdeo and the latter's two sons, Pandurang and Rambhau. His senior widow, Mt. Champa Bai, with Pundalik's authority and Namdeo's consent adopted the latter's son, Pandurang. Pandurang died and thereafter Mt. Champa Bai adopted one Yadao and it was the validity of Yadao's adoption that the Privy Council had to consider. At the time of the adoption of Pandurang a deed of adoption was executed by Namdeo, which their Lordships held to have the effect of separating Pandurang from his natural father and brother, Namdeo and Rambhau. On Pandurang's death the property which had gone to him as the adopted son of Pundlik vested in Pundlik's widows, and the adoption of Yadao had thus not the effect of divesting Namdeo and Rambhau of property already vested in them Nevertheless, the law as laid down in Ramji v. Ghamau (1) would have applied to the facts found in Yadao v. Namdeo (2) as the following passage from the judgment of the Privy Council will show:

"In the present case Pundlik had not separated, he had died a member of a joint Hindu family, and the estate which was vested in Mt. Champa Bai at the time when she adopted the plaintiff as a son to her husband was not the interest which Pundlik had in the joint family property, but was the estate which had vested in Pandurang on the separation of the joint family."

Their Lordships, however, refused to apply the law so stated, and thus gave their reasons.

"There does not appear to their Lordships to be any sound reason why in the Mahratha country of the Presidency of Bombay the Hindu Law as to the power of a Hindu widow who has not the authority of her deceased husband to adopt a son to him should depend on the question as to whether her husband had died as a separated Hindu or as an unseparated Hindu, or on the question as to whether the property which was vested in her when she made the adoption was or was not vested in her as his heir. If it was her religious duty to adopt to her husband, that duty would be same in either case, although possibly the right of the adopted son to the property vested in the widow might be different."

It is this passage and one to similar effect, in which their Lordships commented on a quotation they had made from Rakhma Bai v. Radha Bai (3), that may be taken to indicate that the decision in Ramji v. Ghamao (1) was overruled. It has, however, been decided by a Bench of five Judges of the Bombay High Court, with one dissentient, in Ishwar Dadu v. Gajabai (4) that Ramji v. Ghamau (1) has not been overruled by Yadao v. Namdeo (2) and I have come to the same conclusion.

The observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council must be read with reference to the facts to which they were applied. These were essentially different from the facts in Ramji v Ghamau (1) and in the present case, in which the person to whom adoption was made had not separated in his lifetime and his widow could not separate after his death, and in which the adoption had the effect of introducing a new member into the coparcenary. I do not read the decision in Yadao v Namdeo (2) as meaning that such an adoption would be valid. In that case their Lordships based their decision on two propositions Firstly, they say that the power of a Hindu widow to adopt does not depend on the question whether her husband died as a separated Hindu or an unseparated Hindu, by which they mean, in my opinion, that it is the position at the time of adoption that has to be considered and not the position at the time of the adoptive father's death, secondly, they say that that power to adopt does not depend on the question whether the property which was vested in her when she made the adoption was or was not vested in her as his heir; and by this, I take them to mean that it is immaterial whether the property came to her as the immediate successor of her husband or in some such way as that in which it came to the widow in the case with which they were dealing. They clearly, however, contemplated that the husband's property or property in which he had an interest must have come to be vested in her directly or indirectly. The effect of their decision is not, I consider, to overrule Ramji v. Ghamau (1) At the most the decision is that the law has been too widely stated in that case; it needs the qualification that it is applicable only to cases in which the effect of the adoption would be to introluce a new member into a coparcenary.

My view is, I think, strengthened by the quotation made in the judgment of their Lordships from from Raghunadha v. Brozo Kishoro (5):

"It may be the duty of a Court of Justice administering the Hindu Law to consider the religious duty of adopting a son as the essential foundation of law of adoption and the effect of an adoption upon the devolution of property as a mere legal consequence. But it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property—and it may be in the case of collateral succession, as in the present instance, the rights of parties in actual possession—dependent on the caprice of a woman, subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."

The comment of their Lordships on this passage is also instructive. It ends with the sentence.

"In the present case, owing to the family having separated the rights of Namdeo and his son Pandurang were merely rights of collaterals in unpartitioned property."

That comment indicates the distinguishing feature in Yadao v. Namdeo namely, the fact that although Pundlik died in a state of jointness, the son first adopted to him afterwards separated. It is that fact and that fact alone which seems to me to have led their Lordships of the Privy Council not to apply the law as laid down in Ramji v. Ghamau (1). It is nowhere stated in Yadao v. Namdeo (2) that Ramji v. Ghamau (1) was an incorrect decision as far as the facts to which it applied were concerned. I am satisfied that it is correct as to such facts and that it applies in the present case.

It follows that the adoption of defendant 2 Wasanta is invalid and that he is not entitled to a share in the village of Pardi which is now to be partitioned.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 49-B of 1927, Decided on 9th July 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Buldana, D/- 16th June 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Partition decree silent about mesne profits — Party can assert right to them by separate suit.

Where a decree for partition is silent about mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, a party is at liberty to assert his right to such profits by a separate suit. 19 Bom. 532, Foll, *A. (b) Civil P. C, O. 20, R 12—Cosharer kept out of possession, is entitled to claim from his co-tenant interest on mesne profits.

The relations between lambardar and a co-sharer are not analogous to those which exist between two co-tenants, one of whom is kept out of possession. In a suit brought by the latter for mesne profits in respect of his share against his co-tenant, who has excluded him from possession he is entitled to claim interest on mesne profits. 15 N. L. R. 85, Dist. [P 294 C 1]

W. B. Pendharkar and G. K. Dixit—for Appellant.

M. B. Niyogi—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal relates to a claim for profits for the years 1920-21, 1921-22, and 1922-23 which the respondents Trimbak Rao and Daulat Rao had filed in the Court of Subordinate Judge, First Class, Buldana, on 3rd December 1924, against the appellant Amritrao It is an admitted fact that the respondents had filed a suit for partition in 1917 in the Court of third Additional District Judge, Buldana, against the appellant, and that the partition suit was continued in the Akola Court, and ended in a compromise between the parties in 1920. The details of the compromise have been stated in para. 3 of the plaint and are contained in Ex. P-133 The parties according to the terms settled between them, referred the question of actual partition to arbitrators, who gave their award in 1923. The respondents in this suit claimed their share of the profits for the period during which the appellant was in possession, after the parties had determined finally the definite shares to which they were entitled. The profits claimed are from the following four sources :

(1) Lands other than home-farm.
(2) Home-farm lands.
(3) Mango trees.
(4) Guava trees.

The appellant denied the respondents' claim, contested the various items for which the claim was made and expressed his willingness to pay such an amount to the respondents as might be decreed by the Court. Para. 14 of the written statement ran as follows :

"After taking the accounts as per schedule, if anything is found due to plaintiffs, it may be decreed."

The trial Court held that the appellant had realized the letting values of 12 fields in mouza Chondal, of three fields in mouza Perikhed, and of seven fields in mouza Takli, during the years in suit, that the income per year from the mango grove in the appellant's possession was Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,200, that similarly the income from the guava was Rs. 25 per year, that the appellant had incurred an expenditure of Rs. 32 per year in maintaining the mango grove, that the net profits from the excess home-farm land was Rs 42-8-0, that the respondents were entitled to get interest, that the respondents were entitled to receive profits for the years in suit, that the profits from the fields mentioned in Sch A were Rs. 22,606 for the years in suit and Rs 42-8-0 for those mentioned in Sch. B, that the rental value of the fields was six times the revenue and passed a decree for Rs. 12,049-12-6.

Ground 1 in the memorandum of appeal ran as follows :

"The lower Court should have held that the suit as filed for claiming mesne profits was not maintainable and was liable to be dismissed."

The learned pleader for the appellant contended that the question of profits for the years in suit, that is, 1920-21, 1921-22, and 1922-23, ought to have been raised and agitated in the partition suit, and could not be claimed in a subsequent suit, as the matter in dispute was one, which in the ordinary course was a relevant question in the partition suit. He cited Sri Ranga Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar (1) at p. 874 of 50 Mad. and Gulabchand Chhotiram v. Ramnath Chhotiram (2) at pp. 332 and 333 of 46 Bom. in support of the point raised by him. It is clear from the written statement filed by the appellant and his pleadings recorded in the trial Court, that this point was not raised by him at all in the Court below. The only objection which the appellant put forward is contained in para. 12 of the written statement, which runs as follows :

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 801=50 Mad. 866.
(2) A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 119=46 Bom. 327.

"Plaintiffs are claiming as per award of the Panches but as the Panches have given their award on 13th November 1923, plaintiffs are not entitled to claim mesne profits for the years 1920-21 and 1921-22. This defendant therefore denies the plaintiff's claim in toto."

No reason was assigned, why the appellant was not liable for the claim for the year 1922-23, and it was never alleged that the suit was not maintainable. The rulings cited do not support the contention raised In Gulabchand Chhotiram v Ramnath Chhotiram (2) the plaintiffs brought another suit against the defendants to recover from them by way of damages rent of certain lands, and the amount due in respect of certain bonds, both of which were referred to, by the trial Judge in the partition suit. The plaintiffs had not followed the instructions, contained in the judgment, and the real ground for the dismissal of the suit was stated by Shah, J., in the following words :

"The present suit in respect of the rents for the years 1905 to 1910 is nothing but a claim for mesne profits partly prior to the date of the partition suit, and partly after the date of the suit. It is clear that it was really a point arising in the partition suit, and having regard to the result of the appeal to this Court there could be no doubt that that claim would have been disallowed, even if it had been allowed by the lower Court. It follows that the plaintiffs cannot now maintain a suit in respect of the mesne profits which would have been disallowed if they had been claimed then as mesne profits."

The facts of that case were quite different, and the remarks contained on pp. 332 and 333 do not apply to the facts of this case. Reliance was placed on the following remarks contained in Sri Ranga Thathacharıar v. Srinivasa Thathacharıar (1) 874 of 50 Mad. :

"But subsequent to the date of the suit, the plaintiff and the first defendant were only tenants-in-common or cosharers and therefore the first defendant is strictly bound to account for all receipts and expenses and as observed by the lower Court can take credit only for such expenses as have been incurred for the benefit or necessity of the estate, and the net income after deduction of such expenses will have to be divided equally between him and the plaintiff."

The point now urged was not raised in that case. After the compromise of 1920, the appellant and the respondents were tenants-in-common and as the appellant was in possession, .he had to make over to the respondents their share of the profits. This was filed as a suit for partition, but after the compromise, the arbitrators were asked to divide certain specific property and this they did. The suit for partition was first filed in 1917, and as held in Soundararajan v Arunachalam Chetty (3), the filing of a plaint claiming partition amounts to an unambiguous manifestation of intention on the part of the plaintiff to separate. The severance of joint status took place in 1917, if not earlier, and from that year, the parties became tenants-in-common. The respondents, as stated in para. 3 of the plaint, gave up specificially, their claim on account of profits, from the year 1910-11 to the date of compromise. The claim for the years for which the suit was filed in 1924 was not made then and could not have been made. The suit after the compromise of 1920, did not continue as a partition suit, and the arbitrators did not take into consideration the question of mesne profits, because it was not referred to them There is no doubt that the claim as laid is maintainable. Bhivrav v. Sitaram (4) is clear authority on the point and the facts of that case were similar to the facts of this case In that case, it was held that where a decree for partition is silent about mesne profits subsequent to to the institution of the suit, a party is at liberty to assert his right to such profits by a separate suit. The claim for profits made by a member of a Hindu joint family in a suit for partition, though, is not technically one for "mesne profits" as used in the Civil Procedure Code, must be calculated on the same basis.

The respondents were excluded from their share of the property by the appellant in this case. This is clear from the perusal of the judgment, Ex P-1, and the award, Ex. P-134. Their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed mesne profits from date of exclusion of cosharers in Appa Rao v. Court of Wards (5) and, in our opinion, the lower Court was right in calculating profits on the basis which it adopted. We therefore hold that the suit as framed was maintainable (The judgment discussed evidence as to amount of mesne profits and concluding that the calculation by the lower Court was correct, proceeded.)

(3) [1916] 39 Mad. 159=29 M. L. J. 816=33 I. C. 858=(1916) 1 M. W. N. 31.
(4) [1895] 19 Bom. 532.
(5) [1882] 5 Mad. 236=9 I. A. 125=4 Sar. 345 (P.C.).

Lastly, it was urged that Rs. 1,151-8-6 ought not to have been awarded as interest, on the amount of the profits calculated by the Court, and Gopala v. Ramkrishnapuri (6) was cited in this connexion. It was argued that the appellant ought not to have been treated as a trespasser and on the analogy of a lambardar in Central Provinces he could not be made to pay interest on profits realized by him. Batten, A. J. C., had made the following observation in Gopala v. Ramkrishnapuri (6, (at p. 87) .

"As a matter of fact there is no uniform practice of the Courts to grant interest irrespective of the circumstance and I myself have never allowed interest in such suits unless the plaintiff proves special circumstances entitling him to claim interest."

The relations between a lambardar and a cosharer are not analogous to those which exist between two co-tenants, one of whom is kept out of possession. The appellant must pay interest in this case, because he unnecessarily detained money in his hand, which he ought to have handed over immediately to the respondents who were entitled to it.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Gaurishankar—Non-Applicant.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 53 of 1929, Decided on 10th August 1929, from decision of Addl Judge, to 1st Class Sub-Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Suit No 10 of 1929

(a) Court fees Act S. 4—Scope.

Filing of an appeal on insufficient court-fee stamp with the knowledge that it is insufficient, with a view to save limitation, cannot be allowed. [P 295 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C , S. 149—Appellant not caring to find out proper court fee payable on memorandum of appeal—Discretion under S 149 to allow party to make up deficiency of court fees, even after expiration of period of limitation for filing of appeal cannot be exercised.

Discretion given to the Court by S. 149 to allow a party to make up the deficiency of court-fees payable on a memorandum of appeal even after the expiration of the period of limitation, prescribed for filing of the appeal, can be exercised in cases where the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by a bona fide mistake or a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation but not where the appellant never cared to find out the proper court-fee which he had to pay on the memorandum of appeal. [P 295 C 1, 2]

(c) Court-fees Act, S. 4—S. 4 is imperative

Section 4 is imperative in its terms and makes it impossible for the Court to entertain a memorandum of appeal upon which the proper amount of court-fee has not been paid. [P 295 C 2]

Fida Hussain—for Applicant.

Judgment.—This is an appeal, which was filed in this Court on 19th July 1929, on a court-fee of Rs 10, against the judgment and decree dated 12th April 1929, passed by Mr S D. Phatak, Additional Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Hoshangabad, decreeing plaintiff's claim against defendants 1 and 2 for Rs 4649-12 7 with proportionate costs and future interes The proper court-fee payable in this case is Rs. 260, but the appeal has been filed on a court-fee of Rs. 10 only, and a month's time is asked for, to make up the deficiency in court fees. The application filed with the appeal mentions the following facts :

"That a preliminary issue was framed about the admissibility or otherwise of oral evidence and was decided against the appellant That the appellant came to Nagpur with the intention of filing an appeal against that order and was told that an appeal could be filed on a court fee of Rs 2 but did not file the appeal, as he was advised to wait till the final decision of the suit. That after the suit was finally decided, he sent his man to get the appeal filed, but being under the impression, that the appeal could be filed on a Court-fee stamp of Rs 2, he did not provide his man with the necessary funds That the man came to know at Nagpur that full court-fee will have to be paid and as the last date for filing the appeal was 20th July 1929 and as there was not enough time for the man to go back and to arrange and send Rs 355, the appeal was filed on a stamp of Rs. 10"

Relying on these facts the appellants want a month's time to make good the deficiency in court-fee.

Section 4, Court-fees Act, runs as follows :

" No document of any of the kinds specified in Sch. 1 or 2 to this Act annexed, as chargeable with fees, shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in, or shall be received or furnished by, any of the said High Courts in any case coming before such Court in the exercise of its extraordinary original civil jurisdiction , or in the exercise of its extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction , or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the judgment of two or more Judges of the said Court, or of a Division Court, or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the Courts subject to its superintendence, or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of reference or revision, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document."

3. In this case, the decree was passed on 12th April 1929, and the appellants must have come to know on that date that it was for a sum of Rs 4,649-12-7. Any one at Hoshangabad would have told them, that they will have to pay full court-fee on the amount decreed, if they wanted to file an appeal. Apparently they made no enquiry and sent a man to Nagpur to file the appeal, when only two days were left for the period of limitation to expire. The advice which was given before was about the court-fee to be paid in a miscellaneous appeal or a revision application, against an interlocutory order, but no advice was sought or was given about the court-fee to be paid, on a memorandum of appeal against the decree which might be eventually passed in the case. It is not alleged that the appellants made any enquiry about the amount of court-fee which it would be necessary for them to pay on their memorandum of appeal. They applied for copies of judgment and decree on 3rd July 1929 and got these copies on 12th July 1929. They could have got the requisite information at Hoshangabad, about the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal, after they had obtained the copies of judgment and decree. The appellants never cared to find out after the decree was passed, as to what court fees would be required for filing an appeal against the decree passed against them. The reasons stated in the application are not sufficient to extend time and therefore I refuse to do so.

This is a case in which an appeal was filed, on insufficient court-fee stamp, with the knowledge that it is insufficient, with a view to save limitation. This cannot be permitted. Section 4, Court-fees Act, expressly provides that no document shall be filed, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount indicated in the schedules as a proper fee. In this case the proper fee has not been paid. Section 149, Civil P. C. gives a discretion to the Court to allow a party to make up the deficiency of court-fees payable on a memorandum of appeal, even after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for filing of the appeal. This discretion can be exercised in suitable cases, where the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by a bona fide mistake or a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation but not in a case of this nature, where the appellants never cared to find out the proper court-fee which they had to pay on their memorandum of appeal. Section 4, Court fees Act, is imperative in its terms and makes it impossible for the Court to entertain a memorandum of appeal upon which the proper amount of court-fee has not been paid. The amount of court fee payable was not open to doubt, and therefore the appellants cannot be allowed to pay the balance of the court fee within a month from 19th July 1929. The appeal is insufficiently stamped and therefore I refuse to accept it.

FINDLAY, J. C.

Narayan Singh Chhatri—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No 189 of 1928, Decided on 25th September 1928, from decision of Addl Sess Judge, Nagpur, D/- 14th June 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss 238 and 537—Trial by jury — Accused charged with major offence—Jury returning verdict of guilty in respect of minor offence—Verdict of jury is right and is covered by S 537 (a)

An accused was convicted by a jury of an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., and the verdict of the jury was accepted by the Sessions Judge. It was contended that the Judge used the jury as assessors in accepting the verdict for an offence with which th accused was not specifically charged and that therefore the High Court could go into the facts as if the verdict amounted to an opinion of the assessors:

Held that the effect of S. 238, Criminal P. C., was to invest a jury trying an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., with authority to find that the facts proved only constitute a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty of such offence. It cannot be disputed that, in view of the charge under S 307, I. P. C., the fact that no charge under S 325 was framed is not even a defect or irregularity and, as such, curable under S. 537 (a), Criminal P. C., for the simple reason that, under S. 238 (1), Criminal P. C., the accused was liable, without separate charge, to be convicted incidentally of the minor offence under S. 325, I. P. C. The High Court could not interfere and go into the question of facts on which the jury delivered the verdict they did . 26 Mad. 243, Ayyangar, J., Foll. [P 296 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 298—Duty of Judge, while charging Jury.

It is not the duty of the Judge to discuss in detail each and every item of the evidence and any such discussion of the evidence by the Judge in the charge leads to a great risk of the Judge pressing his own view of the facts too positively. [P 297 C 2]

B. R. Mandlekar—for Appellant

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Narayan Singh and his co-accused Raghunath (Criminal Appeal 191 of 1928), who has also appealed to this Court, have been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge at a jury trial of offences under Ss 147 and 325 read with S. 145, I. P. C., in the case of Narayan Singh, and as regards Raghunath of an offence under S 147, I. P. C., simpliciter. The appellant Narayan Singh has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment, and the appellant Raghunath to six months' rigorous imprisonment In the case of Narayan Singh, sentence was imposed on him only under S. 325 read with S 149, I. P. C.

The main aspects of the case are sufficiently clear, not only from the charge of the Additional Sessions Judge to the jury but also from his order of reference in the case of another accused Tukaram to this Court The result of that order of reference was that Tukaram, who had been acquitted by the verdict of the jury, has been convicted by another Judge of this Court of offences punishable under Ss. 147 and 325 read with S. 149, I. P. C. Both the order of reference and the judgment of Mohiuddin, A J. C., dated 11th September 1928, give an admirable summary of the facts of the case and it is unnecessary, therefore, to repeat them in any detail in the present judgment. It will suffice to say that in all 28 accused were tried in the Sessions Court for offences under Ss. 147 and 307, I. P. C The jury unanimously convicted 16 of the accused including the appellants. As regards 11 accused, whom the jury acquitted, the Additional Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and only disagreed with the verdict of the jury so far as the accused Tukaram was concerned. The result of the disagreement of the Additional Sessions Judge with the jury's verdict in the case of Tukaram has already been stated above.

The first question, which I have to consider in the case of each of the appellants (who have been represented by separate pleaders) is whether there is any ground on which I can interfere with the verdict of the jury as regards these two appellants in view of the law as laid down in Ss. 418 and 423, sub-S. (2), Criminal P. C.

I take up first the case of Narayan Singh This appellant was charged with offences under Ss. 147 and 325 read with S. 149, I. P C. The jury, however, as already stated, convicted the appellant of an offence under S. 147, and further held that he had been specifically guilty of an offence under S. 325, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge accepted this verdict and convicted the appellant accordingly On the strength of certain remarks made by Benson, J., in Pattikadan Ummaru v Emperor (1) it has been urged before me that, in accepting the verdict of the jury for the offence under S. 325, with which the appellant was not specifically charged, the learned Additional Sessions Judge in reality used the jury as assessors and that, therefore, this Court is competent to go into the facts of the case precisely as if the verdict of the jury amounted merely to an opinion as from assessors.

For my own part, with all respect, I prefer the view taken by Ayyangar, J., in the same case. The latter learned Justice was of opinion that the effect of S. 238, Criminal P. C., was to invest a jury trying an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., with authority to find that the facts proved only constitute a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty of such offence. It cannot be disputed that, in view of the charge under S. 307, I. P. C, the fact that no charge under S. 325 was framed is not even a defect or irregularity and, as such, curable under S. 537 (a), Criminal P C., for the simple reason that, under S. 238 (1), Criminal P C., the appellant was liable, without any separate charge, to be convicted incidentally of the minor offence under S 325, I. P C. When S. 418, Criminal P C, moreover is read with S. 537 (a)

idem, the position seems to me perfectly plain and it would be a mere reductio ad absurdum to suggest that, because the jury has convicted the appellant of the minor offence under S. 325, this Court is competent to go into the facts, although it could not have done so had the conviction been for the more serious offence which was charged. I am therefore of opinion that, so far as this objection goes, the view taken by Ayyangar, J., in the Madras case quoted above is undoubtedly the correct one and, so far as this objection is concerned, there is obviously no ground on which I could interfere and go into the question of facts on which the jury delivered the verdict they did.

The next point, which has been urged on behalf of the appellant Narayan Singh, is that the opinion of the jury was wrong and perverse. It is difficult to understand how, in the present case, such a contention can be seriously urged. Apparently the position of the pleader for the appellant in this connexion is that, because, as held by a fellow Judge of this Court, the jury went wrong in the case of a single accused one out of 12 viz., Tukaram, a presumption should also be drawn that the jury had erred in the opposite direction in not acquitting the present appellant and the other accused against whom they returned a verdict of guilty. Such an argument hardly requires serious consideration, and the best proof of its utter want of substance is the fact that Mohiuddin, A. J. C, found it to be his duty to convict even the accused Tukaram.

It has again been urged, in what is obviously a somewhat unsubstantial attempt, to induce this Court to go into the questions of fact involved in the case on insufficient grounds, that the charge to the jury was not a proper and complete one, anyhow as regards the appellant Narayan Singh. For my own part, I desire to say in the first instance that, in this difficult, complicated and keenly contested criminal proceeding, the fair, full and lucid charge framed by the Additional Sessions Judge seems to me a model of what should be expected of a Judge in this connexion. I have been referred to the fact that, in para. 18 of the charge, the Judge only referred to certain alibi evidence produced by Narayan Singh and it has been suggested that only some two prosecution witnesses identified him out of the many others who had received injuries. This and other matters of fact arising out of the evidence were referred to by the appellant's pleader, but what I have, first of all, to determine before I go into such points of detail, is whether there is any prima facie reason on which I can hold that the charge was a wrong or illegal one in any respect. The present appellant is one of the three Rangdas who took a leading part in the riot, and the evidence, which had to be considered by the jury in the appellant's case, was referred to not only in para. 18 of the charge but in para. 10 and para. 13 as well, while the learned Additional Sessions Judge, in para. 13, put forward the possible plea of self-defence which might be offered on behalf of the appellants, and again, in para. 22, the question of the acceptance or otherwise of the alibis was very fairly and fully put before the jury.

Much of the argument, in fact, which has been adduced before me in connexion with the said charge, suggests that there has been some misunderstanding on the part of both the pleaders concerned as to the exact function of a Judge in charging a jury. It is not the duty of the Judge to discuss in detail each and every item of the evidence and any such discussion of the evidence by the Judge in the charge leads to a great risk of the Judge pressing his own view of the facts too positively The provisions in Ss. 298 and 299, Criminal P. C., are sufficiently clear in this connexion and, after carefully considering the case of the present appellants, I can find no ground whatever which would justify me in going into the facts of the case with a view to interfering with the verdict of the jury, a verdict in support of which there is overwhelming evidence on record.

Turning to the case of the appellant Raghunath, much what I have already said applies in his case also. It has, however, been suggested on behalf of the present appellant, Raghunath, that there was misdirection or at any rate want of sufficient direction in the charge to the jury as regards this appellant I have been referred to the fact that Ragho (P. W. 1), pp. 53 and 54 of the record, does not mention Raghunath at all, while Lahanu (P W. 13), p 141 of the record, says that Raghunath did nothing ; he was merely present at the marpit and had no weapons in his hands. Again, Joseph (P. W. 23), p. 192 (reverse of the record) mentions that, amongst Tukaram's party, there were people like the present appellant who had neither stick nor gun with them . vide also the evidence of Karamchand (P. W. 28), p. 229 (reverse of the record), who says that except Nathu, no one mentioned Raghunath's name. This and other points of detail in the evidence have been put forward before me in support of the allegation that the Additional Sessions Judge failed to put the case of this appellant fairly and squarely before the jury.

I am of opinion, however, that when para. 22 of the charge is read with para. 10 thereof, in particular, as well as with much of the context, the learned Additional Sessions Judge obviously put the law applicable to the offence of rioting most fairly and squarely before the jury. Ragho (P. W. 1) did, as a matter of fact, state that Raghunath was present and was obviously an abettor of the rioters and making common cause with them, and the evidence of Lahanu (P. W 13) and Joseph (P. W. 23) clearly shows that this appellant was present amongst the rioters The evidence on record indeed goes to suggest that the present appellant was one of the ring-leaders who remained at the back directing the assault. It was open to the jury to have taken a view favourable to the appellant, but there were obviously very good grounds why they did not do so, and I am wholly unable to see that there is any legal ground on which I could hold that the extremely able and fair charge to the jury in any way prejudiced the case of this appellant. I am unable, therefore, to interfere with the conviction of either of the appellants.

As regards the sentences, it has been urged before me that, in any event, both the appellants are entitled to some degree of leniency, and an allusion has been made to the fact that the main ring-leader, Tukaram, has only been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2,500. In the case of an extremely bold concerted and deliberate riot of the kind I am concerned with, in which fire-arms were used to the danger of life, and serious injuries were inflicted on various members of the other party, I am wholly unable to see any reason for reducing the sentence which has been imposed on either of the appellants. The sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment on Raghunath is, in reality, a peculiarly lenient one, while as regards Narayan Singh it is plain that he was the first person to use force and took up a prominent and leading part throughout in the riot. I am not concerned with the quantum of punishment imposed upon Tukaram by my learned brother ; I have only to consider what is, in my opinion, a suitable penalty for the offences committed by the two appellants. A more grave case of disturbance of the public peace it is difficult to conceive of, and I am wholly unable to see any ground for mitigation of the sentences in the way of reduction thereof

Both appeals are accordingly dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 178 of 1926. Decided on 29th November 1928, from a decree of Dist. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 10th December 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1925

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 95—Withholding of possession after symbolical delivery of possession gives rise to fresh cause of action for possession—Adverse possession.

The possession of the judgment-debtor after symbolical delivery of property in execution of a final decree for foreclosure can only be regarded as a fresh act of trespass giving rise to a new cause of action. So if the judgment-debtor remains in possession after such delivery, the cause of action arises when formal possession is taken . 10 *N. L. Under Art. 136 a person in his capacity of a private purchaser has 12 years' limitation to sue for possession of immovable property sold to him by his vendor when out of possession at the date of sale, the starting point of limitation being the date when the vendor was first entitled to possession ; and the mere circumstance that the purchaser takes five years to complete his title against his vendor cannot give him a fresh starting point of limitation as he can only sue in the right of his vendor : 2 N. L. R. 32, Rel. on [P 301 C 1]

Judgment.—One Kanhaiyalal son of Ramprasad of Gadarwada obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on 10th September 1910, against Gaurishankar in Suit No 66 of 1908 brought on foot of a mortgage. The said defendant failed to redeem the mortgaged property, namely, fields of absolute occupancy tenure bearing Nos. 415 and 416, area 16.29, rent Rs 10 and 3 houses including a plot situate in Gadarwada, and the preliminary decree was consequently made final on 6th December 1911 (Ex. P-10). The decree was later on executed and possession of the fields foreclosed was taken on 12th April 1912, and that of the house property in June and December 1912, as per receipts Exs. P-7, P. 8 and P. 9. The actual possessior, however, remained with the judgment-debtor, and Kanhaiyalal looked upon him as being wrongfully in possession, as recited in the receipt dated 27th November 1916 (Ex. P-1), which he executed in favour of the present plaintiff. This receipt evidenced a contract for a sale of the self-same property to plaintiff, for a consideration of Rs 1,001 by Kanhaiyalal, who was being wrongfully kept out of possession by the person whom he had foreclosed. Kanhaiyalal had received Rs. 51 from the plaintiff by way of earnest money, and, it was agreed that the balance of Rs. 950 was to be paid at the time of the registration of sale-deed By the terms of Ex. P-1 and its counter-part Ex. D-8, the vendee was authorized to secure possession of the fields and the houses privately, or, by suit as he thought fit.

Plaintiff called upon Kanhaiyalal to perform his part of the contract of sale by executing a sale-deed in his favour, but for some reason or the other, the document of sale was not secured, and, consequently, the sale in his favour was not completed. Exhibits D-7, 9 and 10 are the notices which passed between the vendor and the vendee in connexion with the breach of contract of sale. These are dated 16th December 1916, 14th

December 1916, and 22nd December 1916, respectively. It appears that the matter remained in suspense after that for some time. In the meantime of 22nd January 1917, Kanhaiyalal executed a conveyance (Ex. D-1) of the property in favour of Gaurishankar and the two minor sons of Laxminarayan Dube his nephew. As one of the purchasers was a judgment-debtor and already held actual possession, there was no formal delivery of possession to the vendees. The possession which the judgment-debtor held in spite of its symbolical delivery by Court to the decree-holder in April, June, and December 1912, thus became lawful possession of the vendees entitled to hold it, in their own right, with effect from 22nd January 1917, subject to such rights, as there may be in favour of plaintiff by virtue of his contract of purchase dated 27th November 1916, (Ex. P-1).

On 27th November 1919, the plaintiff instituted Suit No. 668 of 1919, for specific performance of the contract of sale dated 27th November 1916, against Kanhaiyalal his vendor. Exhibit D-6 is the plaint in that suit. Exhibit D-5 is the judgment dated 23rd August 1920, and Ex. P-13 is the decree passed in that case. In pursuance of this decree, a sale-deed was executed by Kanhaiylal, on 12th February 1921, (Ex P-2), and the same was registered on 21st February 1921. The consideration of Rs. 950 which had to be paid before the Sub-Registrar was deposited in the civil Court on 18th November 1920, as per receipt Ex. P-3 and the same is said to have never been withdrawn by Kanhaiyalal as he had already received the full consideration of Ex. D-1 from the appellants in 1917.

As the property covered by the sale-deed Ex P-2 was in the possession of the present appellants, the plaintiff-respondent, on 23rd November 1922, instituted the present suit against them, for recovery of possession thereof with mesne profits. The first Court decreed the claim and the lower appellate Court confirmed that decree. Hence this second appeal.

It has been concurrently held by both the Courts below that the appellants' purchase, dated 22nd January 1917, (Ex D-1), was with full notice of the plaintiff's contract of sale dated 27th November 1916. The appellants' contention that the plaintiff being admittedly aware, at the date of his Suit No. 66 of 1919, of his vendor Kanhaiyalal having sold the property to the appellants already, and of their having been in adverse or wrongful possession of the same from before the date of his contract as recited in Ex. P. 1, was bound to implead them also in that suit, as subsequent purchasers with notice of the contract and to obtain a decree for specific performance and possession as against them, and that he having omitted to sue for that relief then, is precluded from bringing the present suit for possession under O 2, R 2, Civil P. C., was overruled It was held that, it was not necessary to ask for possession or to join the appellants in the former suit, and that the present suit was tenable. It was further held that the suit for possession of the absolute occupancy fields was in time, as the right to possession came into existence when the sale-deed was executed on 12th February 1921.

The appellants contest every one of these findings in second appeal But so far as the finding on the question of notice to them of the plaintiff's contract of sale is concerned, I think, it is not permissible to them to go behind it in second appeal. The only other points, which as questions of law can be gone into, are the following :

1. Whether the present suit for possession of the property comprising absolute occupancy fields and house property is barred by time as regards any portion?

2 Whether the present suit, for mere possession and mesne profits without a prayer for the relief of specific performance, is maintainable, in view of the admitted failure of plaintiff, to join the present appellants as co-defendants, and to obtain a decree for specific performance and possession, even as against them, in the former suit ?

In spite of the delivery of symbolical possession of the property through Court to Kanhaiyalal in 1912, the judgment-debtor Gaurishankar had been wrongfully keeping him out of actual possession and enjoyment of the same, for over four years at the date of the purchase as per Ex. D-1, dated 22nd January 1927. The possession of Gaurishankar was, admittedly, wrongful, as recited in Ex P-1 dated 27th November 1916. That such withholding of possession gives rise to a fresh cause of action for a suit for possession is clear from Dhansingh v. Ganpat (1), where it is laid down that

" the possession of the judgment-debtor after such (symbolical) delivery can only be regarded as a fresh act of trespass giving rise to a new cause of action. "

Kanhaiyalal's cause of action had thus accrued, and limitation had begun to run against him from 12th April, 7th June and 6th December 1912, when formal possession was taken, as per receipts, Exs. P-7, P-8 and P-9, under Art 142, Lim. Act : cf. Partap Chand v Saiyida Bibi (2) and Kashinath Sitaram v. Shridhar Mahadeo (3) The starting point of limitation was the date of delivery of symbolical possession of the property comprised in the final decree for foreclosure as stated above. This period of limitation was to expire, so far as the fields were concerned, on 12th April 1924, and as to the house property, on 7th June and 6th December 1924. While he was thus wrongfully kept out of possession, but when his own right to sue was in time, he assigned by a private sale the benefit of the decree to plaintiff by an agreement dated 27th November 1916, and in pursuance of that agreement executed the sale-deed (Ex. P-2) in his favour on 12th February 1921 Under Art. 136, Sch. 1, Lim. Act of 1908, the plaintiff in his capacity of a private purchaser had 12 years' limitation to sue for possession of immovable property sold to him by his vendor when out of possession at the date of sale, the starting point of limitation being the date when the vendor was first entitled to possession . cf. Ganpat Rao Bhonsle v Ganpat Rao Gopal Rao Ghatatey (4).

I am not, therefore, prepared to hold that the mere circumstance that the plaintiff took five years to complete his title as against Kanhaiyalal could give him a fresh starting point of limitation, as he could sue only in the right of his vendor under Art. 136. So, irrespective of the question that the suit for possession was not brought by Kanhaiyalal, but by plaintiff, as his assignee, the starting point of limitation remained a constant factor, namely, the dates of the symbolical deliveries as per receipts for possession (Exs. P-7, P-8 and P-9) The present suit for possession was, so far as the house property was concerned, surely within time, as, on 23rd November 1922, the limitation of 12 years had not run out. No question of limitation, therefore, arises so far as the house property is concerned for the purposes of this second appeal unless it may under Art. 113, which I will consider later on

But it is contended by the appellants that as regards the absolute occupancy fields the position is quite different. The present claim for possession in regard to them was barred by limitation on 23rd November 1922, as it ought to have been instituted at the latest on 1st May 1921, in view of the provisions of S. 104 (2), C. P. Tenancy Act, read in conjunction with the special limitation prescribed by Art. 1, Sch., 2 of the said Act. In answer to this contention the plaintiff's learned pleader urged that as the appellants' purchase, dated 22nd January 1917, was with notice of his client's prior contract of sale dated 27th November 1916, no plea of limitation can be available to them, in view of S. 10, Lim. Act, and that, however wrongful the previous possession of Gaurishankar may have been, it became converted into possession derived from Kanhaiyalal, the lawful owner thereof, on the date of the sale, dated 22nd January 1917, and was stamped with the character of possession lawfully taken from plaintiff's vendor and as such the same was held by the appellants as trustees for him, or, at any rate, subject to such equities as may have been created in his favour by reason of the purchase being with notice of his prior contract.

The question as put by the learned pleader for the respondent turns upon the constructions and applicability of S. 10, Lim Act, to the facts of this case. In this connexion the period of possession between April 1912 and the date of the suit may be divided into parts :

(1) The period from April 1912 to 27th November 1916, (Ex. P-1) ,

(2) the period from 27th November 1916, to 22nd January 1917, (Ex. D-1) ;

(3) the period from 22nd January 1917, to 27th November 1919, the date of Suit No. 68 of 1919;

(4) the period from 27th November 1919 to 12th February 1921 (Ex. P-2), and

(4) [1906] 2 N. L. R. 32.

(5) the period from 12th February 1921 to 23rd November 1922

I will now deal with these periods.

As regards the first period there can be no doubt as to the wrongful or adverse nature of Gaurishankar's possession. Kanhaiyalal has frankly admitted it to be so in Ex. P-1 and the whole tenor of the document clearly shows that he did not want to undertake to procure delivery of possession to plaintiff but distinctly directed the latter to secure it as best as he could privately or by suit if necessary. As to the second period, there is nothing to show that the adverse character of possession was expressly changed The question, however still remains for consideration whether by reason of Gaurishankar and his minor grandnephews taking the sale deed (Ex. D-1) on 22nd January 1917, from Kanhaiyalal with notice of plaintiff's contract (Ex. P-1) they must be deemed to have converted their own adverse possession into a sort of possession held by them, as it were, in conjunction with Kanhaiyalal i e, as a trustee of plaintiff for working out the latter's right under his prior contract of sale? When a person has possession of another man's property, the legal character in which he holds it is determined by his animus. In purchasing the property from Kanhaiyal by payment of consideration they could not be considered to have expresely contracted to change the character of their possession At any rate Gaurishankar could not be said to have consented to hold possession for or on behalf of plaintiff As, on the contrary, he and the minors got Kanhaiyalal to covenant that they shall thereafter hold the property in their own right, they have shown their animus with sufficient definiteness Under the terms of their sale deed (Ex D-1) they cannot, therefore, be considered to have taken possession in any capacity other than that of legal owners, much less could they be regarded as having taken possession under any express trust for the benefit of plaintiff merely because they had no ice of his prior contract of purchase as per (Ex. P-1.) Let us next see whether law or equity superimposes a constructive trust.

In order to create a trust with reference to immovable property the Indian Trusts Act (2 of 1882), which is applicable to this case, requires a registered instrument signed by the author of the trust or the trustee and there must be a clear indication of an intention to create a trust. There is nothing in the wording of Ex. D-1 to show that either Kanhaiyalal the vendor or the appellants vendees intended to create any trust. S 10, Lim. Act, lays down that no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, for the purpose of following in his hand such property shall be barred by any length of time The words used are "in trust for any specific purpose" The expression "trust for any specific purpose" is merely a more expanded mode of expressing the same idea as that conveyed by the term "express trust" by the English law and it means the same thing as the express trust of the English law both the phrases being synonymous in meaning: cf. Mathuradas v. Vandrawandas (5). The Trusts Act restricts the scope of the term trustee more closely than in England and considers constructive and resulting trusts as not trusts but as obligations, in the nature of trusts: see Chap. 9. It, therefore, follows that S. 10, Lim. Act excludes from its operation such trusts as the law would imply merely from the existence of particular facts or fiduciary relations: cf. Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (6), Secretary of State v. Radhika Prasad Bapuli (7), Ma Thein May v. U Po Kin (8) and Kishan Dei v. Ram Chand (9.) It is for this reason held that if a person has been in possession not being a trustee but still being in under such circumstances that a Court, on principles of equity, would hold him a trustee, he is not an express trustee and if the possession of such a constructive trustee has continued for more than 12 years, he may set up the statutes against the party who but for lapse of time would be rightful owner : cf. Barkat v. Daulat (10).

The position of a constructive trustee in the usual sense of the word, that is to say, of a person who, though he had taken possession in his own right, was liable to be declared a trustee in a Court of Equity was widely different (from that of an express trustee) and it had long been settled that time ran in his favour from the moment of his so taking possession. This rule is illustrated by the well known judgment of Sir William Grant, M. R., in Beckford v. Wade (11): "It is certainly true," said that learned Judge ":

"that no time bars a direct trust, as between cestui que trust and trustee; but if it is meant to be asserted, that a Court of Equity allows a man to make out a case of constructive trust at any distance of time, after the facts and circumstances happened, out of which it arises, I am not aware, that there is any ground for a doctrine, so fatal to the security of property as that would be, so far from it, that not only in circumstances, where the length of time would render it extremely difficult to ascertain the true state of the fact, but where the true state of the fact is easily ascertained, and where it is perfectly clear, that relief would originally have been given upon the ground of constructive trust, it is refused to the party, who after long acquiescences comes into a Court of Equity to seek that relief see Taylor v. Davies (12)."

The underlying principle of S. 27 (b), Specific Relief Act and its illustrations, is that from the time of the contract for the sale of the land the vendor as to the land becomes trustee for the vendee and the vendee as to the purchase money a trustee for the vendor who has a lien upon the land therefor. Everyone coming in by subsequent and representative title and every subsequent purchaser from either with notice, becomes subject to the same equity as the party would be to whom he succeeds or from whom he purchased. It is for this reason provided that where a bona fide contract is made for the sale of the property and another person afterwards buys the property with notice of the contract, the title of the party claiming under the contract prevails against the subsequent purchaser, although his purchase may have been registered and although he has obtained possession under his purchase: cf Harnandun Singh v Jawad Ali (13) The case of such subsequent purchaser falls under S. 91, Trusts Act. As such it is a trust created by operation of law or by conduct of parties and cannot be called an express trust. Being resulting or constructive trust it is outside the purview of S. 10, Lim. Act. I therefore, overrule the contention of the respondent that when the appellants took a sale from Kanhaiyalal on 22nd January 1917, they became trustees for a specific purpose within the meaning of S 10, Lim. Act. They, no doubt, became trustees but the nature of the trust instead of being express, was constructive, and, consequently, the Statute of Limitation ran in their favour from the moment of their taking possession as purchasers. They could, therefore, plead limitation to the same extent to which their vendor could have pleaded it in answer to a suit by plaintiff to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale. This will clearly show that the possession of Gaurishankar prior to 22nd January 1917 and that of himself and his grandnephews since that date, was clearly adverse to Kanhaiyalal, and, therefore, necessarily also the plaintiff The hostile nature of that possession might have been arrested in 1920 by obtaining against them a decree in Suit No. 68 of 1919 had the appellants been impleaded as parties thereto, and a decree obtained against them along with Kanhaiyalal.

The proper decree in a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell land when the same has been sold to a third party subsequent to the contract with the plaintiff is to direct the subsequent purchaser to execute a conveyance to the plaintiff : cf. Subiha Pillai v. Velappa Naicken (14) and Krishnaji Babaji v. Sangappa Muriyappa (15) It, therefore, follows that in view of S. 27 (b), Specific Relief Act, S. 91, Trusts Act, it was open to the plaintiff to so frame his suit with reference to O. 2, R. 1, Civil P. C, as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them. As the appellants were in possession under a subsequent purchase taken from the plaintiff's vendor Kanhaiyalal, and, if as found by the Courts below, their purchase was with notice of the plaintiff's prior contract of sale, he had really one cause of action to sue to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale and possession against the party to the contract, viz., Kanhaiyalal, and the subsequent transferees from him, viz., the appellants. Though the former Suit No 68 of 1919 was not liable to be defeated merely on the ground of non-joinder of the present appellants as parties thereto, as O. 1, R. 9 of the Code is clear on the point, it is clear that the mere obtaining of a decree in that suit and the execution of sale-deed (Ex. P-2) by the judgment-debtor Kanhaiyalal in pursuance of that decree behind the back of the appellants did not put an end to all controversy relating to or existing between all parties interested in the property comprised in that sale It was still left open to the appellants to contest the plaintiff's right to obtain specific performance of the contract of sale and possession of the property as a consequence of such performance being decreed against them. It gave them opportunity to raise a further plea of limitation as regards the present claim, and to even urge that the suit as brought for possession of the property without suing for specific performance or after such a suit for specific performance had become barred by limitation, was not maintainable as against them.

It is clearly laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subbaraya Pillai v Venkata Perumal (16) that a vendee whose suit for specific performance is barred by Art. 113 cannot recover possession of the property sold because a suit for possession, i. e., to enforce his right under the contract with reference to property is essentially one for specific performance of a contract to which Art. 113 applies. The right to possession springs out of the sale contract and the relief by giving possession is comprised in the relief by specific performance and it cannot be governed by any article except Art. 113. The right to possession being dependent on the sale contract, if the suit is barred for specific performance it cannot be maintained for possession of the property sold under the contract : Muhiuddin Ahmad Khan v. Majlis Rai (17) Hargovindas Lakshmi Das v. Baji Bhai Jijibhai (18) and Venkanna v Venkatakrishnayya (19).

The limitation for a suit for specific performance began under Art. 113 when the vendor refused to the plaintiff's knowledge to perform the contract. Such knowledge could be imputed to plaintiff when he demanded performance by his notice dated 14th December 1916, (Ex. D-9) and the vendor refused it by his notice dated 16th December 1916, (Ex. D-7) which reached plaintiff on 22nd December 1916 (Ex. D-10). The limitation having thus begun to run against him since 22nd December 1916, (Ex. D-10), the three years' period expired on 22nd December 1919. With the loss of limitation for enforcing specific performance against the present appellants, the plaintiff lost his right to recover possession also as already stated in para 16 above. The mere obtaining of decree subsequently on 23rd August 1920 (Ex. P-13) against Kanhaiyalal could not give plaintiff any additional right to obtain a decree for specific performance against the appellants after he had once lost his limitation, much less could the execution of the sale-deed, dated 21st February 1921, by Kanhaiyalal give him any new right to demand possession from persons not bound by the decree. They were transferees under a registered deed executed long prior to the institution of Suit No 68 of 1919. As such neither the decision (Ex D-6) nor the decree (Ex. P-13) could operate as res judicata as between plaintiff and the present appellants Plaintiff thus ceased to have any subsisting cause of action to enforce against the present appellants since 1919 and their suit for possession for house property and fields was bound to fail in view of the Privy Council decision quoted above.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to go into the further question whether the suit would be barred under the provisions of S 104 (2) read with Art. 1, Sch. 2, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. If any decision were necessary on this point, I would be prepared to hold that when the plaintiff compelled Kanhaiyalal by means of the decree Ex. P-13 to give him a completed sale-deed (Ex. P-2) on 12th February 1921, he had still left to him more than three months to sue for possession, if he could maintain under law a suit for mere possession without a prayer for specific performance of the contract of sale The one year's grace period counted from 1st May 1920, the date of the commencement of the new Tenancy Act of 1920, granted by

S. 104 (2) had not then expired. In unnecessarily postponing the institution of the present suit even after that date, to 23rd November 1922, the plaintiff has done further damage to his own case, by allowing it to become barred by limitation even with reference to the requirements of the local tenancy law. It will thus be seen that the possession of the defendants-appellants which was adverse from its commencement continued to be so, throughout all the five periods mentioned in para. 10 of this judgment, and the suit as laid was liable to be dismissed altogether as barred by the statute of limitation, and also because a suit for possession without a prayer for specific performance which was barred by time could not lie.

No doubt plaintiff had offered to amend, and actually amended, the plaint by adding a prayer for the relief of specific performance. This amendment being dated 5th October 1923, when a suit for specific performance was clearly barred by limitation was of no avail. As a result of these conclusions, I allow the appeal and dismiss the suit for possession and mesne profits with costs throughout to be borne by the plaintiff.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 66 (2), (3) — Application under R. 66 (3) for order for sale is absolute necessity and condition precedent to passing of order for sale.

Application under R. 66 (3) for an order for sale accompanied by a statement duly signed and verified and containing the matters required by R. 66 (2) to be specified in the proclamation is an absolute necessity and a condition precedent to the passing of an order for sale. [P 306 C 1]

(b) Deed—Execution.

Without fraud or wrong a document cannot be materially altered after its execution: Doe v. Catomore, 16 Q.B. 745 and A. I. R. 1924 Nag. 250, Rel. on. [P 307 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 17, Proviso — Scope.

Under R. 17 (proviso) the Court can call upon the decree-holder to specify the approximate value of the land to be attached with a view to see whether the value of the property corresponds as nearly as may be with the amount due under the decree. [P 308 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 85, and General Clauses Act, S. 10—Provisions of O. 21, R. 85, read with S. 10 contemplate deposit of three fourths being made into Court on day it re-opens after vacation.

The provisions of O. 21, R. 85, read with S. 10 contemplate the deposit of three-fourths being made into Court on the day it re-opens after the vacation. So a three-fourth balance of purchase money deposited, at the time when the civil Courts are closed, with a reader of a Sessions Court in charge of duties on the criminal side, cannot be regarded as duly deposited in the Court which ordered the sale as required by law. Order.—In this case the judgment-debtor applies for revision of an order rejecting her petition for review of the order confirming an auction-sale held on 3rd May 1926, at which the non-applicant Parashram was declared to be the auction-purchaser. This revision raises somewhat intricate questions which have not received due attention and treatment at the hands of the lower Court. I think the auction-sale held in this case should have been treated as void and the application granted. It is consequently necessary for me to deal with the matter involved in the case at some length in this order.

Bapu, son of Suryabhan, patel of Kaulkheda, the client of the auction-purchaser's natural father Mr. Sunderlal Agarwal, pleader, Akola, obtained a money decree dated 6th February 1925, for Rs. 240 and costs against the present applicant Sunderabai in Suit No. 2985 of 1924 on the file of the Small Cause Court Akola. That Court sent a certificate of non-satisfaction dated 25th July 1925, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, No.2 of Akola, for execution of the decree against the immovable property of the judgment-debtor. In due course, that is, on 16th September 1925, the decree-holder through his pleader Mr. Sunderlal applied for execution of the decree for recovering Rs. 281-2-0 by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's field Survey No. 26, area 23 acres and 29 gunihas, revenue Rs. 32 situate in mauza Kaulkheda. The aforesaid pleader acted all along on behalf of the decree-holder and did all the appearances, applications and acts which he would have been required to make, had he personally conducted the proceedings in the executing Court. On 21st September 1925, Mr. Sunderlal obtained an order for the attachment which took place on 8th October 1925, which was before the date of the hearing fixed for 24th October 1925. At this hearing again the decree-holder was represented by the said pleader, and the Court passed the order "sale notice be issued on decree-holder's sale application," and fixed the case for 28th November 1925.

It appears that the Subordinate Judge did not then realize that Rr. 64 and 66 of O 21, Civil P. C., require that the Court executing the decree must pass a formal order for sale by public auction, and that sub-R. (3) R. 66. further requires that there should be an application for an order for sale and the same must be accompanied by a statement duly signed and verified and containing the matters required by sub-R (2) of the said rule to be specified in the proclamation. Such an application accompanied by a duly verified statement is an absolute necessity and a condition precedent to the passing of an order for sale. I have ransacked the whole record in order to find out whether any application praying for an order for sale accompanied by the verified statement prescribed by law was put in on or before 24th October 1925 on which day the order for sale was passed. But I have not been able to find any having been made on that date On the contrary, at record p 15, I come across process form dated 29th October 1925, which shows that process-fee for the issue of notice to settle the terms of the proclamation for the hearing dated 28th November 1925, was then paid, with the following note:

"Statement will be filed at the hearing." This process parcha bears the signature of Mr. Sunderlal. On this a rubber stamp order: "Issue J. S. Paithanakar, Judge," was impressed under date 30th October 1925. The notice was served on the judgment-debtor on 10th November 1925, but she remained absent at the hearing dated 28th November 1925.

In the presence of the said pleader the Judge at once proceeded to enquire from the Nazir the date to be fixed for the sale of the property, and fixed 5th December 1925, for the receipt of the information. Even on 28th November 1925, the learned pleader did not care to put in the application and the verified statement. On 3rd December 1925, a memo, to be found at record p. 17, was sent to the Nazir asking him to propose a date for sale. The Nazir suggested 1st March 1926 for the sale at Akola. On 5th December 1925 also the application and verified statement was still unfiled. In spite of their absence the executing Court ordered the sale of the field to take place on 1st March 1926, at Akola and fixed the 6th March 1926 as the date for submission of the report and directed "sale warrant and proclamation" to be issued. The decree-holder's pleader was present at the hearing to know that the process fee was ordered to be paid in three days, but no process fee being paid no sale could be held. Mr. Sunderlal's explanation given at the hearing dated 6th March 1926 was to the effect that the process "was by oversight paid elsewhere." Even at this hearing neither the pleader nor the Presiding Officer of the Court cared to see, before giving a fresh date for sale and ascertaining it from the Nazir whether the prescribed application and statement were filed with the record. The case, was, however, adjourned to 13th March 1926, to await the fixation of the date of sale afresh by the Nazir. A memo, dated 10th March 1926, record p 18, was sent to the Nazir who returned it with a note that the proposed 3rd May 1926, " at Akola before the Court" was the date for holding the sale. On 13th March 1926, the Judge, in the presence of Mr Sunderlal, fixed 3rd May 1926, as the date for holding the sale at Akola, and 19th June 1926 for a report and ordered "sale proclamation to issue." Even on this day the aforesaid application and statement had not come on the record.

At record p. 21 of the same file C is to be found the process-fee parcha put in by Mr. Sunderlal on 16th March 1926, and at pp. 22 and 23, the application for an order for sale accompanied by the statement prescribed by R. 66 and verified by the decree-holder Bapu. The application is undated, but the statement purports to have been drawn up, signed and verified under date 1st November 1925, but the date seems to have been altered to 6th March 1926, by the pleader who presumably presented it on 16th March 1926. From the dates noted in the margin of the application (record p. 22) it can be inferred that the same purports to be drawn up in compliance with the proceedings dated 24th October 1925 for being filed at hearing dated 28th November 1925, fixed in the execution case based on the decree dated 6th February 1925, in suit No. 2985 of 1924. But here the original dates 24th October 1925 and 28th November 1925, were respectively changed to 6th March 1926, and 18th June 1926, presumably by the said pleader. This change of dates runs counter to the explanation that the process-fee "was by oversight paid elsewhere" and shows that the papers must have remained with the pleader and not found their way to the record of any other Court.

A further but a very important change is noticeable in the body of the verified statement at the place where the approximate value of the property to be advertised for sale was mentioned. The original figure of this value reads as Rs. 5,000. It has been altered to Rs. 1,000. This was a very material alteration in a statement verified by the decree-holder under his own signature. None of the above alterations is attested by the initials of the decree-holder or of Mr. Sunderlal, pleader, in token of its being genuine and made before it was signed by the executant, or some person having an authority to make it. Without fraud or wrong, a document cannot be materially altered after its execution :cf. Doe v. Catomore (1) and Kanhayalal Tarachand v. Sitaram Tukaram (2). If what I have seen from the present record of Mr. Sunderlal's writing and particularly his figures, entitles me to judge accurately the characteristics and peculiarities with which he writes figures, I may feel myself justified in drawing an inference pointing to a probability almost amounting to a certainty that these alterations in figures must have been made by the person from whose custody the application and the statement bearing them were produced, sometime before he actually filed them, in Court, on 16th March 1926.

Here again, I cannot shut my eyes to one more important circumstance which discloses a deplorable slackness in the matter of drawing up, signing and verifying plaints, applications for execution of decrees, and statements required by law to be verified. In my opinion, this is due to the very pernicious practice of leaving in the possession of either one's own signatures, which is prevalent in some parts of this Province, and I have noticed that the Akola District is not an exception to it. This may be quite well intentioned or innocent, and, even, facilitate business, but it cannot be gainsaid it throws a heavy responsibility on the custodian to guard against any improper use of documents signed by the client in anticipation in blank being made. I think if the legal profession owes any duty to itself, it must strive hard to stop this pernicious practice, lest it may one day recoil on itself. In the present case, the verified statement at record page 23 bears two signatures one above the other on its lower portion, with a verification clause pressed in between. It is not unlikely that the decree-holder Bapu may have affixed the signature first, and then the contents of the verification clause were written in the ordinary course along with the rest of the statement written above the upper one of the two signatures. Moreover, going by the test of ink of the signatures on the statement and the application for execution, it may not be unsafe to infer that all the four signatures being in the same deep black ink were simultaneously written by, or obtained from, Bapu. The contents of the application for execution as also of the statement being written in pale blue ink make the difference in ink marked and conspicuous.

On 17th March 1926, the warrant for sale and the proclamation were drawn up. The first was signed by the Judge himself while the second bears the rubber stamp impression of his signature. A bare description and not the particulars required to be specified under sub-R. (2) of R. 66, Civil Procedure Code, of property to be advertised for sale drawn up and signed by Mr. Sunderlal, pleader, was attached to the proclamation. The warrant for sale rightly directs the sale officer to sell only such part of the attached property as would just suffice to raise Rs 289-2 the amount of the decree on 3rd May 1926 at 12 noon at Akola after the expiry of 30 days from the date of affixing a copy of the notice of sale to the Court house and publishing the proclamation, but it vaguely mentions Akola as the place where the sale is to be held, it does not clearly state that the sale will be held in the precincts of the Court house. None of these documents of importance (record pages 24 to 26) is drawn up with any degree of care or bears any mark of scrutiny by the Judge. Even the report dated 26th March 1926, of the process server on the back of the proclamation and that of the Nazir, shows carelessness. It mentions that the proclamation was made and published at the property by beat of drum on 26th March 1926, and a copy thereof was affixed to the Collector's office and the Court house on 27th March 1926 How the affixation dated 27th March 1926, could be reported under date 26th March 1926, is difficult to imagine.

I wish the Judge of the Court below had been more conversant with, and careful enough to follow, the procedure prescribed by O 21, Civil P. C, and, also, more vigilantly exercised a more efficient control over his staff, and been more watchful of the interest of the judgment-debtor whose property he happens to sell under decrees coming up for execution before him, than what he was in this case. The pleader concerned, like all other legal practitioners, was an officer of the Court in which he practised and, as such, he also owed a duty not only to his own client but also to the Court to assist it in the administration of justice according to law and procedure. A very heavy responsibility thus lay on the pleader to conduct the proceedings in the case entrusted to him according to law andin a manner befitting the honourable profession to which he belongs. Undoubtedly, there has been, in this case, a failure of duty on the part of the Judge and also the pleader in the matter of compliance with the procedure prescribed by law. I need only add one or two instances of such non-compliance which I think vitiate the whole proceeding culminating in the sale.

It is a matter for regret that in this case, the Judge who ordered the sale was so negligent in the discharge of his duties that he does not seem to have directed his attention to the necessity of avoiding the levying on an excessive attachment as contemplated by the proviso to R. 17, O. 21, Civil P. C. Under that proviso, he could have called upon the decree-holder to specify the approximate value of the land to be attached, with a view to see whether the value of the property attached corresponded as nearly as may be with the amount due under the decree. It is needless to point out that this failure to observe even such little formalities, at the proper time very often results in dire consequences to the judgment-debtor's interest, and ultimately affects prejudicially the interest of the decree-holder and even the auction-purchaser Under R. 64, at least, at the time of making an order for sale, it was open to the Court to ascertain from the decree-holder's pleader whether in order to raise a sum below Rs. 300 the whole of the field of 23 acres and odd gunthas bearing the handsome assessment of Rs. 32 and situate in the rich tract of Balapur Parganah, was necessary to be sold. But this was not done because things are either done superficially, or usually left to the Court Reader entirely.

As stated above, sub-R. (2), R. 66, does not appear to have been duly complied with. No effort seems to have been made to comply, as far as possible, with the requirements of Cl. (e) of that sub-rule, apparently because the Judge never applied his judicial mind to the question of the materiality of the information which that clause requires to be specified as fairly and accurately as possible in the proclamation. I have already adverted to the failure to insist upon the filing of the application accompanied by a statement duly signed and verified as prescribed by sub-R. (3). The Judge did not care to scrutinize the truth of the explanation given at the hearing dated 6th March 1926, to get over the failure to pay the necessary process which entailed a waste of Court's time since 5th December 1925 and necessitated the giving of a fresh date for sale two months ahead. In suggesting 1st March 1926, and 3rd May 1926, as the date for holding the sale at Akola, the Nazir, apparently contemplated holding the sale within the precincts of the Court house, presumably, either, understanding orders to that effect, or, with a view to seek any such directions from the Court as the requirement of the case may necessitate on the occasion.

On the basis of an order for sale which was passed in spite of the absence of a properly drawn up verified statement and which was proclaimed without due regard to the provisions of R. 66 and was, therefore, illegal, the auction-sale was held on the precincts of the Court house on 3rd May 1926, when the Civil Courts were open. The decree-holder had apparently left everything to his pleader. He was not present at the sale. The decree-holder's pleader, however, interested himself in attending the auction and brought his nephew Parashram Hiralal with him. The highest bid at the auction which was Rs. 500 was put in the name of Parashram Hiralal. The same was accepted and the one-fourth purchase-money realized on the spot. The remaining three-fourths purchase-money was tendered on 17th May 1926, i. e, when the Civil Courts were closed, to the Reader of the Sessions Court which was open in those days as Mr. Sunderlal pleader himself admits in his deposition Mr. Sunderlal admits having accompanied Parashram both at the auction and on the occasion of the payment of three-fourths purchase money. He in fact drew up the petition dated 17th May 1926, and got it signed by Parashram. He says Parashram went with him and was present when the application was handed over to the Reader, but he went away and the money was actually lodged by himself. Of course, he denies that the money was his own and calls it Parashram's money. But he had to admit that it is money paid out of a firm styled Parashram-Hiralal. The Reader of the Sessions Court put up the petition for orders before Mr. B. M. Vighney who was in charge of the current duties presumably on the criminal side, as the civil Courts were closed, but in spite of that an order was given to the Nazir to receive the deposit of Rs. 375 as sale-proceeds in civil Court deposit. The Judge signed it as A. D. J. for D J. Akola under date 17th May 1926.

So although the name of Parashram-Hiralal either personally or as a representative of the firm doing business in that name appeared on paper, the judgment-debtor's contention was that the real purchaser at the auction was Mr. Sunderlal. On a careful scrutiny of the evidence on record, I think this seems very likely. Mr. Sunderlal's object in accompanying Parashram or taking Parashram with him, at the auction could not be anything but to help him in bidding at the auction. On his own admission as a witness, that Parashram was a novice, his help became quite indispensable at such a point of time. The bids put in by or in the name of Parashram were, therefore, virtually his bids though stood in the auction list in the name of Parashram only to keep up appearances. This is corroborated by the prior and subsequent conduct of Mr. Sunderlal. There is internal or intrinsic evidence in support of this. One has only to read his deposition to be convinced of the fact that it was Mr. Sunderlal who was the real purchaser. The money came from the shop in which he is interested in spite of his so-called disclaimer of right. The application dated 17th May 1926, was written out by him, and peculiarly enough to it is fixed a court-fee label bearing his name presumably it must have been purchased by him. His conduct of personally depositing the money on 17th May 1926, during the civil Court vacation is consistent with his desire to acquire title as a purchaser to the field in the name of his own nephew. It points, at least, to a community of interest between him and his nephew. The evasive replies which Mr. Sunderlal has given as non-applicant's witness 1 on several points, point to the conclusion that he wanted to purchase the property indirectly at the auction. He was conscious that he being the pleader who actually conducted the execution case might be looked upon as an officer of the Court, or as a person who had a duty to perform in connexion with the sale and would, therefore, in all probability be disentitled under R. 73 from bidding, acquiring or attempting to acquire, either directly or indirectly, any interest in the property sold. He, therefore, took the obvious precaution of putting in the bids in the name of his nephew Parashram.

Moreover, in presenting the application for deposit to the Reader of the Sessions Court he was following a quite out of the way procedure. It shows his undue haste and anxiety to retain the valuable property he managed to purchase for a small sum. The provisions of R. 85 read with S. 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 clearly contemplated the deposit of three-fourths being made into Court on the day it re-opened after the vacation, as on 15th day the Court was closed. I am, therefore, of opinion that not only was the purchase by Mr. Sunderlal void under R. 73 but that even three-fourth-balance of purchase-money cannot be regarded as duly deposited in the Court which ordered the sale as required by law, and hence the sale was bound to be disregarded and the purchaser regarded as having no legal claim to the five per cent commission.

But the judgment-debtor did not wish, as far as possible, to expose Mr Sunderlal, or so to contest the sale on that ground so long as she could succeed by other means, in saving her valuable estate. On 16th June 1926, the very first day when the civil Courts opened after the civil vacation her agent Ramdass made an application record p. 58 of Class 4, File C, praying for permission to deposit into Court the amount of Rs. 289-2-0 and Rs. 25 on account of five per cent commission payable to the auction-purchaser, total Rs. 314-2-0. This petition was granted on 16th June 1926, by the Subordinate Judge who ordered the District Nazir to receive the amount of Rs. 314-2-0 including the purchaser's commission and to report accordingly. But Sheocharansingh who was apparently interested in Mr. Sunderlal, and was cited by his nephew as his witness but was not examined in the case dissuaded the agent from making the deposit that day. This dissuation served the interest of the auction-purchaser's right enough.

Mr. Sunderlal as non-applicant's witness 1 admits that soon after the sale had taken place the judgment-debtor's agent was after him for settlement and for accepting money. He, however, put him off on some excuse or other. The judgment-debtor arranged for money by a mortgage on 12th June 1926, and had money ready for payment and in fact offered to deposit it in Court, on 16th June 1926, the day it reopened. In view of the conduct of Mr. Sunderlal which discloses his anxiety to retain the field it was very likely that, as shown above, Sheocharansingh sale amin had interceded in his interest just when the money was being offered for deposit on 16th June 1926, in the Nazaret as deposed to by Ramdas (applicant's witness 4). The property was admittedly worth much more than Rs. 500 and hence Mr. Sunderlal desired to retain it and could not lose the bargain. If the verified statement (record p. 23) and the certified copy of the deposition of the decree-holder Bapu which is Ex. A.-1 on the record have any evidentiary value on the point of the market value of the land, I think, a very strong motive existed for Mr. Sunderlal to try his level best to prevent private payment or payment into Court in time. In fact the auction-purchaser wished to beguile the applicant by his offer in this Court to give up all claims by accepting Rs. 1,000 which shows that he desired to make 140 per cent profit out of the bargain because after deducting Rs. 289-2-0 on account of the decree-holder's decretal amount from Rs. 1,000 a sum of Rs. 700 and odd would be left as a clear profit to him. I have no hesitation in discarding the testimony of non-applicant's witness 1 and Parashram non-applicant's witness 2 and in accepting that of Ramdas applicant's witness 4, corroborated as it is in material particulars by the rest of the evidence on record.

I believe the agent when he says that he first tried the most innocent method of offering payment privately and then depositing the amount into Court under R. 89 (16th June 1926), but when he failed in those attempts he wished to try his luck with an application under R. 90 the next day (17th June 1926). But when he found at the hearing dated 19th June 1926, that it was summarily thrown out without enquiry on the plea of limitation, he was compelled most reluctantly to bring to light the fraud practised in bidding at the auction and in preventing the payment into Court in time. I think, the judgment-debtor is entitled to call S. 18, Lim. Act, to her aid under such circumstances. On the facts proved, I think, this was a fit case for reading the provisions of Art. 166 as qualified by S. 18, Lim. Act, unless the prohibition contained in R. 78, O. 21, Civil P. C, is made applicable here, and the pleader held disentitled to bid at the sale either directly or indirectly, in which case, the applicant would be entitled to urge that the sale held was altogether void under law and as such did not require to be set aside at all, she will have at any rate, a longer period of limitation under the residuary Art. 181 for pressing this petition for review as an application under S 47, Civil P. C.; Monmatha Nath Ghose v. Luchmi Debi (3). In either view of the case the applicant was entitled to succeed in the Court below.

Looking at the case from any point of view, I think there is an error of law which amounts to a usurpation of authority in the act of rejection of the petition by the lower Court, and calls for interference under S. 115, Civil P. C., cf. Hindley v. Joynarain Marwari (4). I, therefore, grant the petition for revision and granting the petition for review set aside the sale, and direct that unless the judgment-debtor has already deposited or hereafter deposits the full amount of the decree, the property be again advertised for sale and sold in the manner prescribed by law after due compliance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in this behalf. The applicant will get her costs of both Courts from the non-applicant Parashram who will bear his own. I award Rs. 25 as pleader's fee in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 170-B of 1927, Decided on 14th March 1929, from decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 10th March 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 245 of 1926.

Decree—Form of—Suit by two sons to recover possession of joint family field sold by father—Finding that part only of consideration for sale binding on sons—Decree should be passed directing delivery of possession of whole field by vendee on payment of 2/3rd consideration found proved for necessity and should contain declaration that vendee has acquired 1/3rd share of father and is entitled to obtain possession thereof in suit for partition.

If in a suit brought by two sons to recover possession of the ancestral joint family field sold by the father, it is found that a part only of consideration, being an antecedent debt not incurred for any immoral purpose, is for legal necessity and that the other part not being for any legal purpose is not binding on sons, the decree should be passed to the effect that on payment by sons to vendee of a sum representing their 2/3rd share and not the entire part of consideration found proved for necessity within a certain time, the vendee shall deliver possession of the entire field and the decree should also contain a declaration that vendee has acquired 1/3rd share and interest of father and is entitled to obtain possession thereof in a suit for partition : *A. M. R. Bobde—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Plaintiffs are the sons of Tikaram, defendant 2, who sold the ancestral joint family field which is the subject matter in dispute, to defendant 1 on 29th March 1915 for Rs. 850. The plaintiffs as the sons of Tikaram impeach the sale on the ground that the consideration for the sale was borrowed by their father for being spent on immoral purposes. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover possession of the whole of the field. The contending defendant 1 stated that the whole consideration for sale was for legal necessity, a part of it being antecedent debt. It was denied that Tikaram was a person of immoral habits and it was pleaded that the field in dispute being the self-acquired property of Tikaram because he has got it by succession from his separated brother, the plaintiffs had no right to challenge the sale.

The trial Court held that Tikaram was not of immoral habits and that the debts that formed the consideration of sale were not spent by him for immoral purposes. It further found that out of the entire consideration, Rs. 414-4-0 only was for antecedent debt, and held that legal necessity for the balance of consideration (Rs. 435-12 0) was not proved. A decree for joint possession to the extent of 87/170 share in the field was passed in palintiffs' favour. As this decision did not satisfy either the plaintiffs or defendant 1 both filed appeals in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Akola. (Civil Appeals Nos. 261 of 1926 and 245 of 1926), but both the appeals were disposed of by one judgment though two decrees were drawn up.

In para 6 of his elaborate judgment recorded in Civil Appeal No. 245 of 1926 the learned Additional District Judge, upon a review of all the evidence on record, concurred with the first Court's finding that Rs. 414-4-0 were proved to have been antecedent debt not incurred for any immoral purposes, and in para. 8 of his judgment he also concurred with the first Court and held it not proved that the balance of Rs. 435-12-0 was spent on any necessary purposes as alleged by defendant 1 It was, therefore, held that the sale for that sum could not bind the interest of the plaintiffs in the property conveyed by defendant 1. The lower appellate Court also found it not proved that defendant 1 had made any enquiries and it, therefore, held that he was not a bona fide purchaser In para. 10 of his judgment the learned Judge following the principle laid down in Bhadaji v Ganeshrao (1), modified the decree of the lower Court and passed in substitution thereof, one directing defendant 1 to deliver possession of the entire field to the plaintiffs conditional upon their paying to him the sum of Rs. 414-12-0 (apparently 0-12-0 is a mistake for 0-4-0).

As two separate decrees were drawn up in the said two first appeals by the lower appellate Court defendant 1 has filed two separate second appeals in this Court which are registered as Second Appeals Nos. 170-B of 1927 and 175-B of 1927 The grounds of appeal in both these appeals are the same and only one set of argument was addressed to this Court. The first four grounds of appeal merely challenge the several findings of fact concurrently arrived at by the two lower Courts, but these were wisely not pressed by the learned pleader for the appellant who took objection only to the form of the decree appealed against (in Civil Appeal No. 261 of 1926) and argued that it was not according to law. It was urged that on the finding that only Rs. 414-4-0 out of the entire consideration was for legal necessity, the decree should have directed payment by the plaintiffs to defendant 1 of the sum of Rs 276-2-8 only which represented their 2/3rd share and not the entire amount of Rs. 414-4-0. It was also urged that a declaration should have been inserted in the decree to the effect that defendant 1 was entitled to have possession of the 1/3rd share of the mortgaged property, representing the father's share, in any suit for partition that he may bring later on. There is no doubt that so far as the father's 1/3rd share is concerned, it passes out completely and irrevocably to defendant 1 and the plaintiffs could not challenge the sale to the extent of that share. Under circumstances similar to those of the present case this Court in a very recent case directed a decree to be drawn up in the manner contended for by the learned pleader for the appellant : see Kamtaprasad v Madhorao (2).

The decrees passed by the lower appellate Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 261 and 215 of 1926 are, therefore, set aside and in lieu thereof a decree will now issue to the following effect That if the plaintiffs pay Rs. 276-2-8 to defendant 1 within a period of two months from this date, defendant 1 shall deliver possession of the whole field No 83 area 22 acres and 11 gunthas, rental Rs. 10, situated at mouza Kawathal, Taluq Mangrulpir, District Akola, to the plaintiffs : it is also declared that defendant 1 has acquired the 1/3rd share and interest of Tikaram the father of the plaintiffs in the aforesaid property and is entitled to obtain possession thereof in a suit for partition, if he is so advised. If the plaintiffs fail to pay the aforesaid amount as directed above then their suit shall stand dismissed. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case I order that the costs of these appeals shall be borne by the parties as incurred.

First Appeal No. 78 of 1928, Decided on 31st July 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 15th March 1928, in Civil Suit No. 14 of 1927.

Acknowledgment of sonship is sufficient under Mahomedan Law to establish paternity and legitimacy, but there must be a definite acknowledgment of sonship, i. e., the father must acknowledge the boy as the son of his body. For a man to say that he has brought up a boy is not an acknowledgment of sonship or paternity and is, in fact, rather the reverse. It contradicts the physical relation of father and son and instead asserts that the man has brought up some other boy as his son. Neither under Mahomedan Law nor any other law will such a statement prove paternity or legitimacy : 15 N. L. R. 1, Ref.

(b) Mahomedan Law—Will — Sunni Law —Life estate is not recognized.

Under Mahomedan Law applicable to Sunnis no life estates are recognized and that when a life estate is given the effect is that a full share is transferred. The effect of a devise of a life interest in favour of the widows is to pass an absolute property in their favour, It therefore follows that a widow has full power to alienate the property and that the alienations made by her cannot be called in question : 28 All. 342 ; *A. P. S. Kotval and Abdul Razak — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Chhindwara. The appellants had brought a suit for possession of three villages in the Chhindwara District on the grounds that those villages belonged to their grandfather Naziruddin, and that they were bequeathed by him to his widow Amirbi and on her death to their father Abdul Karim. The District Judge at first framed the following two preliminary issues :

"1. Did the will if proved confer any vested interest on Abdul Karim ?

2. Whether acknowledgment of a son who is not a natural son and known not to be has the same effect in Mahomedan Law as acknowledgment of the fact of paternity ?"

The District Judge found, on the first issue, that Abdul Karim obtained no vested interest and that the plaintiffs had no case, and, on issue 2, that the acknowledgment of a son must be an acknowledgment of paternity. These findings, we think, were really sufficient to dispose of the case, as the appellants' whole case rested on the alleged fact that their father Abdul Karim was acknowledged as son by Nasiruddin The District Judge, however, allowed the appellants to file an amended plaint and then framed the following issues :

"1. Whether Nasiruddin acknowledged Abdul Karim as his legitimate son ?

2. Who or what were Abdul Karim's parents ?

3. Was such acknowledgment valid to make Abdul Karim an heir ?"

He then delivered the final judgment and in that judgment found that Nasiruddin did not acknowledge Abdul Karim as his legitimate son, that Abdul Karim's parents were a Gond woman and an unknown father, and that issue 3 did not arise, but that had there been an acknowledgment it would have been valid

The whole case depends upon whether Abdul Karim can be held to be the son of Nasiruddin or not. The case put forward by the learned counsel for the appellant is somewhat curious and we think that there is a confusion between acknowledgment of paternity and acknowledgment of legitimacy. A great number of authorities were cited in support of the proposition that according to Mahomedan Law, if a man acknowledged a child as his son, that acknowledgment was valid and sufficient to establish the fact of sonship, provided that the relationship of father and son was not impossible, i. e., the father was at least 12 years older than the son and there existed no insurmountable barrier to a valid marriage between him and the mother of the child. This matter has been very fully discussed in Zakir Ali v. Mt Sograbi (1) and we do not quarrel with the view of law as set forth by the learned counsel for the appellants, but in the present case the question is really one of fact, viz., whether there was any acknowledgment by Nasiruddin that Abdul Karim was his son. It is quite clear that there must be a definite acknowledgment of paternity and that any other acknowledgment is meaningless. Now, in the present case the only direct piece of evidence before us is the will executed by Nasiruddin on 9th April 1898, which is admitted by the parties and has been filed as Ex. P-1. That will contains the statement of Nasiruddin himself, and the relevant portion is :

"Mt. Amirbi my wife by marriage and myself have brought up Abdul Karim and Mt. Mariambi my wife by nika and myself have brought up Abdul Kadar, i. e., we have brought them up both as our own sons from their birth. They both shall be after my death the owners of the property left by us. That is, Abdul Karim shall be, after my death and the death of my wife Amirbi, owner of all moveable and immovable property, i. e., malguzari villages cash, etc., left by myself and my wife Ambirbi, and Abdul Kadar shall be, after my death and the death of Mt. Mariambi, my wife by nika, the owner of all the property left by me and my wife by nika."

Now, this, we think, cannot be construed into any acknowledgment of paternity. On the other hand, it seems clear that Nasiruddin states that he and his wife Amirbi had brought up a boy Abdul Karim and he and his other wife Mariambi had brought up another boy Abdul Kadar. The words used are "पाला हुआ" and "पालना" we think, means "to support and to bring up," it cannot import any meaning of paternity or sonship There is also a definite statement by the appellant Abdul Rahiman on record as the plaintiff as follows :

"I have no money, I do not know whose son Abdul Karim really was."

There is also the statement of the plaintiff's pleader Mr. Ghatpande as follows :

"Abdul Karim was not the natural son of Nasiruddin but was his acknowledged son. I do not know why he was acknowledged as a son."

It is not, then, even really contended that Abdul Karim was the natural son of Nasiruddin, but it seems to have been contended that he was acknowledged as a son and was brought up and treated as a son, and that such acknowledgment should be sufficient to establish sonship according to Mahomedan Law. We cannot, however, accept that proposition. No doubt, an acknowledgment of sonship will be sufficient under Mahomedan Law to establish paternity and legitimacy, as laid down in Zakirali v. Mt Sograbi (1) but there must be a definite acknowledgment of sonship, i. e., the father must acknowledge the boy as the son of his body. For a man to say that he has brought up a boy is not an acknowledgment of sonship or paternity and is, in fact, rather the reverse ; it contradicts the physical relation of father and son and instead asserts that the man has brought up some other boy as his son We are of opinion that neither under Mahomedan Law nor any other law will such a statement prove parternity or legitimacy. The numerous authorities cited by the learned counsel for the appellants therefore are beside the point and we hold that the finding of the lower Court as regards the alleged acknowledgment by Nasiruddin is correct.

The only other point to be considered, then, is whether the appellants can claim any title under the will executed by Nasiruddin. That will was executed on 9th April 1888 Nasiruddin died on 15th August 1891. The will which is filed as Ex. P-1 purports to give a life interest in the estate to the testator's two wives Amirbi and Mariambi, stating that they should both live together in harmony. It was further laid down that after Amirbi's death Abdul Karim should be the owner of the moveable and immovable property in her possession and after Mariambi's death Abdul Kadar should be in possession of all the moveable and immovable property left to Mariambi i. e in the terms of the English Law, a life estate appears to have been created in favour of the two widows and after their death to Abdul Karim and Abdul Kadar. The learned District Judge rightly held that under Mahomedan Law applicable to Sunnis no life estates are recognized and that when a life estate is given the effect is that a full share is transferred.

In this connexion reference was made to Abdul Karim v. Abdul Qayum Khan (2) and Babulal v. Ghansham Das (3). This position appears to be incontestable and, if the will is valid, the two widows Amirbi and Mariambi would take an absolute estate. The argument put forward by the learned counsel for the appellants was that only the usufruct of the property was given to the widows and that the will must really be read as a bequest in favour of the boys Abdul Karim and Abdul Kadar. This, we think, is clearly a forced and wrong interpretation of the will. There is no mention of usufruct and, on the other hand, it is clearly stated that the two wives shall have the whole property, moveable and immovable, during their life. It is stated that Abdul Karim and Abdul Kadar shall be the owners of the property, but only after the death of the two wives. It is clear, then that there was to be no restriction upon the ownership of the two wives during their lifetime. We are of opinion that it must be held that there was a devise of a life interest in favour of the widows and the effect of such a devise will be to pass an absolute property in favour of the widows. It has also been rightly contended that under Mahomedan Law there is no limited estate. This proposition, in fact, is much the same as the proposition that Mahomedan Law does not recognize a life interest and it is also correct.

(3) A.I.R. 1922 All. 205=44 All. 633.

In this connexion we have been referred to Mt. Amrit Bibi v. Mustafa Hussain (A I R 1924 All. 20), Bakhtawarkhan v. Farooq Ahmad (4), Rahiman Saheb v. Uthumansa Rowther (A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 997) and Nazir Ali Shah v. Sughra Bibi (5). It follows, then, that Amirbi had full power to alienate the property and that the alienations cannot now be called into question.

Some attempt was made by the learned counsel for the respondents to argue that the will would be invalid unless it was assented to by the heirs. This point is not now material because, in any case, the appeal must be dismissed and the plaintiffs' case must fail, but is clear, we think, that such an argument cannot now be put forward in view of the fact that the will was clearly admitted by the defendants' pleader in the lower Court. It was also not contended that there were any other heirs of Nasiruddin or that the heirs did not assent to the will. It cannot now therefore, we hold, be pleaded that the will was invalid because it was not consented to by the heirs The will, then, must be held to he valid, but according to Mahomedan Law it passed an absolute estate to the two widows Amirbi and Mariambi and they had full powers of disposition over the property.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the suit was rightly dismissed by the District Judge on the preliminary issues framed and that there is no cause for interference in appeal, nor is it necessary to decide any other issues in the case. The appeal is therefore dismissed and the decree of the lower Court is confirmed. All costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellants. We allow only one set of pleader's fees for the respondents which shall be distributed in the following proportion ; three-fourths to respondents 1, 3 and 4 and one-fourth to respondents 2 and 5. Costs of the suit will be borne as ordered by the lower Court.

Secy. of State—Defendant—Non-Applicant.

Civil Revn No. 275-B of 1928, Decided on 3rd July 1929, against judgment of Sm. Cause Court Judge, Akola, D/- 21st August 1928.

(a) Railways Act (9 of 1890), S. 72—Risk-notes A and B—Some bags consigned not delivered—Suit for damages—Initial burden is on company to show that there is loss of goods and not in company's control—Company showing whole consignment loaded in waggon which was sealed and at particular station some goods found lost—Lost goods not under company's control—Company has discharged initial burden.

Where out of 40 bags of sugar consigned under risk-notes in forms A and B only 33 bags are received and a suit is brought against the Railway company for damages, the initial burden lies upon the company of proving that there is in fact loss of the goods and that the same are not in the control of the Railway Administration; but where the company proves that the whole consignment was loaded in a waggon and it was closed and sealed according to the prevailing practice but at a station a door was found broken open and seven bags were discovered missing and further proves that the missing goods were not in control of the company, the company has adequately discharged the initial burden: *A. (b) Railways Act (9 of 1890), S. 72—Risk-notes A and B—Waggon sealed according to prevailing practice—Some goods missing—Company is not guilty of wilful neglect.

Where goods consigned under risk-note in forms A and B are loaded in a waggon and it is closed and sealed according to prevailing practice and some of the goods are found missing, the company is not guilty of wilful neglect though it does not lock the door of the waggon but merely seales it : *A. G. G. Hatwalne—for Applicant.

Order.—The facts of the case giving rise to this application for revision are these: On 1st April 1925, a consignment of 40 bags of sugar was booked from Wadi Bunder station, under risk notes in forms A and B to be delivered to the plaintiff at Akola. The plaintiff, however, received only 33 bags out of the aforesaid consignment and he, therefore, brought the suit, in the Small Cause Court, Akola, to recover from the defendant Railway Company Rs. 245-12-0 representing the damages sustained by him on account of the non-delivery of the seven bags. The defence was that the Railway Company was fully protected against the plaintiff's claim under risk-note forms A and B under which the consignment was booked. The first issue framed for trial was:

"Whether the seven bags of sugar (weighing 15 mds.) in question has been lost owing to wilful negligence of the defendant company?"

None of the parties having led any evidence, the issue was decided against the plaintiff and his claim dismissed. On revision Kinkhede, A. J. C., remanded the case for retrial holding that the defendant company must, in the first instance, discharge the burden that lay upon them under the principle enunciated in G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Jesraj Patwari (1) of proving that there has, in fact, been a loss of the goods and that the same are no more in the control of the Railway Administration. It was further remarked in the order of remand that:

"It is hardly necessary to point out that that it is only after the loss is proved by the defendant company that the burden of proving "wilful neglect" as defined by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Ardeshir Bhicaji Tambole v. G. I. P. Ry., A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 24, will be shifted to the plaintiff."

The order of remand by this Court is reported at p. 104 of Vol. 24 of the Nagpur Law Reports.

After remand four witnesses were examined by the Railway Company all of them are their servants who had to deal with the plaintiff's consignment in question. Their evidence proved that the whole of the plaintiff's consignment and other goods intended for Akola were loaded at Wadi Bunder in waggon No. 8314, that it was closed and sealed according to the prevailing practice, that at Nandgaon one of its doors was discovered broken open on one side and seven bags were found missing, and that the waggon was resealed and directed to Akola where on arrival the same shortage in its contents was noted. It was also proved that the missing goods were not in possession or control of the defendant company. The plaintiff did not lead any evidence to show that the loss was due to the "wilful neglect" of the Railway Company. The lower Court, therefore, again dismissed the plaintiff's claim and the plaintiff has again come up to this Court on revision.

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 65=55 Cal. 132.

The first point argued by the learned pleader for the plaintiff was that since the defendant company did not produce the reports made by its servants in connexion with the loss of the goods in question it should be held that they have failed to discharge the burden of proving the loss in the first instance and that under the circumstances it was not necessary for the plaintiff to have proved "wilful neglect" on the part of the defendant company. It is really difficult to uphold this contention. The law does not lay down any particular standard of proof in such matters and the direct evidence of those witnesses, who actually dealt with the consignment in question, was, in my opinion, the best available evidence that the defendant company have produced to prove the loss. If the plaintiff thought that the reports and correspondence in possession of the defendant company were likely to throw further light on the matter, he should have taken advantage of the provisions of O. 11, Civil P. C, to compel the defendant company to produce these documents. I concur, therefore, with the lower Court in holding that the defendant company have adequately discharged the initial burden that lay upon them to prove the loss of the goods in question.

The next contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff was that the mere sealing of the waggon in question should be held to amount to such wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company as to make them liable for the loss in spite of the protection afforded to them under risk-note form B. Reliance was placed in support of this argument on a recent decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Karali Prosad v E. I. Ry. Co. (A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 498) But the facts of the Calcutta case, as found, were quite exceptional in that the doors of the waggon from which the goods in question were stolen were not only not locked but did not even bear any seals, and therefore it was rightly held that there was wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company which took the case out of the purview of the protection contained in the risk-note. "Whether mere sealing is at all effective" it was considered unnecessary to enquire in that case.

On the contrary, it was held by Baker, J. C., in the case of G I. P. Ry. Co. v. Haji Umar Sharif (Civil Revn. No. 68 of 1924) where the door of the waggon in question was only sealed but not locked, that the failure to lock waggon did not constitute wilful neglect for the reason that "as the company owns thousands of waggons, it is impracticable to have a different lock for every waggon, and if one standard pattern of lock is used it will not be long before thieves will make keys fitting it."

The proved facts in the present case are on all fours with those in Secy. of State v. Ghanaya Lal-Sri Krishan (2) wherein it was held that the Railway Company was not guilty of wilful neglect as defined in Ardeshir Bhicaji Tamoli v. G. I. P. Ry Co. (3) because there was nothing on the record to show that the practice of sealing waggons in vogue had been proved to be an inadequate safeguard or that a system of locking waggons was known to be a necessary precaution in the case of a train travelling over a long distance and yet was deliberately and intentionally not adopted by the Railway Company. It is, therefore, clear that the plaintiff having failed to prove wilful neglect on the part of the defendant Company in the present case, his claim was rightly dismissed by the lower Court. The application for revision fails and is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

Civil Revn. NO. 452 of 1927, Decided on 7th August 1929, from order of Dist Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 12th November 1927, in Misc. Case No. 39 of 1927.

(a) Succession Act (39 of 1925), S. 208—Person having remedy by suit under S. 208—No revision is necessary.

Order—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the District Judge, Jubbulpore, on an application made to him under S. 192, Succession Act. He has held that two persons, Dwarkaprasad and Jagdishprasad were entitled to possession of the property of one Shamlal on the death of Shamlal's daughter Dropadi Bai. The applicant claims to be the next reversioner to Dropadi Bai along with the two persons mentioned. His claim to possession has, however, been rejected by the learned District Judge because of a compromise entered into by the applicant in litigation between him and Dropadi Bai and others. It is argued on behalf of the applicant that this compromise amounted to a transfer of his reversionary rights and was invalid under S. 6 (a), T. P. Act. Rulings of the Privy Council both for and against this decision have been cited

There is I think a clear distinction between the two sets of rulings; but I do not propose to state my conclusion as to whether the compromise affects the applicant's rights, as I consider that there are three other gro unds on which I must reject this application for revision.

In the first place, it is to be noted that the applicant has his remedy by way of suit, this remedy being preserved for him by S. 208, Succession Act. In the circumstances, it is not necessary for this Court to exercise its power of revision if it has such power in the present case. In the second place, there has been no assumption of or failure to exercise jurisdiction and no illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. At the most the applicant contends that the learned District Judge has made a mistake in law. As has been laid down by the Privy Council in Balakrishna Odayar v Vasudeva Ayyar (1) (at p.799 of 40 Mad ), S.115, Civil P.C.,is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.

In the third place, it appears to me that S 209, Succession Act, is a bar to revision. That section lays down that the decision of a District Judge in a summary proceeding under part 7 of the Act shall have no other effect than that of settling the actual possession but for that purpose shall be final and shall not be subject to any appeal or review. Act 19 of 1841, which has been repealed by the Succession Act of 1925, had similar wording and has been held in Khaja Kutubuddin v. Khaja Faizuddin (2) not to permit revision That is a view with which I agree. It seems to me to have been the intention of the legislature that any person aggrieved by an order passed in a summary proceeding under part 7, Succession Act, should seek his remedy by a suit and not by an application for revision. In Sato Koer v. Gopal Sahu (3) a decision relied upon by the applicant, there is a finding that the Act did not apply in that particular case ; and the decision cannot therefore be authority for holding that revision is possible. I dismiss the application with costs. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 15.

Judgment—This appeal arises from a suit for a declaration that two fields are liable to attachment and sale in execution of the plaintiff's decree against Lalchand, the father of defendant 2. The fields in question were sold by Lalchand on 8th December 1920 to defendant 1. In each of the sale deeds (Exs.1 D-2 and 1 D 3) a small piece of open land situated in mouza Wazar has been included and by this inclusion it was possible to register the deeds in mouza Amrapur. It is urged, in the first place, that the two sites in mouza Wazar did not belong to Lalchand, that they were included in the deeds merely to enable the registration to be obtained at Amrapur and that there has consequently been a fraud upon the law of registration.

As regards the question of ownership the lower Court has found that Lalchand was in possession of the two sites and that he used them for four months of every year for tethering his cattle which he sent to Wazar for grazing. From this it finds that Lalchand's ownership has been sufficiently established. Its reasoning is open to criticism as regards the effect that it gives to the appellant's admission of the map filed on behalf of defendant 1 and as regards the misapplication of the maxim that possession follows title. What the lower Court should have done is to hold that possession is prima facie evidence of title under S. 110, Evidence Act, and its finding is not necessarily incorrect because of the mistakes referred to. It is argued that, as laid down in Radhikadas v. Harmohanlal (1), possession of the nature proved cannot be held to prove title, but I think that the argument is wrong. The possession proved is essentially different from that dealt with in the ruling cited. I hold that the possession proved is prima facie evidence of title and that the appellant had to prove that there was no title in Lalchand. This he has failed to do

It is argued, nevertheless, that there is a fraud on the law of registration, because these two sites of Wazar were included in order to enable the deeds to be registered at Amrapur That is a finding of the lower appellate Court, but it also finds that there was a real intention on the part of the parties that the sites at Wazar should be transferred. This is a finding with which I cannot interfere and it is sufficient to make the registration valid. In Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan (2), registration was held invalid because the deed was registered in the Muzaffarpur District in which the mortgagor had purchased a one kauri share in a village for registration purposes, but in that case it was held that it was not the intention of the parties that the one kauri share should vest in the mortgagor or pass under the mortgage. In Harendra Lal Roy v Haridasi Debi (3), the property included for registration purposes was found to be non-existent. In Urkudya v. Doma (4) it was found that the property did not belong to the mortgagor and in Vyankatesh v. Annasa (5) it was found that the property was not intended to be mortgaged. These cases are all differentiated from the present case by the fact that in the present case the property belonged to the transferrer and was intended to be transferred.

It is urged that, nevertheless, the transfer is fraudulent on the following grounds:

(1) That Lalchand's mother was the sister of defendant 1, (2) that payment of Rs. 1,000 of the consideration has been held to be doubtful, (3) that Lalchand and after him his son defendant 2 have been left in possession of the fields, (4) that Lalchand transferred nearly the whole of his property, (5) that the method of registration shows a desire for secrecy, and (6) that there was no pressing necessity to pay off at least one of the two mortgage debts said to have been satisfied as a result of the sale.

It must be admitted that there are several features in this case that go to indicate fraud in the transfer, but the lower appellate Court has found that out of the total consideration of Rs. 8,500, Rs 3,500 was due to defendant 1 on two promissory notes and Rs 4,000 was required to pay off the debts on two mortgages. That being so, I cannot find that S 53, T. P Act applies This is not a case of fraudulent preference under the Insolvency Act and a transfer which satisfies some creditors cannot be held fraudulent. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Misc. Judicial Case No. 71 of 1928, Decided on 9th September 1929, for leave to appeal in forma pauperis from decision in Civil Suit No 21 of 1928, D/- 17th November 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 33, R. 1 — Entitled to property.

It cannot be assumed that the framers of O. 33, R. 1, thought that every one who is entitled to property was possessed of means to the value of that property. [P 320 C 2] tended to be qualified by words "other than the subject matter of the suit."

It is not intended to qualify the words "possessed of sufficient means" by the words "other than the subject-matter of the suit"; and there is no reason whatever to think that because the subject matter of the suit must be excluded from property to which the party is entitled, it should be excluded from the means of which the party is possessed : 30 Bom. 593, Rel. on. [P 321 C 1]

G. G. Hatwalne—for Applicant.

P. S. Kotval and R. B. Gadgil — for Non-Applicants.

Order. — The applicant applied for permission to appeal as a pauper. The Court from whose decision the appeal was preferred was directed to enquire whether the applicant was on 18th December 1928 in possession of (1) house property claimed in the State of Bhor and (2) property which formed the subject matter of the suit, and whether the property of either class and also of both classes taken together is sufficient for the fee prescribed by law.

I need not consider the finding regarding the house property and land in the State of Bhor. It appears that this property is in reality the property of the sons of the applicant : the non-applicants admit this. The trial Court has found that the applicant was on 18th December 1928 in possession of jewellery and gold, property, which formed the subject matter of the suit, of ample value to cover the fee prescribed by law. The applicant has objected to this finding. In her evidence she admits that ornaments worth about Rs. 25,000 were taken in possession by her on the death of Vithal and remained with her till about two years ago Her assertion is that from time to time she used to hand over ornaments to her son Vinayak or Baboo in order that he might sell them and incur expenses. She is not able to give any details and she has not examined her son Vinayak : clearly it would have been possible for her to examine Vinayak and the persons to whom Vinayak sold the ornaments and thus furnish very strong evidence that most of the ornaments had been sold : it should not be difficult to furnish proof of the disposal of ornaments of considerable value

It is unnecessary to consider the vague evidence regarding the amount of expenses incurred by her. When she was living with Vinayak and Vinayak was a party to the various suits, it is clearly possible that most of these expenses were met by Vinayakrao. She has not proved the sale of a single ornament, and the inference that she is in possession of the bulk of the jewellery is proper. It is irrelevant that the trial Judge held that the prosecution for contempt of Court should not be sanctioned because it was not clear that she was in possession of this property at the time she was ordered to hand it over to the receiver ; this was not a finding in the course of the trial of the suit. It is not material that the applicant, after representing that she had no property when she was directed to hand it over to the receiver, applied for maintenance allowance, and the evidence of witnesses who say that she appeared to have no property is useless. I therefore hold that the applicant was on 18th December 1928 in possession of valuable property which formed the subject matter of the suit.

I have next to consider whether the applicant was on 18th December 1928 a "pauper," as defined by the explanation to R. 1, O 33, Sch. 1, Civil P. C. This explanation runs :

"A person is a 'pauper' when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint in such suit, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth Rs. 100 other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject matter of the suit."

It is clear that the decision of the question whether a person is a pauper is to be governed by special considerations when no fee is prescribed by law for the plaint. Where a fee is prescribed, the person who desires to file the suit cannot be held to be a pauper if he possesses just sufficient means to pay the fee : he need not possess means to meet demands for process-fees, diet-money for witnesses and similar expenditure. In the special case where no fee is prescribed he must be considered a pauper unless he is entitled to some property : some consideration then is shown for the necessity to meet expenses necessary for the conduct of the suit, but the section considers it sufficient that he should be entitled to property It cannot be assumed that the framers of this rule thought that every one who is entitled to property was possessed of means to the value of that property : had they desired to lay down that the person must be possessed of means, presumably they would have repeated the words used in the beginning of the explanation. As the condition was that he should not be entitled to property, it was necessary to add the words that this property should be other than the subject matter of the suit. Clearly it would be unfair to lay down that a person could not sue as a pauper because he has a just claim to the property for possession of which he desires to sue.

It seems obvious that it was not intended to qualify the words "possessed of sufficient means" by the words "other than the subject matter of the suit" : this was held in Krishnabai v. Manohar (1). There is no reason whatever to think that because the subject matter of the suit must be excluded from property to which the party is entitled, it should be excluded from the means of which the party is possessed. O. 33, Sch. 1, Civil P. C, refers primarily to suits and it is ordinarily the case that the subject matter of the suit is out of the plaintiff's reach, but when the applicant for leave is a defendant-appellant, the case is different. The applicant has control over the jewellery and gold, of which she is in possession. I hold then that the applicant was not a pauper on 18th December 1928. The application is rejected. The application has not been made in good faith ; I reject the memorandum of appeal. Counsel's fee Rs. 60.

M. V. Joshi and R. K. Manohar—for Appellant.

M. B. Niyogi — for Respondents 1 and 2.

Judgment.—The facts leading to this first appeal are briefly these. In the year 1904 a partnership was formed between the parties to start a factory at mouza Hiwarkhed in the Akola district known as "Narayandas Parashram Ginning factory". The several partners had varying shares in this concern, the plaintiffs having Rs. 0-9-3 and the defendants Rs. 0-6-9. It is admitted that plaintiff 1 had authority for plaintiff 2 to act for him in this partnership concern while defendant 1 had similar authority from the other two defendants. The case for the plaintiffs was that on 4th October 1923 an agreement was arrived at between the firm of plaintiff 1 which was then represented by one Sonabai as owner thereof and defendant 1, that the partnership be dissolved, that defendant 1 should purchase the concern for Rs. 41,000 and after payment of partnership debts out of the consideration distribute the balance between the several partners according to their shares. As defendant 1 failed to carry out this contract the present suit was brought by the plaintiffs to have the agreement specifically enforced or in the alternative for a decree for dissolution of partnership and for recovery of the amount of assets due to them.

Defendant 1 alone contested the claim, the other defendants remained ex parte. Defendant 1 admitted the contract of sale but alleged that as he was doubtful of the capacity of Sonabai—who was a Hindu widow with limited powers—to enter into the bargain he had asked for and secured a guarantee from one Balkisandas, the uncle-in-law of the lady, to stand surety for the bargain. It was stated that on the strength of this assurance of suretyship the defendant made the agreement on 1st November 1923 and had even gone to the length of purchasing the necessary stamps for conveyance. The defendant, however, alleged that Balkisandas later on refused to stand surety and plaintiff 1 served him (defendant 1) with a notice dated 17th June 1924 whereby she cancelled the contract to which defendant 1 agreed. The right of Hirabai to represent the firm of plaintiff 1 in this suit was challenged on the ground that she had adopted a son who alone could have a right of suit. The alternative claim for dissolution and rendition of accounts was not resisted but it was alleged that the accounts were made up till 3rd November 1923. In reply the plaintiffs asserted that Fattelal, who was the original owner of the firm of plaintiff 1, had by his will made the two widows successively owners of the firm and that the natural father of the boy adopted by Hirabai having given an agreement in her favour constituting her the owner of the property for her lifetime, she alone and not the adopted son had the right to institute the present suit.

A fair idea of the further pleadings of the parties would be gathered from the following issues which were settled for trial :

"1. Whether Fattelal executed the alleged will dated 13th November 1916 ?

2. Are the conditions and directions in the said will valid in law and do they confer title on the plaintiff to bring this suit ?

3. Whether the contract of sale was terminated by the notice dated 24th June 1924 ? What is the effect of the notice ?

4. Whether Balkisandas had agreed to stand as guarantee for the sale transaction as alleged by the defendant ? Was it on such assurance of Balkisandas that defendant 1 agreed to have sale deed as alleged by defendant 1? Did Balkisandas refuse to stand guarantee as alleged by defendant 1?

5. Should a decree for specific performance of the contract of sale under the circumstances of the case be passed?

6. If not, whether the accounts were settled upto 3rd November 1923 as alleged by defendant 1 except in respect of points noted in the document dated 4th November 1923?

7. Since which date defendant 1 is liable to render account?

8. Has the plaintiff paid any unnecessary court-fees? If so, is the partnership estate liable for the same?

9. Is plaintiff 1 entitled to maintain the suit apart from the will? Did the adopted son Purushottamdas execute the deed dated 15th May 1924 through his natural father? Are the conditions therein valid and enforcible?

10. Did Sonabai possess power to enter into the alleged contract and can plaintiff 1 sue upon that?"

The learned Additional District Judge who tried the case, in an elaborate judgment, decided the several issues in plaintiffs' favour and decreed the claim for specific performance of the agreement. Defendant 1 alone has filed the present appeal.

The main argument advanced by Sir Moropant Joshi, the learned advocate for the appellant, was that Hirabai had no right to institute the present suit because she had already adopted one Purushottamdas on 15th May 1924 who alone from that date could and did represent the firm of plaintiff 1 on behalf of which the contract which is sought to be specifically enforced by the present suit was entered into by Sonabai on 4th November 1923. It was contended that in spite of the directions to the contrary contained in the will (Ex. P-3) of the last male owner of the firm, viz. Fattelal, and notwithstanding the agreement (Ex P-4) given by the natural father of Purushottamdas, the vesting of the estate in the adopted son could not be postponed under the law and reliance was placed upon Krishnamurthi Ayyar v. Krishnamurthi Ayyar (1) in support of this contention. In the Privy Council case relied on by the appellant's counsel a Hindu full owner had executed a will whereby he disposed of his estate to certain specified persons including his own prospective adopted son Before the adoption he even took the precaution of taking a formal agreement from the natural father of the adopted boy consenting to the several testamentary dispositions. After the death of the testator in a suit brought by certain legatees against the adopted son to recover possession of the properties bequeathed to them, the latter challenged the validity of the will and it was held that the will on the strength of which the legacies were claimed was invalid because long before it came into operation on the death of the testator the properties disposed of by it had already become jointly vested in the adopted son and could not be effectualy disposed of by the will of the father who was merely a coparcener with the adopted son incapable under the Hindu law of making a will in respect of the coparcenary property even though the consent of the natural guardian of the adopted boy was secured to such testamentary dispositions before the actual adoption. The true principle governing the case was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the following words appearing at p. 525 of the report:

"When a disposition is made inter vivos by one who has full power over property under which a portion of that property is carried away, it is clear that no rights of a son who is subsequently adopted can affect that portion which is disposed of. The same is true when the disposition is by will and the adoption is subsequently made by a widow who has been given power to adopt. For the will speaks as at the death of the testator, and the property is carried away before the adoption takes place. It is also obvious that the consent or non-consent of the natural father cannot in such cases affect the question. But it is quite different when the adoption is antecedent to the date at which the disposition is meant to take effect. The rights which flow from adoption are immediate, and the disposition, if given effect to, is inconsistent with these rights and cannot of itself vi propria affect them."

(1) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 189.

Applying the principle enunciated in the above quotation to the facts of the present case it is perfectly obvious that instead of supporting the case of the appellant it directly goes to support the case of the contending respondents. It is admitted that Fattelal was the sole owner of the firm of plaintiff 1 on 13th November 1916 when he executed his will (Ex P-3) whereby he bequeathed his entire estate, comprising the share he owned in the partnership of "Narayandas Parashram Ginning factory," to his wife Sonabai for life and after her to his daughter-in-law, Hirabai—the widow of his predeceased son Labhchand—absolutely The will also gave permission to either widow to take a son in adoption, in case the testator himself did not adopt any in his lifetime, and in order that the son so adopted may not enjoy the estate till after the demise of the two widows, it enjoined upon them to take, before adoption, an agreement to that effect from the natural father of the boy selected for being adopted. It is also admitted that Fattelal died on 24th May 1917 without himself making any adoption and it is not and could not be denied that as the sole owner he was under the law fully competent to make whatsoever disposition he liked of his estate The adoption of Purushottamdas by Hirabai was admittedly made some seven years after the death of Fattelal and long after the estate had become vested in the two widows as devisees under the will of the full owner. In other words in the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council the property was "carried away before the adoption" of Purushottamdas took place Under these circumstances neither the directions in the will (Ex. P. 5) nor the agreement (Ex. P-4) which was evidently taken in virtue of the said directions, can, on the principle already enunciated, affect the question of the validity of the will of Fattelal whereby Sonabai and Hirabai succeeded to the estate.

It was then in her capacity as the holder of a life estate by virtue of the will of her husband, and not as his natural heir under the Hindu Law, that Sonabai succeeded to the firm of plaintiff 1 and it was in this capacity that she must be deemed to have entered into the agreement with defendant 1 on 4th November 1923 which is sought to be specifically enforced by the present suit. By his adoption on 15th April 1924 Purushottamdas could not therefore oust Sonabai of her life interest in the firm of plaintiff 1 nor could he, after the death of Sonabai on 8th October 1924, prevent the vesting of an absolute estate in Hirabai under the terms of the will of Fattelal for the simple reason that the bequests had taken effect already long before his adoption. We have therefore no hesitation in holding, though for reasons somewhat different from those given by the lower Court, that Hirabai alone is the sole representative of the firm of plaintiff 1 after the death of Sonabai and as such entitled to maintain the present suit. The above finding also disposes of the other contention advanced on behalf of the appellant that under S. 25, Specific Relief Act, Hirabai could not maintain the suit for specific performance of the contract because she could not convey a valid title to defendant 1.

It was next argued that under the notice (Ex. D-5) dated 17th June 1924, plaintiff 1 having unequivocably rescinded the contract she was incompetent to maintain the present suit to enforce it although the appellant may not have been able to prove that he communicated his assent to the cancellation as alleged by him. The learned counsel for the appellant went so far as to assert that the assent of the defendant for rescission of the contract was unnecessary and this contention appears to be warranted by the language of S 63, Contract Act which provides that "every promisee may dispense with or remit wholly or in part the performance of the promise made to him."

The only question for decision therefore is if the terms of the notice (Ex. D-5 favour the interpretation sought to be put upon them by the appellant's counsel and come within the purview of S. 63, Contract Act. The last portion of the notice (Ex. D-5) which requires correct interpretation is translated as under:

"My client having purchased a stamp paper for the sale deed is ready to execute the proper sale deed but you are evading to get the sale deed executed after paying the amount. You are therefore asked to get the sale deed executed by immediately paying the agreed amount together with its interest up to this date. If you do not do this, understanding that you are not agreeable to abide by the settlement of 4th November 1923 and considering it cancelled a claim would forthwith be brought against you for rendition of accounts from the commencement of the factory etc."

The matter relating to the construction and effect of this notice was embodied in issue 3 and is dealt with by the lower Court in para. 6 of its judgment. The learned Additional District Judge holds that the notice did not put an end to the agreement of sale but on the contrary reserved to the plaintiff the right to enforce it by a suit. The conduct of defendant 1 after receipt of the notice itself shows that he did not take the notice in the light of the cancellation of the contract for otherwise he would not have approached Mr. Athlay the pleader for the plaintiff (P. W. 7) for settlement of the dispute and got the draft of conveyance (Ex. P-8) prepared by Mr. Athlay in consultation with his own pleader Mr. Bapat on or about 2nd July 1924. The language of the notice also does not warrant the construction that it unequivocably cancelled the contract. For the reasons given above we uphold the decision of the lower Court on this point and hold that the notice in question did not put an end to the contract and that it does not in any way debar the plaintiffs from enforcing the contract specifically It was conceded, in reply, by the learned counsel for the appellant that since there is no allegation that plaintiff 1 was a party to the alleged arrangement between defendant 1 and Balkisandas, the plea of suretyship advanced by defendant 1 was absolutely out of place in the present suit which would not be affected in any way even if it be held proved that Balkishandas backed out of his promise to stand surety. It is therefore unnecessary to decide if as a matter of fact Balkisandas agreed to stand as surety and subsequently declined to do so.

The last argument of the counsel for the appellant challanged the principle of accounting adopted by the lower Court which did not first deduct the debts amounting to Rs. 13,050 out of the consideration of Rs 41,000 payable to the plaintiffs and defendants by the partnership before ascertaining the amount due to the plaintiffs under the terms of the agreement. This method of accounting was conceded by the advocate for the respondents to be wrong. According to the agreement (Ex. P-1) all the debts due from the partnership ought to be first.

deducted out of the consideration for sale and the balance in hand should then be distributed among the several partners according to their shares. On this principle of accounting the plaintiffs' share in the next balance after paying all the partnership debts will come to Rs. 24,989-12-9 and the lower Court's decree will therefore be modified by substituting this figure for Rs. 27,045-5-3 as payable by the defendants to the plaintiffs with interest at 0-7-9 per cent mensem thereon from 4th November 1923 to 21st February 1927 which comes to Rs. 4,785-15-0. Interest after that date till satisfaction will run at the rate of 0-8-0 per cent per mensem as already ordered by this Court on 22nd September 1927 by agreement of parties.

In the light of the original agreement (Ex. P-1) and the further agreement arrived at between the parties in this Court on 22nd September 1927 we do not see our way to raise the rate of interest as claimed by the plaintiffs-respondents in their cross-objection which is dismissed with costs. As the appeal has succeeded on a minor point conceded by the contending respondents, all the costs of the appeal must be paid by the appellant. Costs in the lower Court will be paid as already ordered by that Court.

Criminal Appeal No. 81 of 1929, Decided on 29th June 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Discrepancies in prosecution evidence on matters of detail—Evidence consistent in the main—Absence of evidence in rebuttal — Prosecution story held supported by evidence on record.

Discrepancies were found on matters of detail in the evidence tendered by witnesses for the prosecution, the evidence in the main being consistent. No evidence in rebuttal was tendered and it was contended that the prosecution story was unsupportable.

Held: that it was more natural than otherwise that such discrepancies should occur on account of the suddenness of the quarrel and the extremely short duration of the actual assault and that the evidence supported the prosecution story. [P 327 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 114—Conviction for abetment is illegal without definite charge.

In the absence of a definite charge of abetment being framed against an accused which he had no opportunity to meet, his conviction for abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 114, Penal Code, is wholly illegal. [P 328 C 2]

(c) Penal Code S. 302—Assailant striking fatal blow not ascertainable—All assailants can be held guilty of murder.

Where it cannot be found who among the assailants struck the blow which proved to be fatal all the assailants can be held guilty of murder: 35 All. 329, Foll. [P 327 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—On the afternoon of Sunday 31st March this year one Maru Kirar died at mouza Mathni in the Sohagpur Tahsil, Hoshangabad District, as a result of an assault made upon him by some village people with lathis. Eight wounds were found on the body of the deceased, seven of which were contusions not amounting to grievous hurt but the one on the head as described in the post-mortem report (Ex. P-9) fractured the skull and lacerated the brain and in the opinion of the Medical Officer (Ex. P-11) caused death.

The first information report (Ex. P-1) was made by Suka (P. W. 14), the son of the deceased, at Piparia station house at 9 p. m. on the same day, and implicated the following seven persons by name as the assailants responsible for the crime and the informant also gave the names of certain persons who witnessed the assault: (1) Kisandas Kirar, (2) Rajaram Kirar, (3) Nathuram Kirar, (4) Tunda Kirar, (5) Dhanna Kirar, (6) Gorelal Kirar and (7) Dalpat Kirar.

An investigation followed and all the aforesaid seven persons were challaned before Mr. Shrivastava, Magistrate, 1st Class, Hoshangabad, who, however, discharged the last three and committed the first four to take their trial before the Court of Session at Hoshangabad under S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of the deceased Maru Kirar.

The trial was held by Mr. Amardekar, Additional Sessions Judge, who convicted Kisandas alone under S. 302 read with S. 114, I. P. C., for abetment of the murder of Maru and sentenced him to death. The other three accused Rajaram, Nathuram and Tunda were found guilty under S. 323, I. P. C., only and each of them was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Against their convictions all the aforesaid convicts have preferred separate appeals to this Court which are registered here as Criminal Appeals Nos. 81 to 84 of 1929 and since they were connected and heard together this judgment will govern the disposal of all of them.

The story for the prosecution is a bit complicated and not quite easy to follow. In the early part of the afternoon of Sunday the 31st March last, a quarrel took place between two women Mt. Daiya (P. W. 11) and Mt. Gajaria (P. W. 2) on account of a son of the latter taking some khaderas (stalks of tuar plants) from the fencing of the former The women as usual ran at each others' throats but the deceased Maru intervened and separated the combatants, and peace was restored. Soon after Dhanna Sonar (P.W 4) the husband of Mt Gajaria returned home and found two persons Ghirisa and his namesake Dhanna Kirar at his door threatening his wife and Dhanna Kirar gave the Sonar a blow with his lathi which injured his finger (Ex. P-8). Dharamdas (P W. 12) then intervened and peace was again restored. About 24 minutes after this incident was closed the appellant Kisandas came upon the scene and enquired of the Sonar as to who his supporters were and on getting a reply in the negative he at once began to abuse the Sonar and the deceased Maru, who was then at his own house. There were then free exchange of abuses between the deceased and the appellant Kisandas and the latter is said to have asked Dhanna Kirar to give five shoeblows to the Sonar (P W. 4) and asked his grazier Kolha to fetch the other appellants and when they arrived they went over to the house of the deceased, where the appellant Kisandas pulled him out of the osari where he was sitting into the angan and all the appellants gave him lathi blows. The deceased then ran up to a munga tree followed by the appellants and was also beaten there and when he again went towards a pipal tree all the appellants again followed him and again gave him blows with the result that the deceased then fell down senseless, but died on route to the police house.

Upon a consideration of the evidence recorded by him the Additional Sessions Judge held :

"(a) that all the appellants gave the lathi blows to the deceased Maru but that it could not be proved who among the assailants gave the blow on the head of the deceased which lacerated the brain and caused his death ; (b) that there was no conspiracy between the appellants to kill Maru ; and (c) that excepting appellant 1 none of the other appellants had any intention of causing the death of Maru."

As a result of the aforesaid findings the learned Additional Sessions Judge found the first appellant guilty of murder or abetting the murder of Maru and the others of causing Maru simple hurt only and passed the sentence of death on the former and one year's rigorous imprisonment each on the latter

Mr. J. Sen who represented all the appellants in this Court addressed a very long and learned argument at the Bar challenging the correctness both of certain findings of fact arrived at by the Additional Sessions Judge and of the applicability of the law by him to the facts so found.

Before proceeding to examine the points of law involved in the case it is necessary in the first instance to dispose of the contentions raised in the first five and 10th and 11th grounds of appeal to the effect that the complicity of the appellants in the assault upon Maru has not been established. It was argued that since the whole lot of the prosecution witnesses who are alleged to have witnessed the assault were hostile and inimical to the appellants, and because they were discrepant on matters of detail their evidence was untrustworthy and should be rejected It was also contended that since in the first information report definite persons were named as eyewitnesses but who were not examined at the trial, a presumption adverse to the prosecution should be drawn, and that in the absence of disinterested witnesses having come forward to support the prosecution story it should be held that none of the appellants was really responsible for the assault which undoubtedly resulted in the death of Maru. It was further argued, as suggested in the written statements of the appellants filed in the Sessions Court, that Maru probably met his death in the assault made upon him by Gola Dhanna, Jherisa, Kishora and their relations.

It is undoubtedly well established that the eyewitnesses for the prosecution are not disinterested but certainly hostile to the appellants but under the peculiar circumstances of this case, this fact alone is insufficient to discard their evidence as unreliable. There are undoubtedly two factions in the village of Mathni and that probably accounts for the absence of any but the persons interested in the deceased Maru who happened to witness the assault from coming forward to support the prosecution. The village is a fairly large one and the appellant Kisandas, who is the mukaddam, is admittedly the leader of one party. When the witnesses who are examined for the prosecution established a prima facie case against the appellants it should not in our opinion have been at all difficult for the defence to have supported their own story to the contrary as contained in their written statement, viz., that Maru was really assaulted by Gola, Dhanna and others.

The abstract principles detached from the facts found in the particular cases, as laid down in the several reported cases cited by the learned pleader for the appellants in support of this branch of his argument, cannot, in our opinion, apply to the facts of the present case and no adverse inference should be drawn against the prosecution, because they did not examine the witnesses named in the first information report. They were undoubtedly examined by the police in the course of the investigation but because probably out of fear of the appellants or partiality to them, they professed complete ignorance of the affair, they were naturally not examined at the trial. As to the discrepancies on matters of detail in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, we agree with the Additional Sessions Judge that on account of the suddenness of the quarrel and the extremely short duration of the actual assault it was more natural than otherwise that such discrepancies should occur in their depositions. In the main their evidence is consistent and in the absence in rebuttal it supports the story of the prosecution that the four appellants did take part in the assault upon the deceased Maru which resulted in his death.

The next question that has to be considered is what offence was committed by the appellants who are proved to have taken part in the assault. The evidence on record does not prove who among the assailants struck the fatal blow, but the victim having died as a result of this assault it should not probably have been difficult for the learned Additional Sessions Judge to hold the whole lot of accused before him guilty of murder under the principle of law enunciated in the case of Kanhai v. Emperor (1), instead of convicting three of them for simple hurt only under S. 323, I. P C.

But since there is no appeal preferred by the Local Government against the acquittal of these three appellants of the charge of murder it is not open to this Court to take any independent view of the evidence and come to a finding contrary to the one arrived at by the Additional Sessions Judge in this matter : Kishan Singh v. Emperor (2). The finding that these three accused were only guilty of an offence under S. 323, I. P. C, must therefore stand and on the basis of this finding and on the finding that Kisandas did not give the fatal blow it is clear that the conviction of the appellant Kisandas for the murder of Maru or for abetment thereof cannot be sustained.

It has been a matter of considerable difficulty to understand if the learned Additional Sessions Judge convicted the appellant Kisandas of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., or of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 114, I. P. C. Para. 14 of the judgment appealed against which deals with this matter is really incapable of a correct interpretation and the learned pleader for the appellants very rightly characterized it as full of faulty reasoning, illogical conclusions and confused findings. The matter is not even made clear by referring to the form containing the finding and sentence which follows the judgment, because it also states that Kisandas:

"is guilty of the offence specified in the charge, namely, that he committed the offence of murder and has thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 302 read with S. 114, I. P. C."

It may be noted that the operative words of the finding are not filled in the said form by the Judge himself but apparently by his reader though the form bears the signature of the Judge.

(1) [1913] 35 All. 329=21 I. C. 657=11 A. L. J. 752.

(2) A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 254=50 All. 722=55 I. A. 390 (P.C.).

Having found in the earlier paragraph of his judgment that the fatal blow was not given by Kisandas, that there was no conspiracy to kill Maru,

"that even if as stated by P. W. 9 Kisandas asked his followers to strike it is doubtful if each of the followers did intend to kill Maru," the learned Judge inconsistently begins para. 14 of the judgment by stating that "it appears that he did wish that Maru should be killed," and that because Maru ran from the spot near the osari to save his life

"that is to say, that he probably perceived that Kisandas was so violently excited that he with the help of others, might even kill him," therefore:

"Under the circumstances, the fatal blow must be deemed to have been given at the instance of Kisandas."

No authority has been cited by the learned Judge for fastening upon Kisandas a constructive liability for the fatal blow which has not been proved to have been given by any one of his three followers, viz, the other appellants.

But the matter does not rest here for the learned Judge goes on to state that the fatal blow:

"was given in his presence by one of his followers if he himself did not give it. He who gave the blow with a heavy stick on the head which fractured the skull and lacerated the brain must be deemed to have intended to cause death. Murder was thus committed either by Kisandas himself or by one of the other three accused in consequence of the abetment and in the presence of the abettor (Kisandas). Regard being had to the provision of S. 114, I. P. C., Kisandas must be deemed to have murdered Maru if he himself did not kill him."

Further on the learned Judge states that:

"It also appears that the situation developed somewhat suddenly. But it is clear that there was premeditation and that he who gave the fatal blow acted in a cruel and unusual manner. I find accordingly that Kisandas either actually committed murder or that he must be deemed to have committed that offence."

Inconsistency and confusion of ideas and uncertainty in arriving at a definite conclusion are thus patent on the face of para. 14 of the judgment from which the above quotations are taken. When on his own finding none of the other three appellants had any intention to kill Maru nor did any of them actually kill him by striking the fatal blow, it was clearly illogical to hold Kisandas constructively responsible for the fatal blow given by somebody else who was not his follower and on the further finding that Kisandas did not himself give the blow, it was manifestly wrong to have convicted him of murder under S. 302, I. P. C.

The substantive charge of murder having failed in the case of the other three appellants, Kisandas could not in law be convicted of murder on the short ground that the substantive offence itself is not found proved in the case. Moreover, it is equally clear upon the authorities cited by the learned pleader for the appellants that in the absence of a definite charge of abetment being framed against Kisandas which he had no opportunity to meet his conviction for abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 114, I. P. C, was wholly illegal: Reg. v. Chand Nur (3), Empress v. Dongria (4), Padmanabha Panjikannaya v. Emperor (5), Emperor v Raghya Nagya (6), Hulas Chand Baid v Emperor (7), Emperor v. Mahabir Prasad (8) and Kadira v Emperor, A. I. R 1928 Cal. 466.

The result is that the appeals of Rajaram, Nathuram and Tunda are dismissed and that of Kisandas partly allowed by setting aside his conviction for murder or for abetment of murder and convicting him under S. 323, I. P. C., and sentencing him to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Revn. No. 101 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Raipur, D/- 8th March 1929, in Criminal Appeal No. 39 of 1929

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 118—High Court can interfere on merits of orders under S. 118 if

Court under S. 406 has not really gone through evidence on record.

It is true that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere on the merits of orders passed under S. 118, except in very exceptional circumstances provided that the Court under S. 406, shows in its judgment that it has really, and not merely nominally, gone through the evidence on the record, which it can do by stating clearly what it believes the evidence proves giving a short summary of that evidence, and making such criticisms as go to show that the evidence is reliable, but if the judgment does not satisfy these requirements and also fails to come up to the required standard of a legal judgment, and there is a clear misconception of such evidence as is considered, it is not only just but imperative on the High Court to see how far the judgment in appeal is correct even on matters which it purports to decide expressly: *6 A. (b) Criminal P. C., S. 107—Threatening to beat person or asking person to give up serving another on pain of being involved in litigation does not justify passing order under S. 107.

Threatening to beat a person saying why he served a particular person and asking another to give up serving a particular person on pain of being involved in litigation are not threats of violence of such a nature as would in law justify the passing of an order under S. 107. [P 332 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 107—Scope.

Dispute about the cultivation of a bund and a proclamation forbidding people on payment of fine and shoe-beating from picking fruit from a Ber tree do not come within the purview of S. 107. [P 330 C 1]

(d) C. P. Land Revenue Act, S. 188 (2)—Lambardar of undivided village has no sole right to appoint village servants.

There is no authority to support the proposition that a person as the lambardar of the undivided village has the right to appoint persons who simply make a living in the village by their labour as village servants and a cosharer has no right to interfere with their appointment. [P 331 C 2]

K. V. Deoskar—for Applicant.

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

B. K. Bose, V. Bose and P. N. Rudra—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This rule was issued at the instance of the applicant Kashiram to revise the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Baloda Bazar, under S. 107 read with S. 118, Criminal P. C., and confirmed in appeal by the Sessions Judge, Raipur, binding over the applicant for one year to keep the peace. The history of this case is a deplorable reading of the lack of promptitude and tact displayed by the Magistrate concerned in regard to taking proper timely measures for preventing possible breach of the peace, as the delay seems to have given ample opportunity to the other side to improve upon the otherwise simple case in its origin. As far back as 19th December 1927 a petition (Ex. P-1) was presented to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate by Asaram Malguzar and other cosharer Kashiram (1) that he had allowed:

"the winter crop to be grazed by his cattle and is allowing the summer crop also to be grazed up by his cattle," and (2) that he threatened to beat the sons of the village watchmen if next time his cattle were impounded This complaint was forwarded by the Magistrate to the police "for report if any action under S. 107 is necessary." On 29th January 1928, the police returned the complaint with their report which stated that since 1927 there was a dispute between the lambardar Asaram and the cosharer Kashiram over the cultivation by the latter of a portion of the bund of a tank and other waste land, that in spite of the proceedings taken under S. 145, Criminal P C., on 16th September 1927, Kashiram refuses to leave possession of the field or bund but offers other land in exchange which Asaram refuses to take, and that there was thus a likelihood of the dispute getting more acute

Instead of taking any action forthwith the Magistrate recorded the following curious order on the police report on 15th February 1928:

"The crops are now out, there can be hardly any breach of the peace now. Put up later in May or June."

On 11th June 1928, the learned Magistrate again endorsed the following order on the very same police report:

"Ask Sub-Inspector of Police whether there is still likelihood of a breach of the peace."

It is indeed difficult, if not impossible, to understand the significance of the last portion of the first order and the second order. If the police report was correct it certainly disclosed the necessity of taking prompt action under S. 145, Criminal P. C., against both the contending parties who were fighting about the lands in dispute. The papers were, however, again forwarded to the Sub-Inspector of Police who submitted his second report on 4th July 1928 and on the same date, the case was registered and the preliminary order under S. 112, Criminal P. C., was passed against the applicant and his brother Ajab. It is apparent that the two main causes of trouble given in Ex. P-1 had totally disappeared in the seven months that elapsed since the presentation of the original application, and three entirely new matters all subsequent to the first police report cropped up in the meanwhile leaving the bone of contention, viz., the alleged forcible cultivation of the land between the two tanks, intact. The three additional matters introduced in the second police report were:

(i) That Kashiram and his brother had threatened the village servants of the other cosharers and prevented them from working; (ii) that they had wrongfully turned a man out of his house and put someone else into it; and (iii) that they had wrongfully prevented a man using a lane in the village.

In recording evidence of the prosecution witnesses the Magistrate did not take care, as he should have done, to confine the witnesses to depose only to the four facts enumerated above and which were embodied in the preliminary order of 4th July but allowed them to depose to the four following additional facts against the accused:

(i) that Kashiram had issued a proclamation forbidding people on payment of fine and shoe-beating from picking fruit from a Ber tree on the embankment of the tank; (ii) that the two brothers had shut up cattle and their owners and extorted money from the latter on the allegation of damage done to their crops; (ii) that they had beaten one Sobharam; and (iv) that Kashiram had threatened to beat Asaram. The proceedings dragged on up to 2nd January 1929, when the Magistrate passed his final order and holding all the charges proved against the applicant bound him over for one year to keep the peace but discharged his brother Ajab.

On appeal the Sessions Judge relying on the evidence of P. Ws. 2, 3, 5, 7, 8 and 9 held that "in April or May 1928 Kashiram threatened the village servants appointed by Asaram and turned one of them, (sic) Sakharam Lohar, out of the house in which he was living and put Luddu Dhobin into the house in his place."

The learned Judge, however, rightly held that the cultivation of the bund and the proclamation about the Ber trees did not come within the purview of S. 107, Criminal P. C., and without discussing the evidence relating to the remaining four charges he simply stated in para. 8 of his judgment as follows:

"There is a good deal of evidence to show that Kashiram has acted in a highhanded way on many occasions, and it appears to me likely that if the lower Court's order is cancelled a breach of the peace would result."

With regard to the complaint of the applicant that the introduction of the additional charges disclosed in the evidence but not covered by the preliminary order had prejudiced him and had vitiated the trial, the learned Judge held that since the applicant had sufficient notice of them their omission from the preliminary order was a mere irregularity and did not vitiate the trial.

Three points which have been stressed for the applicant and require consideration are:

(i) that the Sessions Judge has wholly misconceived the evidence relating to the incident of ousting Khamman Lohar from his house and putting Luddu in it, (ii) that the evidence on the point of alleged threats to village servants was so meagre and unreliable as to be insufficient in law to sustain the order in question; and (iii) that the judgment of the Sessions Judge is not a legal and proper disposal of the appeal because it does not at all deal with the merits of the four other charges on which the order against the applicant was also based

It was contended by the learned Government-Advocate for the Crown and Mr Vivian Bose for Asaram who appeared to oppose the rule that since the Sessions Judge concurred with the trying Magistrate in finding the case against the applicant proved this Court should not interfere. It is true that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere on the merits of orders passed under S. 118, Criminal P. C., except in very exceptional circumstances provided that the Court hearing the appeal under S 406 ibid shows in its judgment that it has really, and not merely nominally, gone through the evidence on the record; and as remarked in Shiam Lal v. Emperor (1):

"This it can do by stating clearly what it believes the evidence proves against the appellant, giving a short summary of that evidence, and making such criticisms as go to show that the evidence is reliable."

In the present case 20 witnesses for the prosecution were examined and the case was keenly contested by the applicant who examined 12 witnesses in defence. Even a cursory examination of the materials placed upon the record should have disclosed that Asaram was rightly or wrongly offended at the conduct of the applicant in encroaching upon waste lands of the village, and for the last two years was trying to regain possession of these lands. Before the present proceedings were started there were other criminal cases between the parties, viz., the criminal case started against the applicant admittedly at the bidding of Asaram by his watchman Hiraman which resulted in acquittal of the applicant and the case started by the applicant against Asaram and 18 others for illegal seizure of his cattle in which all the accused were fined. The proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., started against the applicant at the instance of Asaram also failed. The defamation case filed against Kashiram by a tenant Kunju in which Asaram had figured as witness 3 for the prosecution was also held to be false and in which the Sessions Judge regarded Asaram as "the wire-puller": see the judgment in Criminal Appeal 33 of 1928 filed by the defence and to be found at p. 69 of the record. The attention of the trying Magistrate is invited to the omission of drawing up the list of documents admitted for the defence. The documents are also not marked. Under these circumstances when strongly partisan evidence for the prosecution was produced in the present case, it was very incumbent upon the appellate Court to carefully weigh it in the light of all circumstances and the defence evidence to find out for itself the real truth of the matter. Asaram seems to have furnished the key to the whole situation when at p. 35 of the record he made the admission that,

"If Kashiram leaves the 'Gothan' the 'Paar' and the Dhalsa there will be an end of the dispute unless he goes on quarrelling."

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge not only does not satisfy the requirements suggested in the Allahabad case noted above in spite of the fact that by grounds 3, 6 and 7 of the memorandum of appeal the Judge was pointedly invited to consider the probabilities of the prosecution evidence being untrue and the defence evidence but it also fails in my opinion to come up to the standard of a legal judgment as laid down by this Court in Jairam v. Emperor (2). Moreover, as I shall show later on, there has been a clear misconception of such evidence as was considered by the learned Judge. For all these reasons it is not only just but imperative on me to see for myself how far the judgment in appeal is correct even on matters which it purports to decide expressly. As regards the first point it was conceded by Mr. V. Bose that there has really been some confusion in the mind of the learned Judge. The evidence in cross-examination of Khamman Lohar (P. W. 18) makes it quite clear that one of the three rooms meant for blacksmiths which was in the occupation of another blacksmith by name Rampershad and who used to work for the applicant Kashiram last year was allotted to Luddu Dhobin and not the one room which was originally allotted to this witness and which was still in his occupation. It is thus evident that the whole lot of prosecution witnesses are a set of liars when they come forward and say that the applicant turned Khamman Lohar out of his house and put the Dhobin in it.

This apparent misconception of the evidence by the learned Sessions Judge on an important point justifies my examining the evidence about the other complaint of alleged threats to "village servants." It was rightly conceded by Mr. Bose that the expression "village servants" has rather been loosely used in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and that there is no authority to support the proposition that Asaram as the lambardar of the undivided village had the right to appoint either of the four prosecution witnesses, viz, Nos. 5, 7, 8 9, and that Kashiram had no right to interfere with their appointment. This initial mistake in the conception of the supposed right of appointment of these witnesses who simply make a living in the village by their labour has very largely influenced the learned Judge in accepting their meagre testimony on the question of threats as true and upholding the order of the trying Magistrate. Puran (P. W. 5) the washerman stated that until Kashiram brought Anandram Dhobi this year he used to wash the clothes of the whole village, that Kashiram " threatened me not to wash the clothes of Labbu Teli " but in cross-examination he had to admit that except on this occasion the applicant did not prevent him from doing the work of any tenant in the village. What was the nature of the threat the witness did not say and he admitted that when it was given none was present. It is ridiculous to accept this sort of evidence as enough in law to bind a man down to keep the peace.

Sarwan (P. W. 7) who is a grazier employed to graze cattle of Asaram and other tenants stated that once Kashiram threatened to beat him saying " why I was serving Munari Teli and so I gave up grazing cattle of Munari." Sheonath (P. W. 8) who is another grazier stated that Kashiram once came to his house and asked him to give up grazing cattle of the Chamars of his patti on pain of being involved " in the litigation " and so he gave up grazing cattle of some Chamars. Parsu Barber (P. W. 9) stated that he used to shave all tenants but that because Kashiram abused and asked him " not to shave Munari Teli " he gave up shaving Munari. In cross-examination, however, the witness admitted that Kashiram did not in any way administer any threat to him. Budhram (P. W. 2) and Asaram (P. W. 3) have no personal knowledge of the threats alleged to have been given to the aforesaid four witnesses, and, therefore, their evidence must be excluded from consideration in connexion with this point.

Neither the defence evidence in rebuttal on this point nor the probabilities of the case have been taken into consideration by the learned Sessions Judge in accepting the version of the prosecution witnesses 5, 7, 8 and 9, as true. I had, therefore, to scrutinize all the evidence with some care. The evidence of these witnesses appears to me to have been concocted for the occasion. All these witnesses belong to Asaram's party and are admittedly dependent upon him for their very living. The second enquiry suggested by the Magistrate's order dated 11th June 1928 undoubtedly gave Asaram a fresh opportunity to easily cook up this evidence against his bitter enemy and present it before the Sub-Inspector of Police. That Asaram is not incapable of such a feat can be gathered from his own admission that he had instigated his watchman Hiraram to start a criminal case against Kashiram which failed, evidently because it was false. For these reasons I am not prepared to accept this evidence as true. Moreover, the testimony of Puran (P. W. 5) and Parsu (P. W. 9) even if true does not establish any threats at all while that of the two graziers fails to point out any " threats of violence " of such a nature as would in law justify the passing of an order under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The evidence for the defence establishes that there are two parties in the village and each party makes its own arrangements for the services of dhobis, graziers, barbers and blacksmiths, etc., and this should indeed be the normal outcome of party feeling. I, therefore, hold there is no substance in either of the first two charges enumerated in para. 6 of this order, and that the order for furnishing security should not, therefore, be sustained on the basis of these charges. The learned Sessions Judge has already rightly held that the other two allegations about the Ber tree do not come within the scope of the proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C. There then only remains the consideration of the other four charges which has not been done by the learned Sessions Judge when disposing of the appeal. In view of the dictum laid down in Jairam v. Emperor (2) it cannot be said that para. 8 of the Sessions Judge's judgment legally disposed of the appeal so far as these four points are concerned. Following the course suggested in the reported case, I, therefore, remand the case for retrial of the appeal and its disposal by a legal judgment, but the fresh hearing and disposal will be confined only to the four points left undecided by the previous judgment.

Mulchand Balbadhar--Accused—Applicant.

Municipal Committee, Gondia—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 161 of 1929, Decided on 29th July 1929.

C. P. Municipal Act (16 of 1903), S. 105 (1) (b), Bye-law 5 (a)—Lease can only be terminated according to law and it does not come to end at mere will of Committee—Transfer of Property Act, S. 106.

A lease can only be terminated according to law and it does not come to an end, at the sweet will of the Committee, by passing a resolution. [P 333 C 2]

A Municipal Committee granted a lease of immovable property. The lease was from month to month. No 15 days notice as required by law was given, but the Committee passed a resolution by which the lessee was to quit the land after seven days notice. On lessee's failure to do so he was convicted for breach of the bye-law 5 (a).

Held: that the lease could only be terminated with 15 days notice and as no such notice was given there was no breach of the bye-law 5 (a), and the conviction was illegal. [P 333 C 1, 2]

Samiullakhan—for Applicant.

G. A. Dixit—for Non-Appllicant.

Order.—The applicant Mulchand has been convicted under the Municipalities Act for committing a breach of bye-law 5 (a) under S. 105 (1) (b), Act 16 of 1903, and has been ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 40, by Mr Todkar, 3rd Class Magistrate, Gondia He had filed an appeal in the Court of the District Magistrate, Bhandara, who dismissed it on 15th March 1929.

Bye-law 5 (a) runs as follows:

"Every person the term of whose lease has expired shall, on the date of the expiry of his lease, at once without notice, vacate the shop, chabutra or stall, or site leased to him, unless the same is again leased to him and he pays the rent in advance as provided in by-law 4 above."

It is, therefore, necessary to find out the term of the lease, granted to the applicant. There is no doubt that he was a monthly tenant, as appears from the rent receipts Exs. D-1 to D-4. Ex. D-4 is dated 15th August 1928, and is a receipt given to the applicant under the signature of the Secretary, Municipal Committee, for the months of June and July 1928. A lease of immovable property can only be determined on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease or to quit, and as this was a lease from month to month, 15 days notice expiring with the end of a month of the tenancy ought to have been given. No such notice was given. Resolution dated 5th August 1928 runs as follows:

"These persons should be given seven days notice. If they do not remove the mandwa within the time specified, in that case legal action will be taken."

The Municipal Committee was entitled to pass the above resolution, but, it was the duty of its executive officer to give a proper and legal notice, which he failed to do. A lease can only be terminated according to law and it does not come to an end, at the sweet will of the Committee, by passing a resolution. The lease was not for any fixed term and the Committee by accepting rent for the month of July treated the applicant as a leasee from month to month. There has been no breach of the by-law 5 (a) and therefore the conviction is illegal. I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine if recovered to be refunded.

Civil. Revn. No. 138 of 1929, Decided on 29th July 1929, from order of Sm. Cause Court Judge, D/- 28th January 1929, in Execution Proceedings in Sm. Cause Suit No. 133 of 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 48—O. 21, R. 48 has no application in case of persons in private service.

Order 21, R 48, has no application in the case of persons who are in private service.

If the Court issues a preliminary order against an employer of a person on 23rd of a month attaching his pay for the whole of the month, such order is illegal as the pay that would fall due on the first of each month is not a debt on the date of the order; nor can the pay of the 23 days be attached as an employee engaged by the month is not entitled to wages for the current month if he wrongfully leaves employment during the month and so the right to receive pay for 23 days is contingent on the due performance of service for the entire month: 27 Cal. 38 and 18 Cal. 80, Rel. on. [P 334 C 1].

J. K. R. Cama—for Applicant.

G. R. Deo—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The Small Cause Court Judge has held that the pay of Mr. Prichard which falls due on the 1st of every month is in the nature of a debt due on the 1st of each month and that therefore a prohibitory order can issue against his employer in view of Rr. 46 and 48 O. 21, Sch. 1, Civil P. C. The order was passed on an application presented a year previously asking in vague terms for the attachment of the pay of Mr. Prichard. The order is in my opinion contrary to the provisions of law. O. 21, R. 48, has no application as Mr. Prichard is in private service. The pay which would fall due on the 1st of each month was not on the date of the order a debt: Haridas Acharjya v. Baroda Kishore (1). It is argued for the non-applicant that an order might have been passed with regard to the pay for 23 days of January on the ground that this amount had become due on the date of the order. This proposition was not apparently put forward in the Small Cause Court: the order of the Judge states that the pay would become due on the 1st of the month. It is well established that an employee engaged by the month is not entitled to wages for the current month if he wrongfully leaves employment during the month: Dhumee Behara v. C. H. C Sevenoaks, (2) The right to receive pay for the 23 days of January then was contingent on the due performance of service for the entire month The wages for that period were not on 23rd January a debt which could be attached. I therefore set aside the prohibitory order. Costs in this Court will be borne by the non-applicant Khemkaran. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

JACKSON, A. J. C.

Karan Singh—Appellant.

v.

Nandkishore and others—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 141 of 1927, Decided on 27th March 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 29th August 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 550—Sub-Inspector of Police closing shop on report of cheating—His action is unnecessary, but not illegal.

Where a Sub-Inspector of Police on a report made to him of theft and cheating closed a shop in order to be able to show to the Magistrate in the case of cheating that the shop or rather the goods contained in it had been sold to the shop-keeper for an inadequate price, it was unnecessary and undesirable to close the shop and put a stop to the business, but it was not illegal. [P 335 C 1]

(b) Tort—Malicious Prosecution — Shop closed during pendency of criminal trial against shop-keeper by Sub-Inspector of Police—Application made to Court to release shop but its consideration postponed by consent till end of trial—Accused knew that shop was in control of Court and not in possession of Sub-Inspector—Sub-Inspector acting in good faith is not responsible for loss to shop-keeper.

A shop was closed by Sub-Inspector of Police and remained closed pending the criminal trial against the shop-keeper. Application was made to the Court to release the shop alleging the shop was in the possession of the Sub-Inspector, but consideration of such application was postponed till the disposal of the case with the consent of the applicant.

Held: that the applicant who subsequently brought a suit for malicious prosecution against the Sub-Inspector knew that the shop was under the control of the Court and he being lax in obtaining its release, the Sub-Inspector of Police who was found to have acted in good faith was not responsible for the loss caused by the shop being closed.

G. P. Dick—for Appellant.

G. R. Deo and J. Sen—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The original plaintiffs in the suit out of which his appeal arises were Motichand, a pleader of Bilaspur, and his brother, Randhir Sahai. Motichand died during the course of the trial and his sons were brought on the record in his place. Motichand and Randhir Sahai were prosecuted for offences punishable under S 380 and S. 420, I. P. C., and were discharged. The prosecution originated in a report made to the police by Mt Jima Bai, defendant 1, and the investigation was conducted by Sub-Inspector Karan Singh, defendant 2. After Motichand and Randhir Sahai had been discharged they filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for damages for malicious prosecution. As regards Karan Singh, the present appellant, the suit was founded on the allegation that he had conspired with Mt. Jima Bai to prosecute the plaintiffs on charges of theft and cheating knowing them to be false, and that in the course of the investigation he maliciously closed Randhir Sahai's shop and kept it closed during the criminal proceedings, thereby causing loss to Randhir Sahai. The lower Court has passed a decree for Rs. 3,556-4-5 against Jima Bai as damages for malicious prosecution and for Rs. 3,838-8-9 against Karan Singh on the ground that he is liable for damages because of his gross negligence in dealing with Randhir Sahai's shop.

In appeal it is contended on behalf of Karan Singh that as he has been found to have acted in good faith, he has been wrongly found liable to pay damages. The question of his good faith has again been raised on behalf of the respondents, but I entirely agree with the reasons given by the lower Court for finding that he did act in good faith. Certain alleged irregularities in his procedure, not mentioned by the lower Court, have been placed before me, but some of them are not irregularities at all, and none of them leads me to suspect that Karan Singh acted otherwise than in good faith: that, however, does not dispose of the case against him.

It has been held by the lower Court that Karan Singh's action in closing the shop of Randhir Sahai was unjustified. Karan Singh has said that he closed the shop in order to be able to show to the Magistrate in the case of cheating that this shop, or rather the goods contained in it, had been sold to Randhir Sahai for a very inadequate price. He claims to have acted under S. 550, Criminal P. C. The lower Court holds that this reference to S. 550 is an afterthought I do not understand what the lower Court means. The reason for closing the shop may be an afterthought, as it was hardly likely to show to the Magistrate that the goods had been purchased for an inadequate price six months earlier, but as regards S. 550, whether Karan Singh's reference of his action to that section was or was not an afterthought, the question is whether the section covers his action. It has been urged that the goods, can, in no circumstances, be said to have been "found," but it seems to me they can very well be said to have been found in the possession of the plaintiff, Randhir Sahai, in circumstances creating suspicion of an offence. It seems to me that it was unnecessary and undesirable to close the shop and put a stop to the business, but I cannot say that it was illegal. It is, however, for subsequent negligence that Karan Singh has been held liable by the lower Court.

The question, then, is whether he can be held responsible for the loss resulting to Randhir Sahai from the shop having been kept closed for the period during which the criminal trials proceeded. The shop was closed on 19th September 1918, and the chalan under S. 420, I. P C., was presented on 8th October 1918, with the chalan the seizure memorandum was submitted to the Court, and it is contended on behalf of the appellant that the shop then came into the possession of the Court, that it was open to the plaintiffs to move the Court to release the shop, which they failed to do and that therefore no responsibility rests on Karan Singh. The seizure memorandum is not on the record, but it is clear from the deposition of Karan Singh (2 D. W. 3) that it was filed with the chalan. It was produced in order to refresh his memory as to the person to whom the key of the shop was given when it was closed. The memorandum should be on the record, but the reason why it is not appears to be that at the stage of pleadings the parties had not in mind Karan Singh's possible liability on the ground of negligence. It is true that in para. 24 of the plaint it is alleged that Karan Singh kept the shop closed under his charge, without placing it in the custody of the Court or taking care to preserve the goods. The reply in para 7 of Karan Singh's written statement is that the seizure of the shop was made under the Criminal Procedure Code in accordance with the law and was duly reported to the District Superintendent of Police and the Magistrate concerned. Nothing further was pleaded about the Sub-Inspector's failure to place the shop under the control of the Court, but in para. 4 of the plaintiffs' written reply, it is said that:

> "the arrest and closing of the shop and consequent damages were the results of malicious prosecution," and clearly the suit went to trial on the basis that Karan Singh's liability would depend on whether he had acted in good faith in prosecuting the plaintiffs and in closing the shop. It appears to me that it was only at the time of judgment when malice was negatived that the question of his liability on account of negligence came prominently before the lower Court.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that Karan Singh continued throughout the criminal proceedings in possession and control of the shop. It is true that on two occasions during the proceedings they made applications to the Court in which it was alleged that the Sub-Inspector of the Police was in possession of the shop. On 12th October 1918: see Ex. P-3, which is a copy of the order sheet in the case under S. 380, an application was made to the Court to direct the Sub-Inspector to produce certain books and papers. On 14th July 1919, the application, of which Ex. 2 D-8 is a copy, was made to the Court for the release of the shop, which was said to be kept locked and guarded by the police. But in spite of these allegations as to possession and control, the fact that the applications were made to the Court show that the plaintiffs recognized that the shop was in the control of the Court, as it clearly would be when the seizure memorandum was filed with the chalan.

It is clear that the plaintiffs took no steps to obtain the release of the shop till they made the application dated 14th July 1919 above referred to, and it is significant that there is an endorsement on that application dated 26th August 1919, which shows that consideration of the application was postponed with the consent of the applicants till the disposal of the case. After the case was disposed of, on 15th November 1919, the order sheet (Ex. P-2) shows that the Court directed the property (shop) to be made over to the person from whom it had been seized. It seems to me clear that the shop was under the control of the Court, that this fact was recognized by the plaintiffs and that they were lax in trying to obtain release. In these circumstances it seems to me clear that that the Sub-Inspector Karan Singh cannot be made liable for the loss caused by the closing of the shop on the ground that it was kept closed 15 months owing to his gross negligence. In view of the above finding, I need not go into the questions of limitation and assessment of damages. The appeal succeeds and the decree of the lower Court is set aside as against Karan Singh, who will get his costs in both Courts.

The Central Board of Revenue determined the period of the two Abidi years which ended during one calendar year to be the previous year for the purpose of assessment. It was contended by the assessee that it was not within the competence of the Board to pass such an order. The sum in dispute was about Rs. 20,000. It was not shown that there were other assessees who took as their previous year a year which is consistently less than calendar year.

M. B. Niyogi—for Applicant.

D. N. Choudhry—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The applicant Moulana Mohammad Ibrahim Riza Malak asks for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the final order passed by this Court on 18th April 1929 on a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act 11 of 1922. The right of appeal to the Privy Council from such a decision is given by sub-S. (2), S. 66-A and is confined to a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for appeal to his Majesty in Council. Their Lordships in Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Income tax Commissioner, Delhi (1) state that the words "to be a fit one for appeal to his Majesty in Council" coupled with the words "so far as may be" in para. 3, S. 66-A exclude from any right of appeal cases which fall within the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C., and are operative to confine that right to cases which are certified to be otherwise fit for appeal to his Majesty in Council. The sum is admitted to be over Rs 10,000 so that the case thus falls within the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C, for the appeal need not involve a substantial question of law when an order of this Court is passed otherwise than on an appeal. But S. 66-A excludes from right of appeal cases which fall within the requirements of S. 110 of the Code. We have to decide whether the case is otherwise fit for appeal to his Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Banarasi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (2) have stated that the provision authorising a High Court to certify that the case is fit for appeal "otherwise" is clearly intended to meet special cases: such, for example, as these in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. This statement of their Lordships must be considered with reference to the point which they desired to decide. They had pointed out that the section corresponding to the present S. 110, Civil P. C., did not allow an appeal in any case where the value of the subject matter in dispute was less than Rs. 10,000 and they were dealing with cases where the point in dispute in so far as it was measurable by money could not be said to be an amount of Rs. 10,000 or upwards. It cannot then be inferred from the statement that their Lordships considered that the point in dispute could not be held to be of great private importance to the parties for the sole reason that it involved a very large sum of money. It may well be then that if the subject matter of the suit is a sufficiently large amount a High Court may be authorised to certify that the case is fit for appeal on the ground that it is o great private importance: but their Lordships' judgment in Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi (1) shows that no certificate should be given merely because the sum in dispute is in excess of Rs. 10,000 by an amount which is not very great. The sum in dispute is stated in the application to be Rs. 22,084-7-0. It is in reality less as the applicant admitted liability for some income-tax: it is probably in the neighbourhood of Rs. 20,000. In our opinion it cannot be said that the point in dispute is of great private importance merely because the sum in dispute is about Rs 20,000. We do not consider that Rs. 20,000 can be said to be very greatly in excess of Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of deciding whether a dispute affecting it is of great private importance and admittedly the main point in dispute will not affect the payment of income-tax in the near future. The only ground on which we are asked to grant a certificate is that the point in dispute is of great public or private importance. We cannot, then, certify the case to be fit for appeal unless the point is of great public importance.

In the application it is said that the case involves an important question of law, namely, the meaning of the word "previous year" within the meaning of Ss. 2 (11) (a) and (b), Income-tax Act 11 of 1922. The facts which led to the reference were briefly these. Under S. 3, Act 11 of 1922 income-tax for any year is charged in respect of the income, profits and gains of the previous year. The "previous year" is ordinarily the twelve months ending of 31st March next preceding the year for which the assessment is to be made, but S. 2 (11) (a) allows the assessee to take as his previous year a year ending on a date within 12 months before that 31st March if his accounts have been made up in respect of that year. This previous year chosen by the assessee need not be 12 calendar months: it is very common for commercial years to differ from periods of 12 calendar months, but ordinarily these years, sometimes longer and sometimes shorter than 12 calendar months and in the same season: so that the total length of a number of these years varies little from that of an equal number of calendar years. Now the assessee and his adherents form the "Atba-e-Malak Badar Community" and have for a number of years made up accounts according to what they term an abidi year. This year is always 10 or 15 days shorter than a calendar year. At intervals of about 30 years two of these abidi years will end during the 12 months preceding 31st March. The assessee for the year 1925-1926 paid in respect of income, profits and gains of the abidi year ending on 4th April 1924. The next abidi year ended on 25th March 1925 and when the question of income-tax for the year 1926-1927 arose he claimed that he should be charged in respect of the profits for the abidi year from 25th March 1925 to 13th March 1926 thus escaping tax on the profits on the intervening abidi year. The Central Board of Revenue determined the period of the two abidi years to be the previous year for the purpose of assessment for the year 1926-1927.

(1) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 242=9 Lah. 284=54 I. A. 421 (P. C.).
(2) [1901] 23 All. 227=28 I. A. 11=7 Sar. 825 (P. C.).

The question of law raised by the applicant is that it is not within the competence of the Board to make such an order. It has not been shown to us by the applicant that there are other assessees in India who take as their previous year a year which is consistently less than 12 calendar months. We do not know then that this question of law is ever likely to arise with respect to any other assessee. The question will not arise again with regard to the present assessee for a period of about 30 years. We must, therefore, hold that the point in dispute is not of great public or private importance. We cannot therefore certify the case to be "otherwise fit for appeal to his Majesty in Council." We dismiss the application with costs on applicant. Counsel's fee Rs 100.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 134 of 1929, Decided on 9th September 1929, from order of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 4th January 1929, in Misc. Appeal No. 15 of 1928.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 4 — As soon as Court finds that receiver is wrongly given possession, Court should direct him to deliver possession to proper person.

The receiver is an officer of the Court and as soon as the Court finds that he has wrongly been given possession and ought not to remain in possession, the Court should direct him to deliver possession to the proper person. If the insolvency Court, owing to a mistaken view of the law, does not pass such an order, the person aggrieved may appeal and the appellate Court should pass the order and appeal should not be dismissed merely because insolvent delays in asking to be put in possession. [P 339 C 1]

(b) C. P. Tenancy Act, S. 49—"To occupy any portion of his sir land as proprietor."

The words "to occupy any portion of his sir land as a "proprietor" in S. 49, mean to enjoy the proprietary rights in any portion of sir land. [P 339 C 1]

(c) C. P. Tenancy Act, S. 49—Owner of sir land adjudged insolvent—Order passed vesting his land in receiver—Owner becomes occupancy tenant of sir land—Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 28 (5).

The intention of S. 49 appears to be that whenever proprietary possession temporarily passes from the owner of sir land he becomes an occupancy tenant. If an owner of sir land is adjudged insolvent and order is passed vesting his property in the receiver, he no doubt loses his right to proprietary rights in the sir land but by the vesting order he becomes the occupancy tenant of the sir land and is entitled to possession of the land: *A. M. R. Bobde and V. V. Kelkar — for Applicants.

V. Bose and P. N. Rudra — for Non-Applicant.

Order — The applicants are insolvents. On 27th April 1926 an order was passed in virtue of which all the property of the insolvents including sir lands was vested in the receiver and given into his possession. In the beginning of 1928 the insolvents asked that they should be put into possession of the sir lands on the ground that they, by the order dated 27th April 1926, had become exproprietary occupancy tenants under the provisions of S. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act. The insolvency Court held that they had not become tenants: in appeal the learned District Judge, Nagpur, held that they had become tenants but considered that because the insolvents had not urged this point sooner, the appeal failed. The learned Judge remarked that it might be open to the lower Court to return possession of the occupancy rights in the sir lands to the insolvents.

The insolvents have applied for revision and S. 75, Provl. Insol. Act, gives me ample power to set aside the order if it is not according to law. I do not think the appeal of the insolvents ought to have been dismissed on the ground that the applicants had failed to take a plea at a previous stage of the case or had delayed their application. The receiver is an officer of the Court and as soon as the Court finds that he has wrongly been given possession and ought not to remain in possession, the Court should direct him to deliver possession to the proper persons. If the insolvency Court owing to a mistaken view of the law, does not pass such an order, the person aggrieved may appeal and the appellate Court should pass the order.

I have therefore to consider whether or not the insolvents were in reality entitled to possession when they applied for possession. If this was the case, the receiver will be directed to deliver possession to the insolvents. The insolvents had not asked for and will not receive, anything in the nature of compensation for the profits of the lands during the period during which the receiver was in possession I have to construe the following words extracted from S. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920):

"A proprietor, who temporarily . . . loses, whether under a decree or order of a civil Court or a transfer or otherwise his right to occupy any portion of his sir land as a proprietor, shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land."

Now in a series of rulings reference has been made to the possessory as apart from the cultivating right of a proprietor in sir land. I cite a sentence from Diwan Zalimsingh v Chhadamilal (1) at p. 136:

"In the present case the plaintiffs are entitled to bring to sale the entire rights, i. e., the possessory and the cultivating rights of the proprietor in the sir land."

In Sheolal v. Nanhelal (2) at p. 127 it was stated:

"that the proprietary and cultivating rights are co-existing and component parts of the sir right,"

The words "to occupy any portion of his sir land as a "proprietor," in S. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act, appear to me to refer to this view and to mean to enjoy the proprietary rights in any portion of sir land. There can be no doubt that by the vesting order the insolvents temporarily lost their right to enjoy the proprietary rights in the sir land: after the vesting order the receiver deals with these rights in the manner he considers most beneficial to the interests of both creditors and insolvents. It is not necessary to consider whether the insolvents temporarily lost their proprietary rights in the sir lands: What has to be considered is whether they temporarily lost their rights to proprietary enjoyment, i. e., to proprietary profits etc. The intention of S 49, Tenancy Act, appears to be that whenever proprietary possession temporarily passes from the owner of sir land, he becomes an occupancy tenant I therefore hold that the order causes the insolvents to become occupancy tenants of the sir lands. Prideaux, A J. C., in a judgment passed on 31st August 1923 in Shrikishan v. Nagoba, A. I. R. 1924 Nag 158 considered the question whether a receiver could apply for sanction of the sale of the cultivating rights in sir land, he held that by the vesting order the insolvents acquired occupancy rights and I fully agree with his reasons for so holding.

It is clear that the right of an occupancy tenant cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree: S. 12, (2), Tenancy Act, and, therefore, the tenancy rights do not vest in the receiver (S. 28 (5), Provl. Insol Act). At the date of the application the insolvents were occupancy tenants and the receiver was not entitled to possession of the cultivating rights: the insolvency Court should therefore have directed delivery of possession of the sir land to the insolvents. I set aside the orders of the insolvency and appellate Courts and direct that the insolvents shall now be placed in occupation of the land which formed their sir land. Costs in all Courts will be paid from the funds in the hands of receiver. Counsel's fee in this Court forty rupees.

First Appeal No. 118 of 1928, Decided on 19th April 1929, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 6th June 1929 in Civil Suit No. 9 of 1922.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 2—Pre-decree arrangement not to execute decree is no bar to its execution.

A pre-decree arrangement by which a decree is not to be executed cannot be pleaded in bar of the execution of the decree: 11 N. L. R. 110; 29 Cal. 810 and 31 Cal. 179, Rel. on.; A I.R. 1926 Mad. 582, not Foll. [P 340 C 2]

Abdul Razak—for Respondent.

Judgment—In Civil Suit No. 9 of 1922 on the file of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, a final decree for foreclosure was passed against the defendants-appellants on 19th March 1927. The respondent on 3rd August 1928 filed an application for execution of the said decree asking for delivery of possession of the foreclosed properties and a warrant for possession was issued, but returned unexecuted because it was reported that the houses were locked. On 22nd September 1928 a fresh warrant was issued with directions to break open the locks and deliver possession of the houses to the respondent decree-holder.

On 26th September 1928 the appellants judgment-debtors presented an application to the lower Court contending that on account of a certain agreement arrived at between the parties before the preliminary decree was passed the decree could not be executed otherwise than in terms of the alleged agreement which are set out in para. 2 of the application in these words:

"That these Judgment-debtors contend that prior to the passing of the decree there was an agreement between the parties that in case the subsequent-mortgagee Madhoram Parasram would fail to redeem and pay up the decretal amount this decree-holder would not execute the decree against these judgment-debtors and accept the decretal money in three annual instalments ten months after the decree absolute. That the consideration for this agreement was that these judgment-debtors would not dispute the decree-holders' claim under the mortgage which part of the agreement the judgment debtors have performed."

The lower Court overruled the objection on the short ground that it could not go behind the decree. It is against this order that the judgment-debtors have come up in appeal to this Court.

Reliance was placed by the learned pleader for the appellants on the case of Venkatasubba Mudali v. Manickammal (1), which, following an earlier Full Bench case of the same Court, lays down that a pre-decree arrangement, by which a decree was not to be executed, can be pleaded in bar of the execution of the decree. On the other hand, in the case of Hukamchand v. Radhakisan (2) this Court following the law propounded by the Calcutta High Court in the cases of Benode Lal v. Brojendra (3) and Hassan Ali v. Gauzi Ali Mir (4), has held exactly the opposite view after expressly dissenting from that taken by the Bombay High Court in the case of Laldas v. Kishordas (5)

We prefer to follow the view of this Court and hold that the appellants cannot plead the agreement set up by them in bar of the execution of the final decree for foreclosure The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 50.

First Appeal No. 97 of 1926, Decided on 13th December 1927, from decree of First Class Sub-Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 14th September 1926, in Civil Suit No. 10 of 1926.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 43—Transfer by one of the widows of part of property of her husband — Transfer by another widow of her portion also — Compromise between widows not to contest each other's transfers—Transferee from one widow afterwards succeeding otherwise to the property as legal heir—Compromise does not hold good — S. 43, T. P. Act, has no application.

Where there was on the part of defendant 1, a transferee from one of the widows of the deceased owner of the property, a promise not to contest the rights of the other widow of the deceased in the property she was then holding, while she also made a similar mutual promise as regards the property in possession of defendant 1, and thus there was a mutual compromise that in future each would not contest the other's right, but where later on defendant 1 in the course of law, obtained an indefeasible title to the property independant of the widow.

Held: that the compromise ceased to have any effect and so the transferee from the first widow cannot say that defendant 1 was estop-ped from suing for the claim of his share in the property. S. 43 T. P. Act, has no application in such case : A. I. R. 1923 All. 204 ; A. I. R. 1923 All 987 (F.B) a d A. I. R. 1924 All. 826, Dist. Smith v. Osborne, (1857) 6 H. L. C. 875, Ref. [P 343 C 1]

Judgment—A somewhat interesting question of law arises in the present case. The following genealogy is not disputed.

Hiraman was the owner, amongst other property, of mouza Bagdari (Chhindwara) and of the sir and khudkasht fields therein mentioned in para. 9 of the plaint. He died about 1869, having been predeceased by his son Tikaram. Hiraman also owned mouza Lingpani, mouza Bhaliwara and an eight annas share of mouza Bilanda On Hiraman's death, the property went to his widow Mt. Kasturibai ; she died in 1886, and the two widows of Tikaram Subheti Kalan and Subheti Khurd then took possession of the property. During their lifetime about 1890, they effected a partition of the property as follows : Subheti Kalan took mouza Bhaliawara and the eight annas share of mouza Bilanda, and Subheti Khurd took mouza Lingpani and mouza Bagdari. The present plaintiff is said to have been adopted by Subheti Khurd in 1892 ; Subheti Kalan had the adoption declared null and void in a litigation which progressed about the year 1901.

In 1909, Subheti Kalan executed a will in favour of Ramcharan (defendant 1), and placed him in possession of the property held by her. Subheti Khurd, thereupon, was on the point of filing a suit for cancelling the will and for recovery of the property held by Ramcharan, but the two ladies effected a mutual settlement, whereby it was agreed that neither of them should disturb the transfers made by the other. As a result of this settlement, defendant 1 continued to hold Bhaliwara and the eight annas share of mouza Bilanda, while Subheti Khurd, in 1912, made a gift of mouza Bagdari to the plaintiff and gave him possession of mouza Lingpani and other property in 1921 shortly before her death. Prior to this in 1916. Subheti Khurd had filed Civil Suit No, 33 of 1916 in the Court of the District Judge, Chhindwara, against Ramcharan and others for possession of the property he held. The case came up on second appeal to this Court and, during the pendency of the said second appeal, a compromise was arrived at between Subheti Khurd and the defendant, whereby, inter alia, the former recognized the latter as the owner of the property concerned in the said suit, while the latter declared that he had no rights over mouzas Bagdari and Lingpani and agreed to recognize the gift of mouza Bagdari made by Subheti Khurd in favour of the plaintiff

We now come to the year 1921. In that year, Subheti Khurd died. The father of Ramcharan, Harisingh, filed Civil Suit No. 147 in the year 1922 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Chhindwara, against the plaintiff and his father Gopal Prasad for possession of the 16 annas share of mouza Bagdari and Lingpani and succeeded in getting possession from the Court. Harisingh died in 1925 and, on his death, Ramcharan and his brother Roshanlal succeeded to the property obtained by their father in Civil Suit No. 147 of 1922.

Plaintiff's case apparently was that the defendant Ramcharan was bound by the compromise in suit No. 33 of 1916 and was bound to restore mouza Bagdari to him. The Subordinate Judge, by his order of 21st August 1926, held that the plaint did not disclose a cause of action and returned it for amendment. The amendment made, as shown by the Subordinate Judge in his order of 14th September 1926, left matters, to all intents and purposes, as had previously been, and the Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed the suit. Against this judgment, dated 14th September 1926, the plaintiff has now come up on appeal.

The main contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant in this appeal is that Bhagwan Prasad has a right to the property in suit by virtue of the principle laid down in S. 43, T P. Act, and reference has been made to the decicisions in Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (1), Bahadur Singh v. Ram Bahadur (2), Fateh Singh v. Rukmini Ramanji Maharaj (3) and Kunti v. Gajraj Tiwari (4), in this connexion. In the first case quoted, B, one of three brothers, was, by survivorship, the sole owner of the estate of a Hindu joint family, and his widow became entitled to that estate for life. Her title was, however, disputed by A and P and K, the widows of pre-deceased brothers of B. A set up a claim to the entire family estate based on the allegation that he had been adopted by P to her deceased husband, and was entitled as such adopted son to the whole property. P supported the claim of A, and together with K alleged that the three brothers had separated and that their widows were each entitled to one-third share of the estate. The widow of B brought a suit against P and K for a declaration that B, her husband, had been the sole owner of the family property. Before this suit came on for hearing, B's widow, her daughter, P, K and A entered into a compromise.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that A was precluded from claiming as a reversioner by his having been a party to the compromise, which as well as the awards made in accordance with it were binding on him.

In the first Allahabad case (2) quoted, one S had died leaving two surviving daughters and two cousins who were separated, both from him and each other. All four of these entered into an agreement whereby they divided S's property between them in equal shares. One of the cousins sold the share so acquired ; the other cousin died leaving three sons who succeeded to their father's share. On the death of one of the daughters, her husband claimed possession of her share in the property of her father, and in this he was resisted by the three sons of the deceased cousin who claimed title in themselves.

It was held therein that the defendants, although no parties to the agreement by which the property of S was divided, yet had received the benefit of it on the death of their father, and could not be permitted to question its validity. In the other Allahabad case quoted, a reversioner to the estate of a deceased separated Hindu had expressly assented to an alienation of the property forming part of the estate made by the widow in possession. It was held that such a reversioner cannot, on succeeding to the estate after the widow's death, repudiate his action and sue for possession of the property alienated by the widow. In the Kunti v Gajraj (4), decision quoted, Walsh, Ag. C. J. and Ryves, J., held that, according to equity and good conscience, when parties having agreed not to go to law, carried out by a mutual arrangement their mutual promises, the Courts in India will not permit any of such parties to repudiate what has been done, and will prohibit any person claiming under such party from attempting the same thing.

It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant in this Court that, as he was a party to the compromise of 1918, by which Subheti Khurd and he arrived at a compromise by which the former recognized defendant-respondent 1 as the owner of the property then in suit, while Ramcharan declared that he had no rights over Bagdari and Lingpani and agreed to recognize the gift of Bagdari made by Subheti Khurd in the plaintiff's favour, Ramcharan is now estopped from contesting the plaintiff's right to the property in suit. It is further urged that now, as Ramcharan has succeeded to the property as heir to his father Harisingh, he cannot, in equity, be allowed to question the title of the plaintiff : cf.

(1) A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 70=40 All. 487=45 I.A. 118 (P.C.).
(2) A.I.R. 1923 All. 204=45 All. 277.
(3) A.I.R. 1923 All. 387=45 All. 389 (F.B.).
(4) A.I.R. 1924 All. 826=46 All. 847.

Smith v. Osborne (5) and it has further been urged in this connexion that, under S. 23, Cl. (c), Specific Relief Act, the present plaintiff-appellant has a right to enforce performance of the compromise arrived at in 1918.

For my own part, I am wholly unable to accept the contentions which have been urged on behalf of the appellant in this connexion. There can be no question but that, by the compromise of 1918, defendant-respondent 1's rights entirely disappeared for the time being and that the latter was bound by the compromise so far as the title to the property in dispute was concerned. That title it will be remembered, was derived from the will of Subheti Kalan made in 1909 In the present case, however, a wholly different set of facts came later into operation. The father of defendant 1, who had not been a party to the compromise of 1918, brought a suit in 1922 against the plaintiff and his father Gopal Prasad for possession of mouza Bagdari and mouza Lingpani and succeeded in getting possession thereof. Harisingh thus got an indefeasible title against the present plaintiff and, as he died in 1925, I am of opinion that his estate properly devolved on defendants 1 and 2

I do not think, in the circumstances of the case, there can be any question of applying the principle laid down in S. 43, T P. Act. So far as the compromise of 1918 was concerned, there was no transfer of any property. There was only, on the part of defendant 1, a promise not to contest the rights of Subheti Khurd in the property she was then holding, while Subheti Khurd made a similar mutual promise as regards the property in possession of Ramcharan As regards the dispute of title then in question, there was a mutual compromise that in future each would not contest the other's right. Now, however, a wholly different state of affairs has arisen. The father of defendant 1 has meanwhile, in course of law, obtained an indefeasible title to the property and his son Ramcharan has now succeeded as one of the heirs thereto. It is difficult, in those circumstances, to find the slightest ground for the present suit. The position of the appellant seems to me a forced and an unnatural one.

Let us assume in the present case that, after the compromise, Subheti Khurd had mortgaged all her property to a stranger and that the mortgage not having been satisfied, it had passed in whole to the mortgagee. Let us assume also to take an extreme case that the mortgagee in question had thereafter made a gift or a sale of the property in favour of defendant 1. On the position taken by the appellant in this Court, defendant 1 would even thereafter be estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff to the property in question. The position, in short, taken up by the plaintiff in this case leads to a sheer reductio ad absurdum. I am of opinion, therefore, that the case has been rightly decided by the lower Court and that, in reality, the plaint discloses no valid cause of action.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs.

Costs in the lower Court as already ordered.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Point not raised in first appeal should not be allowed to be raised in second appeal.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 18—Admission of points of law cannot bind person.

Judgment. — This judgment will govern two second appeals Nos. 288 and 289 of 1928. They arise from two suits, in one of which the malguzar sues for possession of certain fields in mouza Dhangawan. In the other the three plaintiffs, Bhaiyalal, Jhunni and Chutti, have sued for mesne profits of the said fields for the period during which they were dispossessed by the malguzar. Gulabchand's suit and his defence in the other suit are based on two surrender deeds, one executed by Mt. Phuljariya who, he alleges, was the Kari wife of Chunnu, the deceased brother of Bhaiyalal, Jhunni and Chutti. The other surrender deed has been executed by Jhunni and Chutti. It is the finding of the two lower Courts that Phuljariya, who was a Brahmin widow, was not and could not be legally married to Chunnu, an Ahir, and that the alleged surrender deed executed by Jhunni and Chutti was not intended by them to be a surrender deed, they were overreached by the malguzar and that they were merely executing a compromise in respect of certain criminal cases that had been filed in connexion with the dispute about the land.

The lower appellate Court has pointed out that in the grounds of appeal before it nothing was stated about the marriage of Phuljariya with Chunnu. In these circumstances I am inclined to think that Gulabchand should not be allowed in second appeal to urge that the marriage took place and was valid ; but at the same time I should like to state my opinion that on the record it could not be held proved that a valid marriage took place. My attention has been drawn to the following sentence in Russell's Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, Vol. 2, p. 23 :

"But though the Ahir caste takes its name and is perhaps partly descended from the Abhira tribe, there is no doubt that it is now and has been for centuries a purely occupational caste, largely recruited from the indigenous tribes."

It is argued from this that the Ahirs cannot be held to be bound strictly by the doctrines of Hindu Law, and, in particular, marriage among them must be regarded as governed by usage It is urged that it was pleaded in the trial Court that, by usage, the marriage of an Ahir male with a Brahmin female is a valid marriage and that the trial Court has failed to go into the plea of usage. An issue was framed as regards the marriage of Chunnu and Phuljariya in the following words :

(a) Whether Chunnoo married Mt. Phuljhariya in the Kari form of marriage?

(b) If so what was the legal effect of the marriage of Brahmin widow and an Ahir ?

Under this issue it was open to Gulabchand to prove the alleged usage and show that such a marriage was valid ; but he has not done so. Bai Gulab v. Jiwanlal Harilal (1) has been cited. In that case it has been held that in the Bombay Presidency a marriage between a Vaishya male and the illegitimate daughter born of Vaishya father and a Sudra mother is valid. That decision is, however, no authority for holding that the marriage between a Sudra and a woman of a higher caste is valid. Assuming that Chunnu and Phuljariya did go through a form of marriage, I am unable to hold that it has been proved to be valid.

On behalf of Gulabchand an argument has been based on the fact that on 21st September 1926 Bhaiyalal admitted that Phuljariya was admitted into the caste of Ahirs and that she was Kari wife of Chunnu. The trial Court allowed this pleading to be withdrawn, although it remarked that it doubted whether Bhaiyalal was unable, as he alleged, to understand the meaning of Kari wife. It is urged that this amendment should not have been allowed and that the admission by Bhaiyalal was sufficient to prove the fact of the marriage and usage which made it valid. I am unable to accept this argument, because I find that Bhaiyalal's admission was in direct contradiction of the pleading made by him on the same day, and it includes in any case, if the contention on behalf of Gulabchand is correct, an admission of a point of law which would not bind him. It has also been urged that as Chunnu and Phuljariya admittedly lived together as man and woman, it should be presumed that they were validly married ; but that presumption cannot, however, be drawn in the circumstances like those of the present case in which the union is between a man and a woman who cannot, prima facie, contract a valid marriage.

The surrender deed executed by Phuljariya can be given no effect. As ragards the other surrender deed the finding of the two lower Courts is a finding of fact. It is urged that a point of law is involved as the finding depends upon the interpretation of a document. That does not seem to me to be the case. The lower Courts in effect hold that the document was so worded as to obscure its meaning and prevent the executants from grasping the fact that they were executing a deed of surrender. This is not the interpretation of a document ; and I see no reason for interfering with the finding of fact by the two lower Courts that Jhunni and Chutti did not intend to execute a deed of surrender. It must, I think, be found that Gulabchand had no right to possession of the fields and that his claim to possession was rightly dismissed and the claim against him for mesne profits rightly decreed. I dismiss both appeals with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 136-B of 1928, Decided on 25th February 1929, from order of Small Cause Court Judge, Akola, D/- 15th March 1928, in Civil Suit No. 2497 of 1927.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code, S. 160 (3) —Rules framed under R. 4—Chaudi.

If a Chaudi could conveniently accommodate a school or vice versa, it would none the less be regarded a Chaudi. [P 346 C 1]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code, S. 160 (3) —Rules under, R. 5—Rule 5 does not provide for notices to be given to assessees individually.

Rule 5 does not provide for notices to be given to the assessees individually and if only one notice to all the assessees in the village is posted in the Chaudi along with the copy of the register, it is sufficient compliance with R. 5. [P 346 C 2]

(c) Berar Land Revenue Code, S. 160 (3) —Rules under, R. 4—Identification of assessment registers made in December is proper.

There is no provision in the Code or the rules framed thereunder, which prohibits the verification of assessment registers by the Revenue Officers after 30th November and declares such an action on their part as void, and so if verification is made in December, it is perfectly in order. [P 346 C 2]

(d) Berar Land Revenue Code, S. 175— Scope.

If the procedure adopted by the Revenue Officers acting under rules made under S. 160 (3) is irregular, person's remedy is by way of appeal to the higher revenue authorities and not by a civil suit. [P 346 C 2]

G. G. Hatvalne—for Applicant.

G. P. Dick—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This application for revision arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-applicant in the Small Cause Court, Akola, to recover Rs. 2 from the Secy. of State for India, the defendant-non-applicant, alleged to have been illegally recovered from him by the Tahsildar of Akola on 11th May 1927, in respect of Mahar Jaglia cess for the year 1926-1927.

The principal ground on which the right of suit was founded is contained in para. 1 of the plaint wherein it is stated that the assessment was ultra vires because no notice, as required to be given under the rules regulating the assessment and collection of cesses, was given to the plaintiff. These rules are framed by the Local Government under S. 160 (3), Berar Land Revenue Code, and published as Notification No. 1448-738-12, dated 17th May 1923. Rules 4 and 5 may usefully be reproduced below :

"(4) Between October 1st and November 30th, the Tahsildar with the assistance of the village officers will decide whether the persons entered in the register are liable to be assessed and in which class each person falls. (5) On completion of the assessment of each village the register shall be forwarded to the tahsil and a copy shall be posted in the chaudi accompanied by a notice informing assessees that an appeal may be presented to the Sub-Divisional Officer under the Berar Land Revenue Code not later than 45 days after the date on which the register was posted."

In para. 3 of his written statement the defendant stated that legal notice was given as mentioned in R. 5 above and that one was posted in the chaudi as required by the said rule. It was further contended by the defendant that the plaintiff's suit was barred under the provisions of Ss. 171 (i) (3) and 175, Berar Land Revenue Code.

Further oral pleadings were recorded by the lower Court, an idea of which could be gathered from the following issues :

" (1) Is there a Chaudi Alanda ? (2) Was a copy of the assessment register posted to the Chaudi ? (3) Was the assessment ultra vires as not being made before 30th November ? (4) Is the suit barred under Ss. 171 and 175, Berar Revenue Code ? "

All these issues were decided against the plaintiff and his claim was dismissed. He has therefore come up to this Court in revision In challenging the findings of the lower Court the learned pleader for the applicant has taken me through the entire evidence on record, upon a careful consideration whereof I have no hesitation in concurring with the lower Court in holding that there was a chaudi in the village alanda, though the building is also used for holding a school, and that a copy of the register of assessment together with a notice as required by R. 5, Assessment Rules, was posted in this building the very next date after the verification of the register was made by the Naib Tahsildar, Mr. Deshmukh, who has been examined as P. W. 1.

It was very vehemently contended by the learned pleader for the applicant that when R. 4 only speaks of a chaudi the posting of a copy of the assessment register and the notice in a building used both as a chaudi and a school is not in strict compliance with the requirements of the rule, and therefore the assessment was ultra vires I have been referred to no authority for this strange proposition. The word " chaudi " is admittedly nowhere defined, and if a chaudi could conveniently accommodate a school or vice versa, it would in my opinion none the less be regarded a chaudi, as was understood in the village alanda by the village officers, the patwari (D. W. 1), the patel (D. W. 2) and the village mahar (D. W. 3).

It was urged that R. 5 requires individual notices to be given to the assessees. I am unable to appreciate this contention in the face of the clear wording of the said rule. The effective words are that a copy (of the register) " shall be posted in the chaudi accompanied by a notice informing assessees that an appeal may be presented to the Sub-Divisional Officer. "

I, therefore, hold that if only the notice to all the assessees in the village is posted in the chaudi along with the copy of the register it is a sufficient compliance with R. 5, of the said rule. The rule in question does not provide for notices to be given to the assessees individually.

It was next contended that because the Naib Tahsildar did not admittedly verify the register between 1st October and 30th November, as required by R. 4, but did it on 4th December, therefore the whole basis of the assessment was illegal and the assessment itself ultra vires. There is also no force in this contention. The learned pleader for the applicant was unable to point out to me any provision in the Berar Land Revenue Code, or the rules made thereunder, which prohibits the verification of assessment registers by the revenue officers after 30th November and declares such an action on their part as void. In the absence of any prohibition to that effect I hold that the verification made by P. W. 1, Mr. Deshmukh, in the present case was perfectly in order.

But assuming that the procedure adopted by the Naib Tahsildar was irregular, it is rightly contended by the learned Government Advocate, who appeared for the non-applicant, that the plaintiff's remedy was by way of appeal to the higher revenue authorities and not by a civil suit. S. 175, Berar Land Revenue Code, is clear on this point. It says :

" No suit shall be brought in any civil Court against the Government on account of any act or omission of any Revenue Officer unless the plaintiff first proves that, previously to bringing his suit, he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as, within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present. "

It is admitted that the applicant failed to appeal to the revenue authorities against the irregularities complained of, and therefore S. 175 aforesaid bars the present suit. On this ground alone the plaintiff was out of Court but I have considered the case on the merits as well because of its importance and the vehemence with which it was argued. The application for revision, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 15.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 357-B of 1928, Decided on 29th July 1929, from order of 2nd Cl. Addl. Sub-Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 19th November 1928, in Civil Suit No. 1 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 8—Plaintiff claiming property by ownership as successor to person in mahantship and in his reply to defendant's written statement pleading that he was entitled, even if not owner, to its management, first claim cannot include second and case falls under O. 7, R. 8.

Where a plaintiff in his plaint claims a property by virtue of ownership as successor to a person in the mahantship of a temple and in his reply to the defendant's written statement he pleads that he is entitled, even if not the owner, to the management of the property, though he claims the same relief namely possession on both grounds and claims it in both cases by virtue of his title to be mahant but as in one case he claims that the mahant is the owner of the property and in the other that the mahant is entitled to possession as manager, the first claim cannot include the second and he has two distinct claims, founded on separate and distinct grounds and the case falls under O. 7, R. 8. [P 347 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 115—Issues framed not arising from plaint—Revision lies.

Where the Court under a mistake frames issues which do not arise from the plaint as drafted and rejects application to confine issues to the matters set up in the plaint, revision of the order is possible : 12 Bom. 617 and 42 Cal. 926, Rel. on. [P 347 C 2]

P. S. Kotval and W. R. Puranik—for Appellant.

M. R Bobde—for Respondent.

Order.—The plaintiff Shankerdas in his plaint claimed the property in dispute by virtue of ownership, as successor to one Thakurdas in the mahantship of the Balaji temple. In para. 14 of his written reply he pleaded that he was entitled, even if not the owner, to the management of the property. Subsequently he applied for permission to amend his plaint by adding a claim as manager. His application was allowed, but this Court in revision reversed the lower Court's order. In this Court it was pleaded on behalf of the plaintiff that the application, though called one for the amendment of the plaint, was not an application for amendment but only contained an explanation of his position as owner. This Court held that on that explanation by the plaintiff no amendment was necessary. This Court's order has clearly been misunderstood by the lower Court as holding that no amendment of the plaint was necessary, as the claim to be manager had been pleaded in the written reply. Issues have accordingly been framed on the view that the plaintiff's right to be manager can be considered without amendment of the plaint. An application was made for the issues to be confined to the plaintiff's original case based on ownership but that has been rejected and the defendants now apply for revision of the order rejecting it.

The question arises whether O. 7, R. 8, applies to the present case. That order runs as follows :

" Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated as far as may be separately and distinctly."

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that on both the grounds set up by him he is claiming the same relief ; but that does not take the case out of the purview of the rule. He is claiming the same relief possession, and he is claiming it in both cases by virtue of his title to be mahant ; but, in one case, he claims that the mahant is owner of the property, and, in the other, that the mahant is entitled to possession as manager. The first claim cannot be held to include the second ; and it seems to me that he has two distinct claims founded on separate and distinct grounds and he should have included his claim as manager separately and distinctly in the plaint. It is not enough for him to set up that claim in the pleadings. He had to obtain leave to amend the plaint and that leave has now been denied him. It follows that his claim to possession as manager does not arise in the suit and no issue should have been framed relating to that claim.

It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that under S. 115, Civil P. C. there can be no revision of the order. It has, however, been held in Venkubai v. Lakshman Venkoba (1) that in any case where the Court, having a mistaken and wrong apprehension of the questions at issue, proceeds to determine an issue which does not really arise in the case and bases its decision of the case on its determination of that issue, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. The same view has been taken in Sivaprasad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverji Bhoja (2) and I am of opinion that revision of the order is possible. In the latter of the two cases mentioned, it was an interlocutory order that was revised. Any issue relating to the claim to possession as manager must be struck out. The application for revision is allowed with costs. I fix Rs 30 as pleader's fee.

Samiullakhan—for Applicants.

Order.—This is an application for revision of a decree passed by the Small Cause Court, Sohagpur, in a suit brought on a bond, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit and directing them to pay Rs. 42-8-0 on account of surplus recoveries. The bond, on which the suit was brought, was executed on 16th January 1926 for Rs. 50. The rate of interest stipulated for was one anna per rupee per mensem and in default two annas per rupee per mensem. The suit was brought on 24th September 1928, less than three years after the execution of the bond. By that time the defendant had paid Rs. 122-8-0. The Judge of the Small Cause Court, acting on the Usurious Loans Act, reopened the transaction, found that the rate of interest stipulated for was exhorbitant and penal and, allowing interest at two per cent per annum, found that only Rs. 80 was due to the plaintiffs and gave a decree to the defendant for Rs. 42 8-0 paid in excess. It is objected that the defendant never asked for this relief, but it does not seem to me that any such claim is necessary; under S. 3 (1), Usurious Loans Act the Court has power to order repayment.

It is also objected that the plaintiffs were not allowed to show that the interest was not excessive. Reference has been made to Ruldu Mal Thakar Das v. Allah Ditta (1), where it is laid down that in deciding whether the rate of interest charged is excessive, the Court must have regard to the prevailing rate of interest on similar transactions in the locality, the security offered to the plaintiff, the nature of the dealings between the parties and the period during which the account was outstanding for less than three years. Periodical payments were being made by the debtor and though no security was offered and no evidence given as to the prevailing rate in the locality for loans of the description of the one now under consideration, I consider that the Small Cause Court was right in holding the rate to be excessive. Even if it were proved that it is the custom in the locality to charge interest at 75 per cent per annum and that 150 per cent. per annum in case of default, I should still hold the rate of interest to be obviously excessive. It has been pointed out that the debt was to be repaid in three months and if that payment had been made within that period, the interest would only have been Rs. 9. It does not, however, alter the fact that it would be interest at the rate of 75 per cent per annum. I decline to interfere in revision and I dismiss the application with costs.

Second Appeal No. 592 of 1927, Decided on 14th March 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 29th August 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 63 of 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 97—Appeal against preliminary decree after passing of final decree is competent.

Fida Hussain—for Appellant.

J. Sen—for Respondent.

Order.—A preliminary objection has been taken that this appeal is incompetent, because it is directed against a preliminary decree for sale and no appeal against the final decree, which was passed before this second appeal was filed, has been presented. In Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (1), it was held that when after a final decree had been passed, an appeal was preferred against the preliminary decree only, it was not open to the appellant to challenge the correctness of the preliminary decree without preferring an appeal against the final decree.

It was pointed out that if the appeal against the preliminary decree succeeded the final decree would still stand. A similar view has taken in Kulada Prosad v. Ramananda Pattanaik (2), in which Khirodamoyee Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (3), was distinguished on the grounds that it dealt with a case in which the appeal against the preliminary decree had been preferred before the final decree had been passed, and that it must be assumed that the subsequent proceedings were subject to the result of the appeal against the preliminary decree. The latter decision shows that the existence of a final decree, not appealed against, is hot an insuperable bar to an appeal against a preliminary decree being allowed. Another reason has, however, been given in Salim v. Hajira Bibi (4), in which it was held that, when a defendant appealed against an order of remand after the suit had been decided against him on the merits, his appeal was not maintainable, that reason being his consent to the proceedings subsequent to the remand, implied by his not appealing against the order of remand during those proceedings. But there is not in every case such an implied consent. Certainly, in the case with which I am dealing there is no implied consent to the proceedings after the final decree. The facts speak for themselves. The preliminary decree was passed on 21st September 1926 ; the first appeal was filed on 8th November 1926 ; while it was pending decision, on 25th April 1927 application for a final decree was made but time was granted on the application of the present appellant till the first appeal was decided ; the appeal was decided ; that appeal was decided on 29th August 1927 ; and the final decree was passed on 6th September 1927.

The decision in Salim v. Hajira Bibi (4) would also distinguish between the cases in which the appeal against the preliminary decree or order was filed before the final decree or order was passed and those in which it was not. No such distinction, however, has been made in Lakshmi v. Maru Devi (5) and Ramien v. Veerapaudayan (6) in which it has been held that it is competent to a party to prefer an appeal against an order of remand or a preliminary decree, although before the appeal is presented the final decree has been passed, because with the reversal of the earlier order or decree, the final decree which depends on it for its validity ipso facto ceases to have any force. A similar view has been taken in Kanhaiya Lal v. Tirbeni Sahai (7), which dealt with a case in which the final decree was subsequent to the appeal against the preliminary decree ; but Chamier, J., remarked that the passing of a final decree should not be a bar either to the institution or to the hearing of an appeal against the preliminary decree. In this matter I prefer to follow

Judgment.—Three persons, Shamlal Lodhi, Nilkanth Lodhi and Mantya Mahar hereinafter to be referred in this judgment as the first, second and third appellant respectively, have been convicted by Mr. V. A. Bambawale, Magistrate, First Class, Bhandara, having powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., of an offence under S. 307, I P. C, read with S. 34, ibid and sentenced respectively to 7, 4 and 3 years rigorous imprisonment.

All the aforesaid convicts have preferred appeals against their convictions and these are registered in this Court as Criminal Appeals Nos. 85, 67 and 86 of 1929. This judgment will govern the disposal of all the three appeals.

The case for the prosecution briefly is that on the night of 22nd December last the complainant Motia Mahar (P.W. 10) had gone, after the evening meal, to sleep in a hut in his khala, that while he was there sitting by the fire which he had lit before retiring, all the three appellants came there and had a chat and smoke with him Appellant 1 Shamlal had a sword (Art D) with him while appellant Nilkanth was armed with a pharsa and appellant 3 Mantya had carried a tutari (Art. A) While the others were engaged in conversation the appellant Shamlal lay down in the hut of the complainant and went to sleep and was not disturbed when the other two appellants parted to go to their khalas. The complainant also then lay down beside appellant 1 in the hut, but about midnight he was awakened on account of a feeling of pain in the region of his stomach. He then found that appellant 1 Shamlal had given him a thrust with the sword which he grappled and in the struggle that followed Shamlal left the sword and ran away. The complainant Motia further stated that with the sword in his hand he then ran after Shamlal for some distance, apparently to catch him but the latter ran away. When Motia came out of his hut following Shamlal he stated that he had seen the other two appellants standing outside the hut and they also ran away.

The shouts of the complainant for help were heard by his brother Jaitram (P.W. 2), who soon came to the hut, and later on Jagannath (P.W. 3) and Kanhai (P.W. 4) also arrived on the scene. Jagannath then went to call Bapu (P.W. 11) from the neighbouring village, and on his arrival at the scene of the crime with other Mahars the complainant's wound was dressed up and he was removed to the village on a cot. It is the prosecution story that soon after the arrival of all the aforesaid witnesses at the hut the complainant Motia gave out the names of all the three appellants and the part each had taken in the commission of the crime

The first information report of the offence recorded in Ex. P-1 was made to the Police Station House at Amgaon by Sheoram (P.W. 5) at 8 a. m on 23rd December last, and before the Sub-Inspector (P.W. 1) arrived on the scene another report, Ex. P-11, was scribed by Chandanlal (P W. 6) in the Kotwar's book, On his arrival the Sub-Inspector (P.W. 1) also recorded a statement of the complainant Motia at 11 a. m the same day as he found his condition rather serious this is Ex. P-2. Another statement of Motia was recorded by Mr. Babukhan, Second Class Magistrate, Gondia, at 9-15 p. m. on 23rd December.

The motive for the crime is alleged to be a longstanding dispute between the complainant Motia and his brother Jaitram (P.W. 2) on the one hand and the first two appellants on the other over a field which is now recorded as the occupancy holding of Jaitram. It is also alleged that about three months prior to the present incident a quarrel took place between Jaitram (P.W. 2) and the appellant Nilkanth on account of the former having taken some water out of the tank belonging to Jit Singh the brother of the appellant Nilkanth when a threat was given by this appellant to the complainant and his brother.

It is undoubtedly a fact that a most cowardly and a brutal attack was made on the life of Motia on the night in question but it is to be ascertained if the evidence on record connects the appellants with this crime. In my opinion there is no such evidence forthcoming.

Messrs Kedar and Razak appeared for the second and third appellants respectively, while the learned Government Advocate representated the Crown at the hearing of these appeals in this Court. The first appellant was unrepresented! It may at the outset be remarked that the evidence of Motia (P.W. 10) so far as it relates to the visit of all the appellants on the night in question stands without any corroboration. None of the other witnesses examined for the prosecution speaks of having seen any of the appellants at or near about the khala of the complainant on the night of 22nd December last, nor is there an iota of evidence to support that the three appellants had conspired together to commit the crime, nor has any connexion between the appellants inter se been established. The learned trying Magistrate seems to have assumed that the appellant Mantya was a servant of the appellant Nilkant. No evidence was pointed out to me in the course of arguments to establish this point. The theory of the motive for the crime alleged by the prosecution appears to be too farfetched. Even on his own admission the dispute over the field between Jaitram (P W. 2) and appellant 1 had come to an end some 4 or 5 years ago when Gokul purchased the village. The complainant himself also admits that Shamlal had since Ashadh last become so friendly that:

"he used to come to me with a sword and also sleep near me with a sword."

It is thus impossible to hold upon this evidence that the motive for the crime was the dispute over the field.

The story of the dispute over the taking of the water from the tank belonging to Jit Singh cannot also furnish any motive for the dastardly crime assuming the story to be true. Jaitram (P.W. 2) admits that the appellant Nilkanth has got no right over this tank and it is therefore not clear that he should have protested against the use of the water by the witness and threatened him as alleged. It is also to be noted that no mention of this quarrel was made to the police during the course of the investigation or in any of the documents, Exs. P-1, P-2 and P-11, as furnishing any cause for the alleged cowardly assault by the appellants.

There are obviously several other difficulties in the way of the prosecution. The case appears to have been apparently mishandled by the police and the learned trying Magistrate seems to have bestowed very little attention to the solution of these difficulties. (The judgment then discussed evidence regarding the night attack and the sword (Ex. D) and concluded that there is no trustworthy evidence on the record to identify Art. D as belonging to the appellant Nilkant). Moreover it is apparent that if this sword was not the one that was used by the appellant to inflict an injury upon Motia as has been found by me, it is a matter of little consequence if the Art. D belongs or does not belong to the appellant Nilkant.

A great deal of unnecessary stress has been laid by the learned trying Magistrate on the fact that some abrasions were found on the persons of the first two appellants. In the absence of any legal evidence on the part of the prosecution the Magistrate was wrong in assuming, as he has evidently done, that the injuries were caused to these appellants in the course of their alleged flight from the scene of the crime. It is an elementary proposition of law that unless an incriminating circumstance is proved by the prosecution to exist against an accused person he should not be called upon to explain away its existence. Even the investigating officer (P. W. 1) has not in his evidence given any explanation as to why in the absence of any evidence connecting these injuries with the alleged flight of these two appellants he got the two appellants medically examined and placed upon the record an irrelevant piece of evidence in the shape of medical reports, Exs. P-7 and P-10, for the consideration of the Court. These remarks apply equally to the production of the Loi (Art. E). There is no evidence placed upon the record to prove that this Loi was used by the appellant Shamlal on the night in question so that the minute bloodstains detected in it would be held to be an incriminating piece of evidence against this appellant.

Another piece of inadmissible evidence through the mouth of Jodhi (P. W. 7) in the shape of certain statements made by Shamlal while in police custody has been introduced in the case and acted upon by the learned Magistrate. This is what Jodhi has stated :

"On Monday at mahatni time the S. I. Police took us and the accused Shamlal to the khala of Motia. Daroga, Circle Saheb, Patwari, Umedi Mahajan and one Kanhai who is not a witness (sic). S. I. Police asked Shamlal to show the places and he showed the place where he was sleeping, where Motia was sleeping and was stabbed and where others were standing. Shamlal also showed the place where he fell down. Patwari saw all these places and took measurements."

In the first instance neither the Sub-Inspector (P. W. 1) nor the witness Jodhi tells us the circumstances under which the appellant Shamlal came to take the whole of investigating staff of police officers round the scene of offence and admitted before them his own guilt by showing them the different places marked out in the map Ex. P-6 prepared by Tikaram Patwari (P. W. 8). These places were admittedly known to the complainant Motia Maharfrom whom in the ordinary course the investigating officer must have ascertained them, and it is not explained why it was found necessary to have the discovery of these places made through appellant 1, unless it be for the purpose of using his own confessions against himself and to bring the case within the purview of S. 27, Evidence Act.

In his evidence the Sub-Inspector (P. W. 1) said that the appellant Shamlal took him to the spot :

" and showed the spot and the different places"

while Jodhi (P. W. 7) stated that :

"the Sub-Inspector, Police took us and the accused Shamlal to the khala of Motia,"

that

"the Sub-Inspector Police asked Shamlal to show the places" and the latter showed them. In this conflict of evidence on the point if the offer of the appellant Shamlal to show the several places was voluntary or enforced and in the absence of the knowledge of the circumstances preceding it and further having regard to the case with which evidence of this sort can be made available, I am not prepared to hold that the appellant Shamlal did point out the several places and make the incriminating statements imputed to him in supplying the descriptions of the several places as given in the map Ex.P-6.

But assuming that this evidence is true I am further of opinion that these incriminating admissions of the appellant Shamlal under the admitted circumstances in which they were made are inadmissible in evidence in this case under S. 26, Evidence Act.

It is clear that these incriminating admissions embodied in the description of the several places as contained in the explanatory notes on the map, Ex. P-6, cannot possibly come within the purview of S 27, Evidence Act. They cannot possibly be said to have led to the discovery of the several places pointed out in the said map because these were already known to the complainant Motia and his brother and could not be said to have been "discovered" in consequence of the said admissions within the meaning of the said section. As laid down in the case reported as Queen-Empress v. Commer Sahib (1) :

"the test is: was the fact discovered by reason of the information, and how much of the information was the immediate cause of the fact discovered, and as such a relevant fact?"

Shamlal is also alleged to have shown the place where he fell down, marked No. 4 in Ex. P-6. Jodhi does not tell us if Shamlal also told the assemblage the circumstances under which or the day and the time on which he fell down at the particular place shown in the map and therefore assuming that the admission of Shamlal contained in the sentence just quoted is admissible and true, it fails to establish (1) that he fell down on the night of 22nd December last in the course of his alleged flight from the scene of the offence after being pursued by Motia and (2) that the injuries found on his person were the result of that fall.

The bald evidence of the type introduced through the mouth of Jodhi to prove the confessions of an accused under cover of S 27, Evidence Act, ought to receive, to say the least of it, very little credence by the Court, more especially, when the accused stand charged with such a grave offence as attempt to murder, and particularly, when more direct evidence of the complainant to prove the same points was already available to the prosecution and which they have not taken care to produce before the Court. It may be observed that Motia (P. W. 10) has not at all been questioned on the several points noted in Ex. P-6

The last point that remains to be decided is the admissibility or otherwise of the statement volunteered by the appellant Mantya to the effect that when he arrived on the scene of the offence after hearing the cry of Motia he noticed Shamlal in the act of assaulting the complainant. This statement has been used by the learned trying Magistrate against the appellant Shamlal. Suffice it to say that under S. 30, Evidence Act, this statement could not be used against Shamlal because it was self-exculpatory.

Upon a careful and anxious consideration of the materials on the record and the probabilities of the case my conclusion therefore is that the charge as laid cannot be brought home to any of the appellants. I accordingly allow all the appeals and setting aside the convictions of the appellants order them to be set at liberty.

G. V Deshmukh—for Appellant.

Judgment.—In this case I have to deal with a claim to pre-emption under the Berar Land Revenue Code of 1896. Both the lower Courts have held, on the authority of Maidabi v. Tejabai (1), that there is no right of pre-emption in the case of an auction sale by the Official Receiver in an insolvency case. In Maidabi v. Tejaba (1), it is held that there is no right of pre-emption when the interest of a co-occupant in a survey number in Berar is sold by auction in pursuance of a mortgage decree for sale of the mortgaged property; but it does not follow that a sale by the Official Receiver stands on the same footing as that of a sale in execution of a decree. It has been held in Entazuddi Sheikh v. Ram Krishna Banik (2), that sales by the receiver are really sales by the owner and may be either by public auction or by private treaty; and that the procedure governing sales in execution of a decree under the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to them. I am not impressed by the reasons given in Maidabi v. Tejabai (1), for holding that no right of pre-emption arises when the sale is held in execution of a decree. The real reason is given in the Privy Council decision in Sheobaran Singh v. Kulsum-un-nissa (3), where the following passage occurs:

"It was pointed out that a sale in execution of a decree transferred the property free from a claim of pre-emption. The reason is simple. The Civil Procedure Code arranging for sale under a decree mentions and deals with rights of pre-emption and gives those who hold them certain rights."

It is argued, however, that this case must be decided with reference to the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code 1896, and that those provisions makes the Privy Council decision inapplicable to the present case. It is first pointed out that S. 205 only gives a right of pre-emption when the interest of a co-occupant in a survey number is transferred and it is argued from this that the section cannot apply to an auction sale which is not to a specified person. This argument is based upon a misreading of the section, as the words " in favour of a specified person " can only refer to the case of relinquishment.

" by sale, foreclosure of mortgage or relinquishment in favour of a specified person for valuable consideration ";

Reference has next been made to S. 206, sub-S. (2), in which it is laid down that notice to be given to the co-occupants who have the right of pre-emption shall be given through the Tahsildar and shall be deemed to have been sufficiently served if it be posted at the chauri or some other public place and proclaimed by beat of drum in the village in which the survey number is situated. It is assumed that the Official Receiver in holding a sale follows the procedure laid down for sales in execution of a decree; but he is not required to do so and there is no evidence in the present case that he did so. Very probably he did, but it cannot be assumed; and without evidence on the point I cannot accept the plea, now raised for the first time, that the Official Receiver's proclamation of sale amounted to notice under S. 206, Berar Land Revenue Code.

Finally it is argued that no due notice could be given because S. 206, sub-S. (1), requires the vendor to specify in the notice the price at which he is willing to sell and no notice can be specified in the case of an auction sale. This is one of the grounds put forward in Maidabi v. Tejabai (1), for holding that there is no right of pre-emption, when property is sold in execution of a decree; but, as I have already stated, it does not appeal to me, and I consider in view of what is contained in Sheobaran Singh v. Kulsum-un-nissa (3) that it is not the real ground for the view stated. I see no reason to hold that that Privy Council decision does not apply to the present case.

It is pointed out by their Lordships that, if there is no right of pre-emption when the property is sold by the Official Receiver, it means that the insolvency of the owner renders his property more valuable in the hands of the Official Receiver than it was in his own. The argument now put forward would go further than that and would mean that the owner of an interest in a survey number in Berar could defeat his co-occupants' right to pre-empt by disposing of his property by auction. I am not impressed with the difficulty of intimating to the co-occupants the price at which it is proposed to sell. The Official Receiver or the owner, if he decides to auction the property, can and should hold the sale subject to the right of the co-occupants to pre-empt and before confirming the sale to the highest bidder, he can and should offer the property to the co-occupants at the figure bid. I am satisfied that the admitted right of the appellant to pre-empt has not been taken away by the fact that the property was sold in an auction by the Official Receiver. The decree of the trial Court, which was upheld by the lower appellate Court, is set aside and the appellant will be given a decree entitling him to pre-empt for the price at which the property was sold in the auction. The respondent will bear the costs of the appellant throughout. The purchase money shall be paid within three months.

M. B. Niyogi—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This appeal arose from a suit on a mortgage for Rs. 3,500. Under the rule of damdupat the amount recoverable at the time of the decree was only Rs. 7,000 on the day on which the suit was filed. The lower Court has allowed interest from the date of suit to the date fixed for payment by the preliminary decree and the only question that I have to decide in appeal is whether the lower Court was right in doing so. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the rule of damdupat prevents the interest included in the sum payable on the dies datus from exceeding the principal. I have been referred to a decision of this Court in Narayan v. Khiwaraj (1), in which it has been held that the rule of damdupat applies until the matter is removed from the domain of contract, that is, until the date fixed by the Court in the preliminary decree for sale. The question, however, does not appear to have been really considered as it is recorded that the counsel for the respondents admitted that the fourth ground of appeal must succeed, that ground being that no interest should have been allowed from the date of suit to the date of the decree, as the rule of damdupat covers this period. In Narain v. Nathmal (2) it has been held that the rule of damdupat applies only so long as the relation of creditor and debtor exists but not when the contractual relation has come to an end by reason of the decree; and the view may be inferred that the rule does apply until a decree is passed which would in effect mean up to the date fixed for payment. But that view has not been expressed and it is to be noted that in that case interest was actually allowed from the date of suit. Similarly, in Nanda Lal Roy v. Dhirendra Nath (3) all that was held was that the rule of damdupat does not apply to the interest accruing after the date fixed for redemption; and it was not laid down affirmatively that the rule does apply to the period between the date of the suit and the date fixed for redemption.

Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (4) has been cited by the appellant. It is a Privy Council decision which does not deal with the rule of damdupat, but reliance is placed upon the following passage at p. 161:

"In the present case, their Lordships have no hesitation in expressing their concurrence with the High Court of Calcutta, not only in allowing interest after the fixed day, but also in allowing interest at the Court rate and not at the mortgage rate. They think that the scheme and intention of the Transfer of Property Act was that a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal, interest and costs due on a fixed day and that after the expiration of that day, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter should pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment, and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree."

It is argued that the general account to be taken once for all must be governed by the rule of damdupat, which must fix the interest to be included in the aggregate amount, to be stated in the decree, as due on a fixed day. This argument, it seems to me, ignores the point that the matter of interest has passed from the domain of contract once the rule of damdupat becomes applicable. The remarks made by their Lordships of the Privy Council cannot be applied to a case which is essentially different from the one they were considering by reason of the applicability of the rule of damdupat. In Hiralal Ichhalal v. Narsilal Chaturbhujdas (5), in which their Lordships were dealing with a suit for redemption, it was admitted that the trial Court had discretion to allow interest between the date of suit and the actual date of redemption, although the rule of damdupat applied and the interest to be allowed up to the date of suit was limited to an amount equal to the capital sum. Again in Dhondshet v. Ravji (6) it has been definitely held that the discretionary power as to awarding interest conferred on the Courts by S. 209, Civil P. C., 1882, (corresponding to S. 34 of the present Code) may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat, even in a suit brought on a mortgage. That view has also been taken by a Judge of this Court in Motilal Ramlal v. Reni (7).

It seem to me that the view taken in the last three cases cited is the correct view. Where the rule of damdupat applies, the contractual obligation, as regards interest, comes to an end as soon as the maximum limit of interest is reached and it is not correct to say that the contractual obligation remains until a decree is passed. When that obligation has come to an end before the suit is filed, the Court has discretion to award interest from the date of suit over and above the amount of interest allowed by the rule.

As I hold that the lower Court had discretion to make the order regarding interest that it has made, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 245 of 1929, Decided on 25th September 1929, from order of 2nd Class 2nd Sub-Judge, Wardha, D/- 21st March 1929, in Misc. Judl. Case No. 2 of 1929.

Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 29—N obtaining decree against K and attaching according to A, A's property in execution—K adjudged insolvent during pendency of A's ojection to attachment — Objection dismissed for want of jurisdiction—Order dismissing objection is incorrect—Such order can be revised though remedy is open under O. 21, R. 63—Civil, P. N obtained a decree against K and in execution thereof attached according to A, A's property. During pendency of A's objection to attachment K was adjudged insolvent. The Court dismissed the objection holding that its jurisdiction had ceased.

Held : that in view of S. 29 the order dismissing objection was incorrect.

Held further : that though A had a remedy by way of suit under O. 21, R. 63, that rule is not an inflexible one and might be departed from in special cases and that the order could be revised. [P 357 C 1]

W. H. Dhabe—for Applicant.

D. T. Mangalmurti—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—Non-applicant 1 had obtained a decree against non-applicant 2 and in execution thereof attached, according to the applicant, the applicant's property. Non-applicant 2 was adjudged insolvent during pendency of the applicant's objection to the attachment. The lower Court then held that its jurisdiction had ceased and dismissed the objection. The applicant seeks revision of the lower Court's order.

It is clear that the lower Court's order is incorrect. Under S. 29, Prov. Ins. Act, the Court had only two alternative courses to select from and could only stay the proceedings or allow them to continue on terms. It is urged, however, that, in accordance with the practice of this Court and other High Courts, there should be no revision, because the applicant has a remedy by way of suit under O. 21 R. 63. But the rule is not an inflexible one, and may be departed from in special cases. The lower Court in the present case has, without any jurisdiction to do so, deprived the applicant of his right to have his claim decided in objection proceedings, and there has been no default or neglect on his part requiring condonation. I consider that he should not be at this stage forced into bringing a suit. I set aside the order of the lower Court which will now decide which of the two alternative courses permitted by S. 29 should be followed. Non-applicant 1 will bear the applicant's costs. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 15.

M. R. Bobde—for Appellant.

W. R. Puranik—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal against the order passed by Additional District Judge, Harda, on 2nd March 1929. The appellant Kashinath Yeshwant owed money to the Harda Central Bank, and as he was not paying it up, the dispute between him and the Bank was referred to the Registrar Co-operative Societies, who gave an award on 1st September 1928. Decree-holder filed an application for the execution of the award which has the force of a decree on 3rd September 1928, and judgment debtor's immovable property was attached. After this, notice was issued to the judgment-debtor, to execute the mortgage-deed, as ordered by the Registrar, and the judgment-debtor filed written statements on 10th November 1928 and 16th February 1929. The following issue was framed:

"Whether the Court can entertain objections to the validity of the award raised by judgment-debtor."

The finding was recorded in the following words:

"I would accordingly hold that this Court cannot entertain objections to the validity of the award."

First ground in the memorandum of appeal runs as follows:

"The lower Court ought to have held that the award of the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies in so far as it directs the appellant to execute a mortgage-deed for money due by him, was outside the power of the Registrar, being thus ultra vires and unenforceable."

The appellant had raised this objection in para. (3) (iii) of his written statement dated 10th November 1928, but the learned Judge has not referred to it, in his order. The Court framed a general issue and recorded a finding but failed to consider this objection, about the jurisdiction of the Registrar to pass an award, which contained the following direction:

"I also order that in case the full sum of Rs. 10,025-10-0 with interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum from 1st September 1928 to the date of realization, be not collected from Pandit Kashinath Yeshwant forthwith, he shall execute a mortgage over his immovable property of the minimum market value of Rs. 20,000 at once, as security."

It seems to us that the authority of the executing Court to question the validity of the decree will depend on the facts and circumstances of the particular case under consideration, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this matter. The limits within which an executing Court can question the validity of a decree were pointed out by the Full Bench of Calcutta High Court in Gora Chand Haldar v. Prafulla Kumar Roy (1) in which it was held :

" where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction, whether pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment-debtor's person, to make the decree the executing Court was entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction. "

The learned advocate for the respondent cited Lahore Bank v. Ghulam Jilani (2), Amrit Lal v. Jagat Chandra (3) and Babhutmal v. Madhoji (A. I. R. 1927 Nagpur 216). In Lahore Bank v. Ghulam Jilani (2) Shadi Lal, C. J., and LeRossignol, J., held that the broad and clear rule was that an executing Court had no jurisdiction to criticise or go behind the decree; all that concerns it is the execution of it. In that case the executing Court had refused action on the gound that the minor had not been represented before the liquidation Court. The objection in this case related to the procedure of the Court which issued the decree and not to the question of jurisdiction. Amrit Lal Seal v. Jagat Chandra Thakur (3) and Babhutmal v. Madhoji (A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 216) were cases in which mortgage decrees were passed, and the decrees were attacked in execution proceedings on the ground that the property ordered to be sold was not legally saleable, and this attack upon the legality of the decree was not allowed. In none of these cases the question of jurisdiction was raised. We are of opinion that the executing Court, within certain limits can question the validity of a decree where the question of jurisdiction is involved and as this objection was not considered by the trial Court, the case is sent back to the Additional District Judge, Harda, to record clear and definite statements on the question of jurisdiction and to decide the following point :

" Whether the Registrar had jurisdiction to pass the order mentioned in the last paragraph of the award and as to whether that order can be challenged in the execution proceedings. "

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 907=53 Cal. 166 (F. B.).
(2) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 448=5 Lah. 54.
(3) A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 202=4 Pat. 696.

The next point pressed is that the debtor was the firm " Onkardas Narayandas " and that the award must be taken as being against the firm and not against the appellant. The award is quite clear on the point, that the debtor is the appellant Kashinath Yeshwant and the executing Court, cannot consider this question. Lastly, it is urged that the execution proceedings are in violation of Ss. 51, 52 and 53, Provl. Insol. Act and therefore, cannot be entertained. This objection was about the insolvency petition filed against the firm and not against the appellant. The award is against the appellant not against the firm. The objection is futile. As the appeal succeeds on a point which was not considered by the Court below and as the judgment of the Court below is upheld on the other points raised in the appeal, we order that the costs of this appeal should be borne by the parties as incurred.

First Appeal No. 67-B of 1924, Decided on 24th September 1929, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 9th September 1924, in Civil Suit No. 21 of 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 22, R. 9—Suit for joint possession decreed without separately defining shares of plaintiffs—Appeal against decree abating against one plaintiff—Appeal cannot proceed in absence of heirs of dead plaintiff and is incompetent.

A suit was brought for joint possession and a joint decree in plaintiffs' favour was passed without separately defining the shares of the various plaintiffs. An appeal was preferred against the decree and it abated as against one of the plaintiffs.

Held : that if a decree was passed in favour of appellant, there would be two conflicting decrees and would lead to absurd results and that the appeal could not proceed in the absence of the heirs of the dead plaintiff and was incompetent : *A. Judgment.—This appeal and appeal No. 72-B of 1924 are connected appeals, arising from the same judgment and decree dated 13th September 1924, passed by Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Suit No. 21 of 1923 and, therefore, this judgment will govern both the appeals. This suit was filed on 12th January 1923 by Walla Bai, Narayan and Maroti for recovery of Arjun's property, which was alienated by his widows. Walla Bai claimed the property as Arjun's daughter and Narayan and Maroti were added as co-plaintiffs, as they had purchased a portion of the undivided property from Walla Bai. After the institution of the suit Walla Bai sold the remaining portion of the property to Narayan and Maroti, who became the sole plaintiffs in this suit and the name of Walla Bai was removed from the record on 3rd September 1924. The appellants in First Appeal No. 67-B of 1924 are Laxmanlal, Kunjilal, Laxman and Zibal, and they were defendants 7, 8, 9 and 10 in the suit. The decree passed against them is contained in paras. (6) and (7) of the decree, which runs as follows :

"6. That defendants 7 and 8 shall put plaintiffs in possession of S. No. 67 of mouza Rajura and 2/3 of the house as described in the schedule annexed, shall pay Rs. 500 as mesne profits for the three years, shall pay future mesne profits till the date of recovery of possession of the field by the plaintiffs and shall pay 1/10 of the aggregate costs of the suit viz., Rs. 140."

"7. That defendants 9 and 10 shall put plaintiffs in possession of the remaining 1/3rd of the house as described in the schedule annexed and shall pay 1/20 of the aggregate costs Rs. 70 to the plaintiffs."

The appellant in First Appeal No. 72-B of 1924 is Mt. Kashi Bai, and she was defendant 3 in the suit. Para. (3) of the decree relates to the claim decreed against her. It runs as follows :

"3. That defendant 3 do put the plaintiffs in possession of the following fields at mouza Rajura Taluq Chandur.

and shall pay Rs. 1900 as mesne profits for the 3 years (1920-23) and shall pay future mesne profits till the date of recovering possession of the aforesaid fields and shall also pay $\frac{1}{2}$ of plaintiffs' aggregate costs viz. Rs. 350."

After the filing of the appeals the respondent Maroti died at mouza Rajura on 12th May 1926, and the appellants filed applications to bring the legal representatives of the deceased respondent on record. The appeal abated on 12th August 1926 as against Maroti and as sufficient cause was not shown for setting aside the abatement, the applications were dismissed on 3rd April 1929.

The learned pleader for the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the appeal could not proceed against the other respondent Narayan in the absence of the dead co-respondent or his duly substituted representative. He contends that as the suit was one for joint possession by the plaintiffs and was decreed as such, the appeal is incompetent in the absence of one of the respondents. In support of his contention he referred to Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (1), Midnapur Zamindary Co. Ltd., v. Amulya Nath Roy (2), Wajid Ali Khan v. Puran Singh (3) and Narain Das v. Sheo Din (4). The learned counsel for the appellants argued that Narayan and Maroti were tenants in common and not joint tenants, that their interest was separate and could be separated, and, therefore, Maroti or his legal representative were not necessary parties to the appeal, and he cited Shankarbhai Manorbhai v. Motilal Ramdas (5). In the last mentioned case the plaintiffs were uncle and nephew and claimed the land as tenants-in-common. It was conceded in that judgment, that a difficulty may arise when the abatement is not set aside under R. 9, and the relief which the Court can grant as against the other respondents in appeal is not likely to be effective, and it was pointed out, that difficulty must depend largely upon the nature of the suit and the possible relief that can be granted in appeal, under the circumstances of the particular case. The facts of that case and the case under consideration are not analogous and, therefore, the law laid down in it is not of universal application and should not apply to this case. In this case the shares of the respondents have not been separately defined, and a joint decree in their favour was passed. As pointed out in Midnapur Zamindary Co Ltd. v. Amulya Nath Roy (2), at p. 755 (of 53 Cal.) if a decree in favour of the appellants, setting aside the decree of the Court below, so far as the respondent on record is passed, such a decree would be incapable of execution, because the decree in favour of the heirs of the dead respondent stands, and under that decree, they are entitled to possession. If a decree in favour of the appellants is passed, there will be two conflicting decrees in existence, and will lead to absurd results. The plaintiffs sued for joint possession and obtained a decree. Under these circumstances, the appeals cannot proceed in the absence of the heirs of the dead respondent, and are incompetent, and must be dismissed. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Yenka Khatik—Accused.

Criminal Revn. No. 298 of 1929, Decided on 25th September 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Nagpur, on 5th August 1929.

C. P. Municipal Act, S. 199—Words "every day after the first" must be interpreted as every day after first day to which conviction relates.

The words "every day after the first" must be interpreted as every day after the first to which the conviction relates. If a person has been committing a breach of a bye-law since 8th July 1928, he can be properly fined Rs. 50 on 21st November 1928. It is misreading S. 199 to think that he should be fined Rs. 5 only on 21st November 1928 because he was on that date continuing the offence. [P 360 C 2]

Samiulla Khan—for Accused.

Order.—Yenka was convicted under the provisions of S. 199, C. P. Municipalities Act, for disobedience to a bye-law. He was fined Rs. 50 for his breach of the bye-law on 21st November 1928 and Rs. 5 for the subsequent days in which he persisted in the breach. The learned Sessions Judge has made a report under S. 433, Criminal P. C, as in his opinion Yenka should only have been fined Rs. 5 for his offence on 21st November 1928 The learned Sessions Judge states that Yenka had been committing the breach since 8th July 1928 and was only continuing the offence on 21st November 1928. Yenka had been convicted and fined for his disobedience during the period 9th July 1928 to 20th Nov. 1928.

In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge has misread S. 199, Municipal Act. S. 199 clearly states that disobedience of a lawful direction shall be punishable by fine which may extend to Rs. 50. The words :

"and, in the case of a continuing breach, with further fine which may extend to five rupees for every day after the first during which the breach is proved to have been persisted in,"

do not detract from this provision. "Every day after the first" then must be interpreted as every day after the first day to which the conviction relates. If it were interpreted otherwise, the result would be that Yenka could have been fined Rs. 5 for 21st November 1928 and the subsequent days in addition to the fine of Rs 50 inflicted in accordance with the preceding provision of the section. There is then no necessity for interferance.

Order.—The order in this criminal revision will govern the disposal of Criminal Revision No. 320 of 1929 (Dinbandhu v. Kallu). On 6th September 1928 Kallu made a complaint that a petty assault had been committed seven months earlier. The Magistrate heard all the witnesses produced by the complainant and states clearly that he disbelieves them. He gives some substantial reasons such as that the complainant has not told a consistent story. He then made a reference to the documents filed by the defence, but remarked that it was not necessary for him to do so as he had found no corroborative evidence to support the prosecution. He discharged the accused saying that the prosecution had failed to establish the case.

In revision the learned Sessions Judge stated that the Magistrate should not have taken help of the documents filed by the accused in order to decide whether a particular witness was reliable or not. He also remarked that too great stress should not be laid on discrepancies and exaggerations and directed further enquiry into the complaint. In my opinion it was improper to direct further enquiry. The trying Magistrate had considered all the evidence produced and had come to the conclusion, apart from the documents, that that evidence did not make out a prima facie case. The learned Sessions Judge has not dealt with the reasons given for this conclusion. Where a Magistrate completes an enquiry and discharges the accused, further enquiry should not be ordered except for very strong reasons. I therefore set aside the order directing further enquiry.

W. R. Puranik—for Appellant.

M. B. Niyogi—for Respondent.

Judgment. — As the judgment appealed against does not sufficiently mention the facts, it is necessary to give the same in some detail here. In Civil Suit No. 127 of 1918 a preliminary decree for foreclosure was obtained by two plaintiffs, Godawari and Sunderbai, against four defendants, (1) Babu, (2) Lalsingh, (3), Babusingh and (4) Bhagwandas, in the Court of 2nd Subordinate Judge, Akola, on 8th September 1919. Various appeals were preferred later, the last of which was decided by this Court on 17th December 1924, as Second Appeal No. 188-B of 1923. The preliminary decree, as ultimately modified by this Court, was made absolute on 27th March 1926, ex parte the defendants and possession of the mortgage property was obtained by the plaintiffs decree-holders on 24th June 1927, and the decree was struck off as fully satisfied on 30th July 1927.

On 7th April 1926, defendant 3, Babusingh applied to the lower Court for setting aside the ex parte decree absolute for various reasons given in the application which was registered as Misc. Case No. 29 of 1926. On 23rd April 1926, defendant 4, Bhagwandas, made a similar application and this was registered as Misc. Case No. 35 of 1926. Both these cases were contested by the plaintiffs decree-holders and separate orders rejecting the applications were passed by the lower Court on 9th April 1927. Defendant 3, Babusingh, did not prefer any appeal against the adverse order passed against him in Misc. Case No. 29 of 1926.

Against the order passed in Misc. Case No. 35 of 1926 defendant 4, Bhagwandas filed an appeal in the Court of the 2nd Additional District Judge, Akola (Misc. Appeal No. 2 of 1927) making the plaintiffs as the first two respondents and defendants 1 2 ,and 3 as respondents 3, 4 and 5 respectively. On 19th November 1927, defendant 3 as respondent 5 in the aforesaid appeal filed cross-objections to what he styled as "the final decree for foreclosure passed in this case" on various grounds one of which was that the lower Court should not have passed an ex parte decree absolute when notices were not properly served upon the defendants. On the date of the hearing of the appeal on 1st December 1927, the defendant 4, Bhagwandas, who was the sole appellant through his pleader, withdrew his appeal and in spite of the protest of defendant 3, Babusingh, respondent 4, that his cross-objection should be heard and decided on merits, the lower appellate Court overruled him on the ground that the so-called cross-objections were not maintainable because they were in the nature of an appeal against the order passed in Misc. Case No. 29 of 1926 which was not appealed against. It is against this last order of the lower appellate Court that the present second appeal is filed. The only question for decision is whether the cross-objections filed by the present appellant in the lower appellate Court were in order and if so whether the lower appellate Court was justified in refusing to dispose of them on merits.

Order 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., lays down that any respondent though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below but take cross-objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal. Applying the principle of this rule to the case of the appellant, it is clear that he had no right whatsoever to take any cross-objection to the order passed in Misc. Case No. 35 of 1926 which was the subject matter of Misc. Appeal No. 2 of 1927 in the lower appellate Court. It is conceded by the learned pleader for the appellant that he could not have preferred any independent appeal against the said order, as nothing was decided therein against him. That being the case his mere addition as pro forma respondent in the appeal would not entitle him to raise any cross-objection to the order appealed against. As a matter of fact the appellant himself styled his memorandum of cross-objections as one not against the order refusing to set aside the ex parte decree against defendant 4, Bhagwandas, but as one directed against the final decree for foreclosure passed ex parte. On the face of them these cross-objections were therefore, out of place in the appeal before the lower appellate Court.

The order of the learned Additional District Judge is perfectly correct and this appeal fails and is dismissed with all costs.

Second Appeal, No. 102-B of 1928, Decided on 4th October 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, D/- 3rd March 1928, in Civil Appeal No. 38 of 1927.

Hindu Law — Partition — Revision—After partition members living together and managing property in common — Family represented as joint in litigation—Such evidence does not prove reunion.

Partition was effected among all the members of the joint Hindu family. After partition members lived together and managed their property in common. The family was also represented as a joint family in litigation in which only one adult member was suing.

Held: that though the evidence was consistent with reunion did not necessarily prove it as the allegation of jointness might have been merely for the purposes of litigation: 30 Cal. 738 (*P. D. T. and S. T. Mangalmurti—for Appellant.

P. S. Kotwal and T. S. Dehode—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises from a suit by one member of a Hindu family against the widow of another member for possession of property now in her possession. Harbaji, the grandfather of the plaintiff Raghunath and of the deceased Gulab, husband of the defendant, had three sons, Sarawan, the father of Gulab, Parashram and Jhyango, the father of Raghunath. It has been held by both the lower Courts that these four separated from each other in 1903 and that the defendant Mt. Yamuna is entitled to the property of her husband Gulab. The plaintiff's case is that Parashram alone separated from the other three members of the family in 1903 and that the other three either remained united or reunited and that the plaintiff in either case is entitled to all the property that belonged to the members of the family that did not separate. The plaintiff relies on certain statements made in mutation proceedings after the death of Sarawan in 1912 by Harbaji, Parashram and Bhagirathi, Sarawan's widow (Exs. P. 7, P. 8 and P. 9) in which they say that Parashram has been separated in mess and estate for the last 9 years from which it is inferred that only Parashram separated. On the other hand, there are statements made by Jhyango and Harbaji in other mutation proceedings on the same occasion (Exs. D. 16 and D. 17) in which they say that all the property had been divided, although they admit that Harbaji, Sarawan and Jhyango continued living together. He also relies on certain exhibits e.g., Ex. P. 14 and P. 15, which are copies of plaints filed in 1921 and 1923, in which Gulabrao and Raghunath and the widow of Sarawan, Bhagirathi, have sued as members of a joint family and on the fact that there have been joint purchases and other transactions by the members of the family excluding Parashram and his branch.

As regards the finding that all the members of the family separated, I find myself unable to interfere; there is oral evidence which the lower Courts have believed, namely, that of Ganpat (D. W. 1) and Amrit (D. W. 1), which shows a complete separation of all members of the family. It is also a fact that at the partition four shares were defined in the landed property and the partition is mentioned in the Record-of-Rights and the fields are recorded in the names of the persons to whose share they fell. It is pointed out that in Nageshar Bakhsh Singh v. Ganesha (1) the Privy Council have laid down that a definition of shares in revenue and village papers affords by itself but a very slight indication of an actual separation and is not sufficient to rebut the ordinary presumption of jointness; but that ruling can have no application to the facts of the present case. It is not merely on the entries in the revenue records that the defendant relies. As I have laid, there is also oral evidence and there is at least the admitted fact that a partial partition did take place.

It has been laid down in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2) that there is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter remain united and an agreement amongst the remaining coparceners to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact, a view that has been re-affirmed in Jatti v. Banwari Lal (3). As I have already held on the evidence, all members of the family separated in 1903 and none of them remained united. The plea as to reunion is not very definite and there is no evidence of any specific agreement to reunite. Mahalakshmamma v. Suryanarayana (4) is cited in support of the view that reunion can be inferred from subsequent conduct. The subsequent conduct has already been indicated, namely, that Harbaji, Sarawan and Jhyango lived together after the partition and appear to have managed their property in common; the family has even been represented as a joint family in litigation. The evidence may be consistent with reunion, but it does not necessarily prove it. After partition members of the family might, as the Privy Council has recognised in Balkishen Das v. Ram Narayan Sahu (5), elect to enjoy their share separately or to continue to live together and enjoy their property in common; whether they did one or the other would affect the mode of enjoyment but not the tenure of the property or their interest in it. The statements of Harbaji and Jhyango (Exs. D 16 and D. 17) point to the latter alternative having been elected and the only facts that point definitely to reunion are the plaints in which the family has been representud as a joint one. In all of them I find that only one adult male was suing and the allegation of jointness may have been merely for the purposes of the litigation.

There is one piece of evidence which goes to show that the family was not really reunited and that is Ex. D. 41, a partition deed between the plaintiff and the defendant. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that this deed could only have been executed if the family had been joint; but it is clear that it would not have been executed at all if the family had been joint, because in that case she would have been entitled only to maintenance. The reason why this partition deed was necessary, even though the family was not

Jackson, A. J. C.—This appeal, like First Appeal No. 2-B of 1927, arises from a suit for partition of the Nim Jagir village of mouza Pardi. In it I have to consider the other half share of the village in which the appellant, Krishnappa, claims to have a quarter share, that is, two annas of the whole village. It is not disputed that he and his uncle Vishwanath are together entitled to four anna share. The question is whether that four anna share is to be divided between them equally or whether the appellant Krishnappa is to get one anna and Vishwanath three annas.

There were four brothers, Ramji, Harba, Manappa and Mahadappa, who owned the half share in mouza Pardi. They also own fields in mouza Wai. In 1896 Harba and his branch separated from the rest of the family and the fields at Wai were divided between all four branches. The other three branches went to live at Pardi and there they appear to have lived and managed their affairs as a joint family. In 1903 Manappa died and his branch became extinct. Before his death he executed a will, Ex. 7 D 4, dated 21st August 1903, in which he bequeathed his two anna share in Pardi and his other property to Vishwanath, the son of his brother Ramji. Krishnappa, the appellant, is the son of Sonba, Vishwanath's brother. His claim is that, though the will of Manappa was inoperative as Manappa was a member of a joint family, it proves a family settlement by which Vishwanath was to get Manappa's interest in the family property leaving his brother Sonba, the appellant's father, to succeed to the whole interest of Ramji. Viswanath's case is that he is entitled to two annas under the will of Manappa and to one anna as the son of Ramji. The lower Court has found in favour of Vishwanath.

The lower Court has found that the separation of Harba's branch in 1896 amounted to a complete disruption of the family ; consequently Manappa was competent to make a will, and the will conferred on Vishwanath Manappa's two anna share without depriving him of the one anna to which he would naturally succeed as the son of Ramji. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the lower Court's finding as to separation is based on a misconstruction of Balabux v. Rukhmabai (1) in which the Privy Council have laid down the law as follows :

"There is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter remain united. Where it is necessary in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing coparcener, to fix the shares which the others are or would be, entitled to, the separation of one may be said to be the virtual separation of all. And an agreement amongst the remaining coparceners to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other facts"

When Harba's branch separated and the fields at Wai were divided it was clearly necessary to ascertain the share to which each branch was entitled. The presumption then would be in favour of a partition between all the branches of the family. Nevertheless it is open to the appellant to contend that there was an agreement between the three branches that went to live at Pardi to remain united. It is not a question, as the lower Court supposes, of pleading and proving reunion. What the appellant pleaded was that the three branches in question did not separate. There is no evidence of any specific agreement to remain united, but there is, I think, good evidence to show that they did so remain.

Three members of the family have appared as witnesses, Krishnappa (P. W. 1), Vishwanath (7 D. W. 1) and Bhagwan (9 D W. 1), who represents the branch of Harba which did separate in 1896 Their evidence seems to me to show that though Harba's branch separated in that year and the fields at Wai were then divided between all four branches, the other three branches remained joint for some time longer, and that it was not till 1916 that the branch of Mahadappa separated from that of Ramji. The wording of the so-called will of Manappa on the whole bears this out. Although it purports to bequeath Manappa's share to Vishwanath it deals with the whole of the property belonging to the three branches of the family living at Pardi, and though it specifies the share to which each shall be entitled, it clearly considers them to be living in a state of jointness. It has been urged on behalf of Vishwanath that Ex. P 23 to P 28, which are extracts from the Record-of-Rights of mouza Wai, prove complete partition ; but that is not necessarily the case, and if Exs. P-30 and P-31 are considered, which are extracts from the Record-of-Rights of mouza Belora in which also the family had fields, it will appear that as the oral evidence shows, there was a partition between Krishnappa and Vishwanath on the one hand and Kashinath, the son of Mahadappa, on the other in 1916. Having regard to the evidence of the record I am not satisfied that the separation of Harba's branch in 1896 effected a complete disruption of the family, and I consider it satisfactorily proved that the remainder of the family remained joint till 1916.

The result is that Manappa's will cannot operate as such, but it may be a family arrangement which, if acted upon, will be binding on the members of the family, a document called a will having in such circumstances, been given effect to as a family arrangement by the Privy Council in Brijraj Singh v. Sheodan Singh (2) and Lakhmi Chand v. Anandi (3). What the family settlement was is clearly enough set forth in the will which makes it evident that Vishwanath was to get Manappa's share, his brother Sonba the father of the appellant, retaining the share that appertained to their branch. The will has been witnessed by Kashinath, son of Mahadappa, and by Sonba, and although this attestation by them cannot by itself prove that they knew the contents of the will and assented to them, it is proved by the subsequent conduct of members of the family the settlement was recognised and acted upon. As regards Vishwanath, it has been urged that he was a minor at the time of the will and so cannot be bound by any arrangement then come to by the other members of the family. I consider this to be a false plea. The evidence of Bhagwan (9 D. W 1) would make Vishwanath about 25 in 1903, and the last statement but one made by Vishwanath himself in his examination-in-chief would make him over 23 in that year.

After the partition with Kashinath in 1916, an application dated 6th March 1918 was made to the Deputy Commissioner, Yeotmal, signed by Vishwanath and Krishnappa as well as other members of the family in which it was stated that Kashinath, son of Mahadappa, had a two anna share in the village, Krishnappa had a two anna share, Vishwanath had a two anna share and Narayan and Bhagwan, sons of Harba, had each a one anna share. Ex. P-2 is copy of this application and the subsequent proceedings, as

(2) [1913] 35 All. 337=93 I. C. 826=40 I. A. 161 (P. C.).
(3) A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 54=48 All. 313=53 I. A. 123 (P. C.).

Ex. P-3 and Ex. P-4 show, resulted in the shares specified being entered in the revenue records. In 1922 a plaint, of which Ex. P-1 is a copy, was filed on behalf of Krishnappa and Vishwanath. It is signed by both and it represents each as having a two anna share in the village. On 24th April 1924 Ex. P-19 was executed by Vishwanath and Krishnappa. It is a deed of partition and allots to each a two anna share in mouza Pardi. It is, however, Vishwanath's contention, which has been accepted by the lower Court, that he executed this deed under misrepresentation and undue influence

The deed, Ex. P-19, was executed after the institution of the suit but before the first hearing, that is, before Vishwanath had set up his claim to a three anna share. His explanation of the circumstances in which he claimed to execute this deed is not convincing. It must be explained, in the first place, that before Manappa executed his will in 1903, it was at one time intended that he should adopt Vishwanath. The adoption was for some reason found impracticable But nevertheless the execution of the will appears to have been considered in some way to place Vishwanath in the position of a son of Manappa and he has at times described himself as Vishwanath, the son of Manappa, though at other times he has signed himself as Vishwanath, the son of Ramji. According to him, Krishnappa used the fact that he sometimes signed as Vishwanath, the son of Manappa, to coerce him into signing the partition deed. His evidence is as follows :

"My signature on the farkhat was taken by force by Krishnappa. He said that unless I agree to take two annas share in all, I would not get even that and he threatened to beat me. Hence I signed the farkhat. He said I must get Manappa's share only as I used his name in place of the name of my father Ramji."

I cannot believe this explanation. The evidence of Vishwanath on the point is unsupported and it is contradicted by that of Bhagwan, who as a member of Harba's branch of the family can have no interest at all in supporting Krishnappa. This deed and the other actions of the parties satisfy me that the arrangement come to at the time when Manappa executed his will was recognized as valid until after the institution of the suit. In the circumstances, I think, that the arrangement must be given effect to, and that Vishwanath must be held to be entitled only to a two anna share.

The appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Court will be modified by Krishnappa being shown as entitled to a share of two annas instead of one anna and Vishwanath to two annas instead of three annas. Vishwanath will bear the appellant's costs.

A. I. R. 1929 Nagpur 366

SUBHEDAR, A. J. C.

Shamrao—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Chandrabhagabai—Plaintiff—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 74-B of 1928, Decided on 25th July 1929, against judgment of 1st Class Sub-Judge, No. 1, Akola, D/- 30th June 1928.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Income from ancestral property alone bears all maintenance charges.

The income from ancestral property alone bears all maintenance charges. Therefore, the income from Deshmukhi and Patwaripari should not be taken into consideration in fixing a person's maintenance allowance because the income from these sources is dependant on personal service. [P 367 C 1]

W. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

R. W. Fulay—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts of the case out of which this first appeal has arisen are shortly these: The plaintiff's husband Purushottamrao, who died in 1917, was a step-brother of the defendants and formed a joint Hindu family with them. Up to 1922 the plaintiff stayed on with the defendants when difference arose and she took up her residence with her brother who has since been maintaining her. She, therefore, brought the suit in the lower Court claiming Rs. 50 a month as a suitable maintenance allowance and arrears for three years at this rate. She put down the family income at Rs. 10,000. In reply the defendants stated that the annual income from all sources was not more than Rs. 1,500 and as there were five members to support the plaintiff should not be allowed more than Rs. 100 a year if she did not care to stay with the defendants.

The lower Court in a very careful judgment reviewed all the evidence critically and came to the conclusion that the annual net income from the fields was Rs. 1,250, that from Deshmukhi Rs. 267 and from Patwaripan Rs. 198 total Rs. 1,665. Making allowance for everything the learned Subordinate Judge fixed Rs. 20 a month as a suitable maintenance allowance to the plaintiff in future and ordered three years' arrears to be paid to her at this rate.

The defendants come up in appeal and it is contended on their behalf that the income from Deshmukhi and Patwaripan should not have been taken into consideration in fixing the plaintiff's maintenance allowance because the income from these sources is dependant solely on personal service to be rendered by one or the other defendant. Strictly speaking, the income from ancestral property alone bears all maintenance charges. I, therefore, accept this contention of the defendants. The result will then be that the net income of defendants will be considered to be only Rs. 1,259 a year and the allowance fixed by the lower Court will accordingly be reduced proportionately. The plaintiff will be thus entitled to a monthly allowance of Rs. 15 only instead of Rs. 20.

The next contention advanced is that since the plaintiff left the defendant's house of her own free will and accord without any good reason she is not entitled to claim any arrears of maintenance more particularly when there is no evidence that any notice of demand was ever given by her to the defendants. Mr. Fulay, who appeared for the plaintiff-respondent states that since this question of want of notice was not raised by the defendants in their pleadings the plaintiff had no opportunity to plead and prove that demand was in fact made. Under these circumstances I remand the case to the lower Court for taking pleadings and evidence on the point of notice of demand and disposal of the question of arrears afresh in the light of fresh findings. Since there has been a divided success in this Court the costs of this appeal will be borne by the parties as incurred by them.

SUBHEDAR, A. J. C.

Yashodi and another—Defendants—Appellants.

v.

Chandrabhan and another—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 137-B of 1928, Decided on 25th September 1929, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 23rd January 1928, in Civil Appeal No. 242 of 1927.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Bombay School—Adoption by widow of coparcener without husband's or coparcener's consent is invalid.

Adoption made by a widow of a coparcener without having authority from her husband and without obtaining the consent of the coparceners is invalid: A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 435 (F.B.) and 6 Bom. 498 (F.B.), Foll. and A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 216, Ref. [P 368 C 2]

M. R. Bobde—for Appellants.

S. A. Pande—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendants. The genealogical tree of the parties is as under:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Chandrabhan (Plff. 1) | Sitaram = | (1) Parwati(2) Yashodi (Deft. 1) |
| Mahadu (Plff. 2) | | Maroti (Deft. 2) |

Sitaram died on 24th April 1923, and after his death disputes arose between the parties as regards possession of a field S. No. 4 pot hissa No. 3 of mouza Kothadi which was ultimately attached by the criminal Court. The present suit was, therefore, filed by the respondents for a declaration that the said field is theirs and that the appellants have no right over it. The plaintiffs' case was that Sitaram died as a member of a joint family consisting of himself and the plaintiffs, and therefore after Sitaram's death the latter became owners of the field in dispute by right of survivorship and that the adoption, if any, of the second by the first defendant was invalid because defendant 1 was the junior widow of Sitaram and was not authorized by him to make the adoption. The defence was that Sitaram separated in estate from the plaintiff in 1921, that the field in dispute came to him at the partition, and that the adoption was made and was valid because it was authorized by Sitaram. The trial Court found for the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, but on appeal by the plaintiffs the Additional District Judge Akola, held that the partition set up by the defendants was not established, and that the adoption of defendant 2, though made, was invalid in law as neither the authority of Sitaram nor the consent of the coparceners was proved. The lower appellate Court therefore set aside the trial Court's decree and decreed the plaintiffs' claim with all costs.

In second appeal Mr. Bobde for the appellants argued that the lower appellate Court misconstrued the documents (Exs. P-1, P-3 and P-4 and Exs. D-1 and D-2) and wrongly inferred that they proved jointness rather than separation of the brothers. There is certainly no evidence to prove that plaintiff 1 got his own name inserted in the first three documents to the knowledge of Sitaram and the lower appellate Court's assumption to that effect has undoubtedly given the plaintiffs' advocate some ground to challenge the inference drawn by the learned Judge against Sitaram's conduct in acquiescing in the said entries. But the simple question for consideration is how far these documents support the plea of partition set up by the defendants. Having gone through the several documents, I have come to the same conclusion, as the two lower Courts did, that the entries in these documents being to some extent conflicting, the documents are not conclusive either way. It is, however, clear that they cannot lead the inference that that there was a partition between the brothers in 1921.

Because the documentary evidence was not correctly appreciated by the lower appellate Court, it was suggested that its appreciation of the oral evidence was also biased and, therefore, Mr. Bobde took me through the entire oral evidence which bore on the question of partition and argued that it supported the plea of partition. To my mind no Court of justice would consider the type of oral evidence furnished in the present case by the appellants as sufficient to controvert the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law that a family is joint until the contrary is proved. I accept the analysis and criticisms of this evidence given by the lower appellate Court in paras. 6 and 7 of its judgment and concur with it in holding that the partition set up between the plaintiffs and Sitaram has not been established.

The next question that was argued and remains for decision is if the adoption of defendant 2 by defendant 1 was valid on the findings (1) that the husband of defendant 1 died as a member of the joint family of himself and the plaintiffs, (2) that Sitaram had left no direction to defendant 1 to make any adoption to him, and (3) that the plaintiff's consent to the adoption of defendant 2 was neither asked for nor given. On the authority of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council appearing in para. 1 at pp. 155 and 158 of the report of the case of Yado v. Namdeo (2), Mr. Bobde argued that the adoption in question must be deemed to be valid in spite of the fact that the consent of the plaintiffs' coparceners was not given to the adoption. It is undoubtedly true that the aforesaid observations fully support the contention and seem in a way to overrule the dictum to the contrary laid down in Ramji v. Ghamau (2).

But it was argued by the respondents' pleader that the aforesaid observations were in the nature of obiter dicta as they were not necessary for the actual decision of the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council as was pointed out by the Full Bench of Bombay High Court in the case of Ishwar Dadu v. Gajabai (3), where it was held that the decision in Yadao v. Namdeo (1), did not overrule Ramji v. Ghamau (2). As the Bombay School of law is admittedly applicable to Berar it follows that the latest authority of the Bombay High Court laying down the law applicable to facts similar to those of the present case must be followed. I, therefore, concur with the lower appellate Court in holding that the adoption of defendant 2 was not valid. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

SUBJECT INDEX

Absence of Star denotes Cases of Provincial or Small Importance.
* Indicates Cases of Great Importance.
* * Indicate Cases of Very Great Importance.

Acquiescence
—— Plaintiff's connivance at defendant's building in plaintiff's land—Defendants having bona fide belief that they possess good title to the property—Plaintiff's bringing a declaratory suit — Plaintiff's claim cannot be decreed, on ground of acquiescence 292a*

Advancement
——No presumption in India — Each case should be decided on its merits 134f*

Adverse Possession
——Holder of life-estate cannot assert adverse possession against remainderman 494h*
——Under-proprietors—It is not necessary to prove actual litigation with taluqdar 433c*
— Ingredients enunciated—To prove title by adverse possession it must be shown that such possession is adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent and it must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the statutory period—Knowledge on the part of the person whose rights are invaded is an essential element of adverse possession 402c*
——Grove-holder continuing to hold even after land ceasing to be grove—In absence of any assertion of adverse title he must be considered as holding over and his possession is only of tenant 397b*
——Cosharers—Possession of one is not adverse unless there is ouster—Denial of title is ouster 337b*
——Cosharers—One cosharer mortgaging joint property exempting some plots —Exemption does not prove his exclusive title to them or ouster of other cosharers 337c*
——Cosharers—Mutation in the name of one without denial of title of others does not establish 337d*
——Talukdar is not required to prove actual user of jungle and waste land 328a*
——Every owner must be presumed to know boundary of his own land 328b*
——Cosharer's possession is not adverse 284c*
* ——Equity of redemption is capable of adverse possession 215c*
* ——Nankar allowance not received by a person for some years—Right to receive it is not barred by adverse possession — Denial of the right and continuous receipt thereof by the holder must be proved 215d*
* ——Hindu Law—If adverse possession against a widow is sought to be made adverse also against the reversioner, it can only be so in a case where the widow has been in actual possession and has been dispossessed 153a*

Agra Tenancy Act (2 of 1901)
——S. 34—Mortgage—Occupancy holding—Mortgages by occupancy tenants of their holdings are invalid as against the landlord 116b*

Alluvion and Diluvion
——Every zamindar has a right according to his share 15b*

Arbitration
——Parties cannot be allowed to show that arbitrator's award was wrong on merits 334a* ——Ordinary principles of personal law cannot be varied 178a*

Arms Act (11 of 1878)
——S. 19 (c) — Servant carrying master's gun in British India for having it repaired—No acknowledged license—Servant will not be protected 157

B

Benami
——Advancement — Principles and distinction between benami and advancement pointed out 97a

C

Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 of 1920)
——Scope and applicability indicated (FB) 225b
——Applicability—Act applies where entire benefit under wakf is allotted for public purposes (FB) 225d
——S. 3 — Interpretation of words "public purpose" — Real substance and primary intention of creator must be looked at (FB) 225c
——S. 3 — Trust partly private and partly public — Interested person can apply under Mussalman Wakf Act (42 of 1923), S. 4—Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, S. 3 is not applicable (FB) 225e
*——S. 3—Wakf for benefit of specified person or class of persons such as kindreds, dependants and others is not a trust for a public purpose (FB) 225a

Civil P. C., (5 of 1908)
——S. 2 (11) — Auction purchaser in execution of decree for sale on mortgage of under-proprietary tenure is not legal representative of original under-proprietor 353a
——Ss. 10 and 11 — Whilst S. 10 bars only a suit, S. 11, bars the trial of both the suit and of issue involved in that suit 341a
——S. 10—For S. 10 to be applicable entire subject matter of two suits must be same—Where former suit relates to declaration of title with regard to certain properties and latter suit is for profits in regard to one of those properties, S. 10 will not apply 341b
——S. 10 — Suit for profits which is solely cognizable by a revenue Court cannot be stayed by prior suit for declaration of title pending in civil Court 341c
——S. 10 — Court can stay under its inherent powers even where it does not come within the provision of S. 10 341b
——S. 11 — Prior mortgagee who is also puisne mortgagee impleaded in suit by mesne mortgagee as subsequent mortgagee — No contest as to prior mortgage—Prior mortgagee's rights are not barred by res judicata 463
——S. 11, Expln. 4—Omission by sub-mortgagee to claim amount due on sub-mortgage does not bar fresh suit 455
——S. 11—Lower appellate Court remanding case ordering one of several documents to be admitted—Case coming up before successor of Judge making that order—He passing another order of remand ordering all documents in question to be admitted—Second order of remand is proper 398b
*——S. 11—Land Record Officer ordering that mortgagor should be recorded as ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land—His order will operate as res judicata in subsequent civil suit, Land Record Officer having exclusive jurisdiction to pass such order 362
——S. 11—Applicability—Whilst S. 10 bars only a suit, S. 11 bars the trial of both the suit and of issue involved in that suit 341a
—— S. 11 — Partition suit — Decision affecting right of one defendant against another is decision inter partes and will be res judicata 275a
——S. 11—Decision need not be on merits 275b
——S. 11 — Father's mortgagee impleaded in sons' suit for partition to get sons' share released from mortgage — Point fought in appellate Court which reduced rate of interest and held whole family property liable for mortgage—Decision being final and complete will be res judicata in subsequent suit by mortgagee to recover disallowed interest from father's share 275c
——S. 11—Prior suit by transferee of pronote against executant and assignor dismissed—Second suit by transferee against assignor alone for damages is barred (FB) 172a
——S. 11—Causes of action need not be same (FB) 172b
——S. 11—Question whether a whole class of cases is barred is difficult to reply in general terms (FB) 172c
——S. 11—A compromise decree operates as res judicata 63a
——S. 11—Alluvial land in present suit not the same in previous suit but newly formed while old land disappeared—

Civil P. C.
There can be no res judicata or estoppel 15a* ——S. 20 (c)—Primary transaction of sale and purchase at one place—Execution of promissory notes in respect of unpaid price at another place—Cause of action to recover price accrues at place of primary transaction 91b
——S. 34—Lower appellate Court using its discretion with regard to costs with due care—High Court cannot interfere unless order demonstrably wrong (FB) 406b*
——S. 38—Decree transferred to Collector—Injunction to Court passing decree is futile 235a*
——S. 41—Even after issue of certificate under S 41, transferee Court has jurisdiction to decide objections relating to anything done in the course of its proceedings 76a ——S. 47—Application by decree-holder sub-mortgagee to execution Court for withdrawal of mortgage money in redemption suit is an application for execution and order passed thereon is appealable 309
——S. 47—In execution the decree-holder can be put in possession of the specific lands substituted for his share on partition 263
——S. 47—Applications as objections by the parties to suit are governed by Lim. Act Art. 181 and not by Art. 165 76b
——S. 47—Decree against husband—Wife impleaded as representative on his death—Property in her hands attached—Objection by her that the property did not form assets of her husband is one covered by S. 47 and not by O. 21, R. 58—Summary rejection is illegal 21
*——S. 60, Proviso—Right of Gangaputra to receive offerings is right of personal service and cannot be attached—But right of occupation of particular spot on bank together with physical articles is liable to attachment 444
——S. 69—Decree transferred to Collector—Injunction to Court passing decree is futile 235a*

Partition
——Suit — Partition of common, not joint, property—Partial partition is allowed 162c*

Penal Code (45 of 1860)
——S. 300 — Evidence of admission to villagers, though sufficient to justify conviction, must be scrutinized as other evidence to prove murder 272a* ——Ss. 300 and 302 — Evidence to prove murder 272d*

Penal Code
——S. 300 — Person knowing of his wife's murder but making no report to police nor trying to find out murderer—His conduct may lead to conclusion that he was murderer 190a* ——S 302—Death under circumstances compatible with little else than irritant poisoning—Medical evidence also testifying to same effect — Conclusion that death was due to poisoning by accused held to be good conclusion 516
——S. 401--For conviction under S. 401, it is not necessary that person convicted must have taken part in any particular theft or robbery 321(2)c*
——S. 401 — Conviction under S. 401 cannot be considered bad in law merely because evidence on record would also have justified conviction under S. 379 or 392 321(2)d*
——S. 411—Circumstances convincing of stolen nature of property are necessary for S. 411—Word "believe" therein is stronger than "suspect" 213
——S. 447—Complainant must be in actual physical possession 369

Pleadings
——Custom set up by party must be taken as a whole and not piece-meal 204d*

Possession
——Court of Wards representing zamindar holds possession of parti land of village presumed to be in possession of zamindar—Mere possession without title does not confer any right to possession 447d*

Practice
——Burden of proof—Pleadings — Success of plaintiff's case depends on strength of his case and not weakness of opposite party 494f*
——Where trial Judge intelligently examines evidence, value of his opinion is great 469c*
——Pleadings—Suit on mortgage—Subsequent agreement to pay enhanced interest by some of the holders of equity of redemption — Enhanced rate not claimed in plaint but in cral pleadings when time-barred—Relief being personal against some of the holders of properties cannot be claimed 303

OUDH CHIEF COURT

* A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 1

STUART, C. J. AND RAZA, J.

Mohammad Yusuf Husain—Plaintiffs—Appellants.

v.

Wilayat Husain and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No 101 of 1927, Decided on 21st August 1928, from order of Sub-Judge, Rae Bareli, D-/ 14th March 1927.

 (a) Civil P.C., O.2, R.2—Family property enjoyed by all as tenants-in-common—Member S separating as regards some portion of property and getting possession over moiety of it—Member P suing for his share only of that property — Second suit by P claiming share in other property is not barred under R. 2.

The members of a certain family were enjoying the whole family property as tenants-in-common. One member S separated from the others in respect of certain portion of the property only and obtained possession over a moiety of that portion. Another member P brought a suit to claim his share of this portion of the property and asserted that S was not entitled to the property over which he got possession. P afterwards brought another suit claiming his share in the remaining property of the family.

Held: that this second suit was not barred by his first suit because in the first suit the cause of action was only with regard to that particular portion of property, as the remaining property still continued to be enjoyed by all members as tenants-in-common. O. 2, R. 2, therefore would not be applicable here. [P 5 C 1]

 (b) Civil P. C. Sch. 2, Para. 15—Arbitrator not applying rules of succession of law to which parties belong but making award according to what he thought proper in the circumstances—He giving three annas share to one who was ordinarily entitled to eight-annas share—Award is binding on him.

Certain family governed by the Imamia Law referred the family disputes to a sole arbitrator S whose honesty was not questioned. The award given by him did not apply the rule of succession contained in the Imamia Law. One of the members who under the provisions of the Imamia Law was entitled to an eight annas in the property was given only a three-anna share under the award. The arbitrator did not state in the award that he was awarding the shares according to the rules of intestate succession in the Imamia Law. He was only following his own views as to what was right and proper in the circumstances of the family. The award was attacked on the ground of a technical misconduct by the arbitrator in so far as he applied a perverse view of the law while giving the award.

Held :—If S had stated in the award that he was awarding the share according to the rules of intestate succession in the Imamia Law and then proceeded to arrive at the award which he actually made, there might have been an error in law and the award could have been set aside. But here there was no error in law as S has made the award according to his own views as to what was right and proper in the circumstances. There was no technical misconduct on the part of S and the award was therefore binding on the member to whom only three anna-share was given, though he was entitled to eight-anna share : 18 Cal. 414 (P.C.) ; 23 All. 383 (P.C.) ; and 21 Cal. 590 ; Rel. on. A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 66, Dist. [P 9 C 2]

Niamat Ullah and Kalbi-i-Abbas—for Appellants.

Gulam Husain Naqvi, Mirza Abid Husain, Mehai-uz-zaman, A. P. Sen and S. C. Dass—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the dismissal of their suit by the learned Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli. The judgment and decree are dated 2nd April 1927. It is necessary to state the facts fully. A certain Saiyed Nurul Husain, a Shia governed by the Imamia law, resided in Jais in the Rae Bareli District. He owned landed pro perty which consisted in the main of the village of Kura in the Fatehpur District of the Agra province He owned this village in entirety He further owned shares in Miranpur Saidana, Bihadurpur and Mahmudpur in the Rae Bareli District He died on 7th April 1857 He left surviving him the following persons, who were entitled under the Imamia law, to succeed to his inheritance

An elder wife Nidha Bibi

Tajuddin, his elder son by Nidha Bibi

Ahsan Husain, his second son by Nidha Bibi

A younger wife Madina Bibi

An elder son Mohammad Husain by Madina Bibi.

A younger son Bande Husain by Madina Bibi

It appears that after his death his son Tajuddin was admitted by the revenue authorities to engage for the revenue on behalf of all this property It is difficult to follow accurately after this lapse of time the subsequent deaths of the members of this family , but it appears that Mohammed Husain, Madina Bibi's elder son, died very shortly after his father and it appears that Nidha Bibi died before 1876 Tajuddin is said to have died on 23rd April 1876 He had married three wives By his second wife, Nabi Bandi, he had a son Ejaz Husain who died a few months after his father on 1st October 1876 He had also by his wife Kaniz Fatima, a daughter called Ahmad Bandi It appears that on the death of Tajuddin, his brother Ahsan was allowed by the revenue authorities to engage for the payment of the land revenue in respect of the landed property in question He died in 1894

We have now to see who were the surviving members of the family at the time of Ahsan Husain's death

Ahsan Husain left surviving him a widow called Hausan Bibi and two sons Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain

There were further in the family Ahmad Bandi, Tajuddin's daughter (who, it is to be noted, married her cousin Moinuddin Husain), Madina Bibi and Bande Hasan

Madina Bibi died in 1899-1900

Hausan Bibi died on 13th June 1907.

Moinuddin Husain died on 3rd December 1910

Ahmad Bandi is dead

Moinuddin Husain and Ahmad Bandi had a daughter Khatun Bandi. She married Sayed Zaki Jan and had two sons Makbul Husain (now dead) and Matlub Husain and a daughter Jafar Bandi.

Bande Hasan died on 2nd August 1910. He left two sons Yusuf Husain and Yakub Husain who are the present plaintiffs After their father's death Iftikhar Husain became their guardian

Iftikhar Husain died on 25th November 1919, leaving a son Wilayat Husain

Khatun Bandi is now dead Her heirs are Sayed Zaki Jan, Matlub Husain and Jafar Bandi

We now come to certain litigation and family arrangements which have an important bearing upon the decision of the appeal

Tajuddin had died in 1876 As we have already said Ahsan Husain was allowed by the revenue authorities to engage for the payment of land revenue in respect of the property and his name was entered in the revenue papers Nabi Bandi applied to have her name recorded in respect of a moiety share in the Rae Bareli property only The revenue authorities, acceded to this application and continued to record the name of Ahsan Husain in respect of a moiety. These entries ignored the rights of Bande Hasan Bande Hasan then instituted suit No 57 of 1880 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, against Ahsan Husain, Nabi Bandi and Ahmad Bandi He claimed a moiety of the property in question asserting that he had inherited the rights of his brother Mohammad Husain The plaint in this suit is Ex A-2 This plaint was replaced by an amended plaint Ex 45 It is to be noted that in this amended plaint Bande Hasan claimed to have obtained the share of his mother Madina Bibi, and thus to have obtained a moiety in the Rae Bareli property left by his father Nurul Hasan. Ahsan Husain did not contest his title to succeed to a moiety, but asserted that only a portion of the property in dispute was the property of Nurul Hasan and that the remainder had been acquired by Ahsan Husain himself Ahsan Husain's written statement is Ex A-3. She contested Bande Hasan's title on the allegation :

"That he was born of a beruni woman whose nikah and dower are not known. Therefore according to custom prevalent in the families of respectable men in Jais and also according to Mahomedan law such son is not entitled to any inheritance in the presence of sons of married wives whose dower debt may also be proved unless the dower debt is paid up."

This plea is very vague and involves a number of disputable points. The word "beruni" means no more than the opposite of "khandani" or "ahel i biradari." The designation of Madina Bibi as a "beruni" woman meant no more than that she was of a lower tribe and of lower status The plea did not explicitly assert that she was not legally married to Nurul Hasan, although Nabi Bandi subsequently suggested this The point is, however, of little importance in view of the decision in the suit The suit was decided on 18th September 1880 by a judgment Ex 7 It was found that the whole of the property in suit, that is to say, the whole of the Rae Bareli property was the ancestral property of Nurul Hasan It was found that Nurul Hasan was legally married to Madina Bibi, and it was found that Bande Hasan was in no way debarred from inheritance under the Imamia law Bande Hasan's suit was accordingly decreed and he was awarded possession over a moiety in the Rae Bareli property.

There was next a litigation in 1886. Ahmad Bandi claimed, as daughter of the deceased Kaniz Fatima, her mother's dower against her father's widow Nabi Bandi and her father's brother Ahsan Husan, and claimed to charge the liability of her dower on the ancestral property in Kura and on other property. Her plaint is Ex 37 This was suit No 286 of 1886 It was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli Ahsan Husain's written statement is Ex F-10 He stated further in Ex 16 that Tajuddin had transferred to him (Ahsan Husain) his interests in Kura by an oral gift prior to his death We have not the decision in the case but the parties appear to be agreed that Ahmad Bandi obtained a decree in respect of the dower but did not obtain a charge upon any portion of the property We have next to refer to an important statement made by Ahsan Husain in a previous case between Ahmad Bandi and Nabi Bandi in regard to which we have no particulars This is Ex. 49 Here Ahsan Husain deposed :

"There were four brothers by two mothers, i. e., two brothers by each mother, I and Tajuddin by one mother and Mohammad Husain deceased and Bando Hasan who is alive, by the other. All were joint and the eldest of all the brothers was Tajuddin Husain "

There is next an extract from the dastur-i-dehi in respect of the village of Bahadurpur in the Rae Bareli District. This is Ex 27 It is dated 1893-94

"The nature of this Mahal is in favour of a zamindari held in common, Moin Husain, Iftikhar Husain, Mt Ahmad Bandi and Bande Hasan are joint among themselves in mess and business and Abeen Ullah Zahur Ullah and Wali Ullah " (these are members of another family who had shares in the mahal) are joint among themselves in mess and business. The remaining cosharers are separate. "

The translation in the printed book is incorrect This is the correct translation.

So far although there had been an important decision in respect of the Rae Bareli property there had been nothing showing title in respect of the Kura village in the Fatehpur District which had been recorded in the revenue papers first in the name of Nural Hasan, next in the name of Tajuldin and next in the name of Ahsan Husan When Ahsan Husain died in 1894 there was a dispute in the family and this dispute was decided by an award which is one of the most important pieces of evidence in the present suit This award is Ex. A-6. It was made on 24th November 1894 The arbitrator who made the award was Saiyed Mohammad Taki, a well-known vakil of Jais He died two years after he made the award We shall state later our construction of this award It is sufficient to note here that as a result of this award the following entries were made for the first time in the revenue papers of Kura :

"Iftikhar Husain 5 annas 6 pies.
Moinuddin Husain 3 annas 6 pies.
Ahmad Bandi, Moinuldin Husain's wife and Tajuddin's daughter 2 annas.
Ahsan Husain's widow Husain Bibi 2 annas."
Bando Hasan 3 annas"

No alteration was made in respect of the entries of the Rae Bareli property. There is no direct evidence as to the alterations in the khewat of Kura made as a result of the award, but the parties are agreed that these alterations were made. When Moinuddin Husain died Iftikhar Husain took his place entirely Iftikhar Husain had been made lambardar under the award As we have noted he was guardian of Bande Hasan's sons, the present plaintiffs When Iftikhar Husain died on 25th November 1919 the questions in dispute were first brought before the revenue authorities of the Fatehpur

District The parties claiming the right to engage for the land revenue were :

Wilayat Husain, the son of Iftikhar Husain Respondent No. 1.

Yusuf Husain and Yakub Husain, the present plaintiffs, sons of Bande Hasan.

Khatun Bibi who was then alive

The Assistant Collector by an order of 10th April 1920 (Ex. A. 22) entered Wilayat Husain's name in respect of 13 annas in place of his father Iftikhar Husain and referred the other parties for redress to the civil Court Yusuf Husain and Yakub Husain, however, took no action for a considerable period, and in the meanwhile Wilayat Husain transferred on 20th July 1922 a four annas share in Kura to his wife and Kazmi Begam respondent 2 in lieu of her dower. He executed mortgages in respect of a 5 annas 3 pies share in Kura on 4th February 1923 on 5th October 1923 and on 17th February 1923 in favour of Kura Chandra Bhukhan respondent 3 and by a sale on 22nd January 1926 transferred the equity of redemption in those mortgages to the mortgagee On the same date the 22nd January 1926, he transferred a 3 annas 9 pies share in Kura by sale to the same person It will thus be seen that by 22nd January 1926, Wilayat Husain had divested himself of all title to the Kura property. On 10th April 1926, Yusuf Husain and Yakub Husain instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. Their learned counsel has been unable to give a complete explanation as to why they waited six years before they brought their claim in the civil Court Their delay has added to the difficulties of decision of a suit which was already sufficiently difficult owing to the lapse of time which followed inevitably after the death of Nurul Hasan over seventy years ago Their claim is to this effect. They assert that the property had devolved after Nurul Hasan's death absolutely according to the rule of succession of the Imamia law, but that for reasons of convenience and considerations of a family nature from the death of Nurul Hasan to the death of Iftikhar Husain in 1919 the various members of the family had enjoyed the property as tenants-in-common leaving at their own desire the management of the property to the person who at the time was the head of the family, permitting him to realize all profits, and that the other members enjoyed the income as he distributed it to them. According to this allegation Tajuddin was the first manager, Ahsan Husain was the next manager, Moinuddin Husain was the third manager and Iftikhar Husain was the fourth manager From the date of the death of Iftikhar Husain the disputes according to these allegations commenced and the plaintiffs demanded their rights under the law Their claim was divided into three parts They have succeeded their father in having their names entered in respect of the three annas share in the village of Kura, but they claimed therein five annas more giving them a full eight annas share They claimed nothing in respect of the village property in the Rae Bareli District as their father had obtained an entry of a moiety in that property in the proceeding of 1880, but they claimed their share in a moiety in certain towns, lands and buildings in Jais and they further claimed a moiety in certain property which had been obtained by Nurul Hasan as mortgagee by mortgages, redemption of which has now become extinct

The learned trial Judge has dismissed their suit in entirety He found in the first place that the suit was barred because he considered that Bande Hasan should have included all the reliefs now sought when he filed his suit of 1880. Applying the provisions of O 2, R 2, Civil P C he dismissed the suit. He further dismissed the suit as being time-barred. He dismissed the suit for a third reason because he considered that under the terms of the award (Ex A-6) the suit could not lie We have first to consider whether the suit has been rightly dismissed under the provisions of O. 2, R 2, because Bande Hasan did not in the suit of 1880 include these reliefs. He was certainly under an obligation under the provisions of the law to include the whole of the claim which he was entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, and an omission to sue would debar a suit in respect of the portion so omitted. We do not, however, agree with the learned trial Judge in his view that the present claim was in respect of the cause of action in that suit The case put forward by Bande Hasan in 1880 was that the members of the family were enjoying the whole of the family property as tenants-in-common. That is the case which is put forward now. He continued that Nabi Bandi had separated from the other tenants-in-common in respect of the village property in Rae Bareli and nothing else, and had obtained possession over village property to which she was not entitled This action disclosed no cause except as to the village property in Rae Bareli to which it related The assertion was impliedly that the remaining property continued to be enjoyed by the members of the family as tenants-in-common and thus the provisions of O 2, R 2 in no way affect the validity of the present suit.

We are also not in agreement with the learned trial Judge in his views as to the effect of the law of limitation. In our opinion the article governing this suit is Art 144, Sch 1, Act 9 of 1908 This was a suit for "possession of immovable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided for"

and the time from which the period began to run was when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff

As we shall show later we have arrived at the finding that the members of the family were tenants-in-common of the property in suit. The learned trial Judge did not arrive at the finding. We shall show our reasons for disagreeing with him upon that point If this was the case there was no question of adverse possession up to the time of the death of Iftikhar Husain which took place on 25th November 1919 It is unnecessary to discuss the law on the question as the law is very well-known and is contained in the leading case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council: Corea v Appuhamy (1)

There seems to us to be no doubt as to the fact that the property in suit, that is to say, the Kura property and the town property in Jais and the rights under the deeds of mortgages were held by the members of the family as tenants-in-common There is a mass of documentary evidence to support this view and the oral evidence against it appears to us to be worthless in face of the documentary evidenc (Here the judgment states and discusses evidence and proceeds) We have no hesitation in finding that the plea advanced by the plaintiffs to the effect that the property derived from Nurul Hasan was enjoyed by all the members of the family as tenants-in-common has been established by evidence. This evidence shows that there was always one member of the family who managed the affairs of the estate on behalf of the remainder and distributed the profits among them. This arrangement continued until the death of Iftikhar Husain.

So far the appeal has succeeded. But in respect of the greater portion of the claim put forward by the appellants the appeal fails This is the portion in respect of the extra five annas share in the village of Kura The claim is not in our opinion barred so much by limitation as by the failure to defeat the award. It is true that if this suit had been brought as a suit to set aside the award of 1894 (Ex A-6) it could have been successfully met on the plea of limitation under the provisions of Art. 91, Sch 1 Act 9 of 1908 But the question of limitation is here of less importance for we have to consider the award upon the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellants If we accept these arguments Art 91 might not stand against the appellants' claim If we do not accept those arguments (as our decision will show we do not accept them) this portion of the suit fails because the award bars it. It is true that if the learned counsel for the appellants had pressed a plea taken before the lower Court to the effect that the award was a result of fraud and misrepresentation the plea of limitation would have been of greater importance. But the learned counsel has very properly abandoned that plea as being unsupported by any reliable evidence. We shall consider later that effect of limitation and plea of technical misconduct. He attacks the award in the following manner He does not suggest that the pleader of Rae Bareli Saiyed Mohammad Taki was in any way dishonest. He does not suggest any but technical misconduct. He does not impute bad faith He does not dispute the factum of the award His case is that there is nothing to show what was the agreement to refer and that in these circumstances the award is not binding. He further takes the position that even if the award is binding it does not stand in the way of the plaintiffs upon a proper construction of its contents. His argument is that if the award does not stand against his clients they are entitled under the Imamia law to an eight annas share in Kura' and that, as they have so far obtained a three annas share, they should be given a decree for an additional five annas share.

There is no evidence which, if it stood alone, would be able to establish how this award came into being The respondents have produced evidence which if believed, would show that it came into being in the manner in which they asserted. The appellants have produced oral evidence to prove the contrary The learned trial Judge has accepted the respondents' evidence and refused to accept the appellants' We consider that he has taken a right course in this view not because the oral evidence on either side would have been of great value, had it stood by itself, but because the contents of the award itself support the respondents' contention and involve the rejection of the contention of the appellants

There is no primary evidence as to the reference to arbitration There has been considerable cross-swearing as to the custody of the document containing the reference We are not satisfied that the evidence on either side is true as to the custody It is more likely than not that the document containing the reference remained in the custody of Mohammad Taki Khan It has disappeared and secondary evidence is admissible to prove its contents The secondary evidence produced by the defendants-respondents to prove its contents goes to show that the reference took place to settle a dispute which arose on the death of Ahsan Hasan and the sons of Ahsan Husain. Against this the plaintiffs produced evidence to show that the dispute was between Moin-ud-din Husain and Iftikhar Husain and that it had arisen owing to the gross extravagance of Moin-ud-din Husain, who had become manager of the family property The principal witness produced by the plaintiffs-appellants on this point was Mohammad Razi the nephew of the deceased Mohammad Taki the arbitrator Mohammad Razi was also married to Mohammad Taki's daughter On this point we have no hesitation in accepting the defendant respondents' allegation, as their evidence is corroborated absolutely by the contents of the award itself. The translation of the award (Ex. A-6) in the paper book contains some clear inaccuracies, one of the greatest of which is that at p. 79 line 26, the word "not" has been omitted between the words "shall" and "apply." In discussing the award we shall give the correct translation. The award commences as follows :

"Copy of an award in re .—Saiyed Bande Hasan, son of Saiyed Nurul Hasan v. Saiyed Moin-ud-din Husain and Saiyed Iftikhar Hussain, sons of Saiyed Ahsan Husain."

This is sufficient to show that the dispute was not between Moinuddin Husain and Saiyed Iftikhar Husain, but a dispute between Bande Hasan on the one side and Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain on the other side, and the body of the award shows clearly that it was in respect of the whole of the family property We find therefore against the appellants that it is proved sufficiently that Saiyed Mohammad Taki (his name is wrongly printed as Mohammad Naki) was asked to determine disputes between Saiyad Bande Hasan on the one side and Saiyed Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain on the other side in respect of the whole of the family property

The next point taken by the learned counsel for the appellants is that the award was bad because the whole of the members of the family were not parties to the deed of reference As we have not got more than general evidence as to the reference to refer we cannot say who signed the deed of reference We know, however, who at the time were the members of the family alive who would have interest in the matter The members of the family then alive, who had an interest in the matter, were Husain Bibi the widow of Ahsan Hussain, who may be taken as having been represented for the purposes of a family settlement by her sons Moinuddin Hussain and Iftikhar Husain.

Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Hussain who were clearly parties to the reference.

Madina Bibi the mother of Bande Hasan and Bande Hasan

As we have already pointed out Bande Hasan had in 1880 claimed to represent his mother Madina Bibi and to have obtained all her interest in the property.

There was further Ahmad Bandi the daughter of Tajuddin. Nabi Bandi Tajuddin's wife was dead Ahmad Bandi was the wife of Moinuddin Husain and was sufficiently represented by him.

We consider that the members of the family were all sufficiently represented in the award. The point is of little importance, except in so far as Bande Hasan is concerned, for the plaintiffs, who are the only persons who are objecting claim through Bande Hasan The most that could have been said on this point is that Bande Hasan did not represent his mother Madina Bibi and that this award cannot affect Madina Bibi who is not shown to be a party to it, and that the appellants can set up the title of Madina Bibi as having been subsequently inherited by their father and then by them But they cannot take this position in view of the fact that their father in 1880 asserted that Madina Bibi had no interest in the family property having made over all title which she possessed to him, and the fact that the plaintiffs in the plaint accepted this position in para. 5, where they stated that Madina Bibi gave her entire property to her son Bande Hasan during her lifetime We therefore decide on the second point that Bande Hasan was bound by the award Bande Hasan himself signed the award and the learned counsel for the plaintiffs has abandoned all pleas to the effect that his consent was obtained by fraud or undue influence. We thus have it that Bande Hasan represented his mother Madina Bibi and represented the whole of the branch of the family from Madina Bibi We further have it that he was bound by the award We now have to consider the award. After stating that disputes had arisen after the death of Ahsan Husain between his sons (that is to say Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain) and his stepbrother (that is to say Bande Hasan, the translator has incorrectly written stepbrothers) and that these parties instead of going to Court had agreed to refer their disputes for decision to Saiyed Mohammad Taki, Saiyed Mohammad Taki continues that after giving his full and deliberate consideration to the preservation of the name the family unity and the property and also considering that on account of continuous and long mutual disputes the property was sure to be ruined owing to debts and costs and to prevent disunion among the family, he Mohammad Taki, decides (the translation says "proposes") as follows :

He distributed the property in Fatehpur District, that is to say in the village of Kura in the following sharers He gave to Bande Hasan a three annas share and that was all which he gave to that branch. He divided the remaining thirteen annas share as follows :

A share of five annas and six pies to Iftikhar Husain

A share of three annas and six pies to Moinuddin Hussain

He gave Hausan Bibi, Ashan Husain's widow, a share of two annas for life, and

He gave Ahmad Bandi, the daughter of Tajuddin and the wife of Moinuddin Husain, a share of two annas for life

He added that none of these persons had a right of transfer, nor was one of these persons competent to encumber the property. As will be seen later this restriction was only to be binding upon the persons mentioned This disposed of the Kura property He then proceeded to dispose of the remaining property This would be the Rae Bareli property He said that he left that property

"undivided as it was in the life-time of Mir Ahsan Husain and the entire affairs relating to zamindari property pertaining to Jais . . . , and also household affairs shall remain joint."

He added here that the entire affairs relating to Kura should also remain joint. We have no difficulty in determining the meaning here He had awarded shares in Kura in a manner unauthorized by the Imamia law. We shall discuss later a possible reason for his taking this course When he came to the Jais property he left the shares as they were under the Imamia law. Now it is to be noticed that the shares in the Jais property had been settled by the litigation from 1880 and he made no alteration in those shares The question of shares, however, did not cover the question of management and he left the management of the property as it had been before, that is to say to the head of the family In para 3 while leaving the management to the head of the family he laid down that the quota of profits should be handed over to each sharer, but that any accumulated funds should be used for the improvement of the property and in para 4 he placed as the first charge upon the income the payment of the interest on debts incurred by Ahsan Husain In para 5 he provided for the possibility of disputes and stated that if any member of the family were dissatisfied with the apportionment of the profits he could recover his profits from the lambardar. The head of the family had formerly been the lambardar, but he now appointed a new lambardar and he introduced a provision that if the members of the family were dissatisfied with the lambardar they could by a majority of votes appoint a new lambardar with the approval of Government In para 6 he provided for the appointment of a lambardar as distinct from the manager He directed that Iftikhar Husain and not Moinuddin Hussain, should be appointed lambardar and he directed that Bande Hasan should be appointed Sarbarahkar, that is to say, superintendent over the smaller details and here he put in a very important clause which has not been correctly translated He said :

" Every person, who is meant by me to be a cosharer in the property, can get his share in the village divided according to his share in the profits fixed."

We have no doubt that this is the literal meaning of the words The translator has said : "can get the profits divided" but the words are "can get the share divided according to the share in the profits." He added here that certain expenses were to remain as a joint charge upon the whole property In para. 7 he laid down subsequent rules as to succession He stated that on the death of Hasan Bibi her share was to devolve equally upon Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain and that upon the death of Ahmad Bande her share was to go to her male issue and in absence of her male issue her famale issue was to get maintenance only. He laid down that after Bande Hasan, Moinuddin Husain and Iftikhar Husain their male issue only were to succeed He stated that the restriction upon transfer was not to apply to subsequent successors He laid down other provisions which are unimportant.

The learned counsel for the appellants has asked us to place the following construction on this award His case is in the first place that as far as the will of Kura is concerned, this is really the only important point, the arbitrator divided the profits only, and did not divide the property. We are unable to accept this On our construction he clearly divided the village of Kura into separate shares. His next plea was that if we accept the construction which we have accepted, to the effect that separate shares were awarded in the village of Kura the award is bad in law His argument here was that the award on this construction is absolutely opposed to the Imamia law and as such cannot be upheld The law on the subject of the validity of award has been discussed in a large number of reported cases. We consider it sufficient to refer only in this connexion to certain authoritative decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee These are contained in the decisions in : Muhammad Newaz Khan v Alam Khan (2), Mokund Ram Sukal v Salıq Ram Sukal (3), Jafri Begam v Ali Raza (4) and Champsey Bhara and Co v Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co Ltd (5)

In Muhammad Newaz v. Alam Khan (2) their Lordships say at p 77 (of 18 I. A.).

"The plaintiffs then rely on misconduct of the arbitrator as invalidating his award. There is no independent case or testimony to sustain or, indeed to give colour to such a charge. They merely rely on the award itself as showing such partiality and making such statements as to amount to misconduct That contention seems to be mainly founded on an entire misconception of the agreement to arbitrate. It was not an agreement that the arbitrator was to be controlled in his decision by any custom or Mahomadan law, or otherwise. It was an agreement to refer the matter in dispute generally to his decision. He appears to have decided according to what he conceived was the wish and intention of the deceased Maddat Khan. He was within his right in so doing. Some criticizms have been offered on some of the reasons assigned by the arbitrator for arriving at his decision These criticizms even if justified, could not amount to any proof of misconduct. The arbitrator appears to have acted on the broad view of giving effect to the deceased's intentions. He was selected by reason of his knowledge of the circumstances of the family. Their Lordships see no ground for imputing misconduct to him."

In Makund Ram Sukal v. Salıq Ram Sukal (3), their Lordships laid down that even where an award might be held to be ultra vires consent of the persons affected would validate it. Here it is true that we do not know more than generally what was the nature of the disputes referred to Mohammad Taki We are on firm ground in finding that one portion of the dispute related to the title in the village of Kura We know that Bande Hasan was the person who had made the complaint That is clear from the fact that his name appears as what may be conveniently called the name of the plaintiff. It is true that the award does not apply the rule of succession contained in the Imamia law. We are not in a position to know why Mohammad Taki awarded Bande Hasan a 3-annas share when apparently under the provisions of the Imamia law he was entitled to an 8-annas share in the village of Kura A suggestion can be made by way of surmise that he was affected by the view that Madina Bibi, although married legally to Nurul Hasan, was not as a matter of fact of the same status as her husband This, however, is merely a surmise We do not know what was operating in the mind of Mohammad Taki This much, however, we know. Bande Hasan had asked Mahommad Taki to decide his claims to the village of Kura and also to certain other claim. Mohammad Taki awarded him 3-annas share only in the village of Kura Bande Hasan signed the award Mutation took place in accordance with the terms of the award. Bande Hasan at no time objected to the award and died with his name recorded as in possession of a 3-annas share in Kura.

We have, however, to consider whether there is anything in the subsequent decision in Champsey Bhara and Co. v. Jivraj Ballo Spinning & Weaving Co. Ltd. (5) which should modify the view of the law which we have taken. We do not find that there is anything in that decision which should modify our views Their Lordships there distinguished the decision in Landaur v Asser (6) and approved the decision in Hodgkinson v Fernie (7). They stated that an award could be set aside on an error in law on the face of the award They interpreted the words "error in law on the face of the award" to mean that if there is the award or document actually incorporated thereto (as for instance a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment) some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and that legal proposition is erroneous there is an "error in law on the face of the award." But there is nothing in that decision which affects this award. If Muhammad Taki had stated in the award that he was awarding the shares according to the rule of intestate succession in the Imamia law and then proceeded to arrive at the award which he actually made there might have been an error in law But he nowhere suggested that he was following the Imamia law. He was following his own views as to what was right and proper in the circumstances of the family, and such being the the case there can be no error in law In any circumstances it would be difficult for the learned counsel for the appellants to show that this plea is open to him in view of the provisions of Art 91, Sch 1, Act 9, 1908 We have still to refer to the decision in Jafri Begam v Ali Raza (4). Their Lordships laid down at p. 118 (of 28 I A) that in the case before them in which under the terms of an award a certain lady was directed not to effect partition of property which was partible under the personal law to which she was subject the restraint could not bind her son although it might have bound herself. The argument here would be that the attempt of the arbitrator to lay down restraints upon transfer and to set up a succession unknown to the Imamia law vitiated the whole award We are of opinion that this attempt did not have the effect of vitiating the whole award It may well be argued that the provisions in respect to succession have no effect We express no opinion as to whether they have any effect or not We are concerned here only with the question as to whether that portion of the award which gave Bande Hasan a share of 3-annas in the village of Kura is binding upon the plaintiffs as the sons of Bande Hasan.

We can sum up our arguments and our conclusions here The plaintiffs have attacked the award on account of an alleged technical misconduct by the arbitrator Their learned counsel has not imputed misconduct in the ordinary sense of the term. He has recognized the honesty of Mohammad Taki, the arbitrator. The only misconduct which he alleges is the technical misconduct of applying a perverse view of the law We find apart from the point of limitation that there was no such misconduct We further find that the consent of Bande Hasan operates as a bar to the plaintiffs in respect to the extent of the share in Kura. We do not find that the award is bad on the ground of an error of law, and we further find that although, certain restrictions in the award may not have been operative, the award is operative as confining the title of Bande Hasan to a 3-annas share in the village of Kura and preventing his sons asserting a claim to a greater share

The disposition can also be supported as a family settlement, but we need not go into that question in detail We find that the transactions constituted a family settlement This disposes of the major part of the appeal It is to be noted that the descendants of Ahmad Bandi who were defendants 2 to 4 in the trial Court did not contest the plaintiffs' suit and filed a written statement supporting the plaintiffs' claim There are two points in the appeal which remain to be considered The first point as to the share in what is known as the Kothi in Jais and other town lands in Jais with such buildings as there are upon them, that is to say the property in list B of the plaint. The second point is as to the property in list C obtained under the mortgage rights in the Rae Bareli District On these points the appeal must succeed There is nothing in the award Ex A-6 which militates against the appellants' claim to this property Mohammad Taki, the arbitrator, left their shares in all the property with the exception of Kura as they had been before and under the Imamia law the appellants are entitled to an 8-annas share in the property in lists B and C This portion of the appeal affects only defendants 1 to 5 As has already been stated defendants 2 to 4 did not contest and the contest here is only on behalf of the defendants 1 and 5. The position taken by defendants 1 and 5 is somewhat pecular. Their main pleas referred only to the Kothi in Jais which was admittedly built during the period that Moinuddin Husain was manager of the family The peculiarity of their position is this They have asserted that this Kothi was constructed with funds provided by Moinuddin Husain himself. There is little evidence as to the source of these funds but they must have been either family funds or Moinuddin Husain's private money If the funds were family funds the plaintiffs are entitled to an 8-annas share in the Kothi If the funds were not family funds the structure was the individual property of Moinuddin Husain and defendants 1 and 5 have admittedly no title to succeed Moinuddin Husain. Moinuddin Husain's heirs are represented by defendants 2 to 4 and defendants 2 to 4 support the plaintiffs's claim Further Zaki Jan, who was defendant 2 and who has not been impleaded as a respondent, who himself was one of the heirs of Moinuddin Husain having married Khatun Bandi, now deceased, the daughter of Ahmad Bandi, has deposed distinctly that although Moinuddin Husain got the Kothi built with his own money the Kothi was built for the benefit of all the members of the family as it was used by all—see his evidence at p. 37. Thus defendants 1 and 5 who are the only persons concerned in contesting this portion of the appeal have had to fall back on the plea that the plaintiffs' case in respect of the Kothi is barred under the provisions of O 2, R. 2 because no relief was sought in respect of the Kothi when Bande Hasan instituted his suit in 1880 We have already dealt with that plea We have further to note in this connexion that the Kothi in question was not built until many years after 1880 The appeal must succeed in respect of the property in list B

It must equally succeed in respect of the property in list C The property here was property which was acquired by Nurul Hasan himself It is distinctly family property and the appellants are entitled to a share of 8-annas in it

The result is that the decree of the learned trial Judge is modified. The appellants will be given a decree for an 8-annas in the property in list B and an 8-annas share in the property in list C. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed, and the decree of the lower Court is upheld.

We now come to the question of costs. The principal contesting respondent was Kuar Chandra Bhukhan Singh a transferee of 9-annas in the village of Kura The case against him was rightly dismissed He was rightly awarded his costs in the Court below The plaintiffs-appellants will pay his costs in this appeal. As against Wilayat Husain and Mt. Kazmi Begam, the suit was rightly dismissed in respect of the Kura property but should have been decreed against the remaining property They will receive and pay costs in this Court and the Court below according to their own success and failure. It is to be noted that they were represented jointly in the Court below. Here they have been represented separately as defendant 5's case differs from the case of her husband defendant 1 Costs will be awarded separately in this Court in respect of these two respondents. Except as already stated the plaintiffs-appellants will pay their own costs.

Second Appeal No 23 of 1928, Decided on 20th July 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, D/- 14th October 1927

(a) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), S 48—Hindu female dying leaving no heirs through husband—Her nearest relative through father sharing in cultivating her holding—After her death Court of Wards leasing out holding before expiry of five years—Such lease was inoperative.

A Hindu female who was the tenant of the land in dispute had died issueless, and there were no heirs of her husband existing. The only collateral heirs of the lady were to be found in the family of her father. H was the nearest relation amongst them who had also shared in the cultivation of the holding with the deceased. Before the expiry of five years after her death the Court of Wards had granted a lease of the land to another person.

Held: that H was the heir of the deceased within the meaning of S 48 and was therefore entitled as such to retain occupation of the holding for five years after her death. The Court of Wards could not under these circumstances be considered to be entitled to give a lease of the said land to any person during that period, and the same was inoperative.

Judgment—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain plots of land situate in village Bansi District Partabgarh, and for damages. The plaintiff-appellant alleged that he had obtained a lease, dated 22nd March 1925, in respect of the land in suit from the Court of Wards and that the defendants-respondents had no title to the said plots and were not, therefore, entitled to remain in possession thereof The defendants contended that they were the heirs of one Mt Maharaji who was the tenant of the land in dispute and had died issueless in the month of February 1925, and they were, therefore, entitled to remain in occupation of the said land for five years from the date of her death, under S 48, Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886) They also contended that they had shared with her in the cultivation of the tenancy as required by the said section to qualify them for being her heirs The plaintiff denied that the defendants were heirs of Mt Maharaji or that they had shared with her in the cultivation of the holding.

The main point, therefore, for decision in the trial Court was whether the defendants-respondents could be considered to be the heirs of Mt Maharaji within the meaning of S 48, Oudh Rent Act

The learned Munsif of Partabgarh who tried the suit came after recording the evidence to the finding that Mt Maharaji had died childless, that there were no heirs of her husband existing, that the only collateral heirs of the lady were to be found in the family of her father and that defendant 1, Harpal, was the nearest relation amongst them He also found that he (Harpal) had shared in the cultivation of the holding with the deceased, Mt Maharaji On these findings he held that the defendants-respondents were the heirs of the deceased lady within the meaning of S 48, Oudh Rent Act and that the Court of Wards had no right to give the lease of the land in dispute to the plaintiff without having allowed the defendants to hold the said land for five years from the date of Mt. Maharaji's death. He, therefore, held the lease executed by the Court of Wards in favour of the plaintiff to be void and inoperative and consequently dismissed the plaintiff's suit

The plaintiff carried the matter further in appeal, and the learned Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh by his decision, dated 14th October 1927, agreed with the findings arrived at by the learned Munsiff and in result dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

The matter has now been brought before us in second appeal, and it is contended again on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the defendants-respondents are not the heirs of Mt. Maharaji, as found by the Courts below

We have heard the arguments of the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant at great length, and have come to the conclusion that the findings arrived at by the Court's below on the question of heirship of the defendants-respondents are correct It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that Mt Maharaji died issueless, and that there was no heir out of her husband's relations now existing. It was urged that there was no evidence on the record in proof of this assertion. We went through the evidence on the record, and we found that P W 1 Abid Husain, distinctly stated that he knew that there was nobody surviving her (Mt. Maharaji's) husband's family This was elicited in the cross-examination of the said witness Harpal Shukla who is defendant 1 in this case, went into the witness-box and the plaintiff himself put this question to him and he stated that he had beeu to Gareri and had inquired from one Pandohi, a member of Mt Maharaji's family whether anybody belonging to her husband's family was still alive, and he received the information that there was none It may be that this evidence may not be strictly admissible in evidence, but there can be no doubt on the evidence of plaintiff's witness 1 that there was no person now living who might be said to belong to Mt Maharaji's husband's family. Indeed the plaintiff-appellant himself has not been able to point to any such person beyond a mere assertion that such heirs might still be in existence We are, therefore, of opinion that the finding arrived at by the Courts below on this point is quite correct, and that Mt Maharaji died issueless and that at the time of her death there was no person living who might be said to belong to her husband's family.

We have now to determine whether under those circumstances the defendants, who are members of the family of Mt Maharaji's father can be considered to be her heirs. In support of this position we may refer to the followiug three rulings: Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi Ammal (1), Ganpat Rama v Secretary of State (2) and Moti Chand v. Kalikanand Singh (3).

It has been clearly held, in these cases, that in the case of stridhan property on the death of a childless Hindu female, the property devolves first on her husband's heirs, if there are no other nearer heirs; and on failure of those heirs it devolves on the blood relations of the deceased There can be no doubt that the defendants-respondents being related to Ballu Shukla, the father of Mt. Maharaji, are such relations of the lady, and are, therefore, her heirs.

It has also been found by both the Courts below that defendant-respondent 1 Harpal, shared in the cultivation of the holding with the deceased Mt Maharaji This finding has not been contested before us Indeed it could not, as it was based upon the evidence on the record The result is that the defendant-respondents are the heirs of Mt. Maharaji within the meaning of S. 48, Oudh Rent Act and are, therefore, entitled as such to retain occupation of the holding for five years after her death. The Court of Wards cannot, under those circumstances, be considered to be entitled to give a lease of the said land to any person during that period. As the lease given by the Court of Wards is inoperative, the plaintiff-appellant is not entitled to recover possession of the land cultivated by Mt Maharaji aud his suit has been, therefore, rightly dismissed.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Referring Order .—This is a second appeal, arising out of a suit for possession of certain plots of land in village Rukmangadpur and for Rs 100 on account of damages brought by the plaintiff-appellant taluqdar against the defendant on the allegation that the latter had wrongfully taken possession of the land in suit in July 1926 The defence was that the suit was not cognizable by the civil Court inasmuch as the defendant held the land as a tenant under a patta dated 9th December 1925, executed in his favour by Hafizullah Khan, who held a theka of the village from the plaintiff

The trial Court held that Hafizullah Khan had no authority under the terms of the thekanama in his favour to let out the land to tenants and, therefore, the patta granted by him to the defendant was invalid Thus in its opinion the defendant was a trespasser and the suit was cognizable by the civil Court The learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda on appeal disagreed with the opinion of the trial Court and held that as the plaintiff had failed to prove that the defendant was aware of the incompetency of the thekadar to grant leases he must be deemed to have acted in good faith in taking the patta from him and that under the circumstances he must be considered to hold the land as a tenant.

The only question which arises for determination in the appeal is whether the patta granted by the thekadar is valid and binding on the plaintiff. If the question is decided against the plaintiff it will follow that the status of the defendant is that of a tenant and in that case the suit would obviously be not cognizable by the civil Court The learned Subordinate Judge has based his decision on the Selected Decisions of the Board of Revenue No 9 of 1892 [Lal v Raja Udey Partab Udya Dutta Singh (1)] and a decision of a single Judge of this Court in Gur Saran v Jagannath (2), which approves the above-mentioned decision of the Board of Revenue I am not aware of any provision of law imposing the duty upon a landlord to proclaim to his tenantry the restrictions imposed by him on the powers of his thekadars Both these cases seem to have overlooked the provisions of S. 8, Oudh Rent Act, which show that pattas granted to tenants must be signed either by the landlord or his authorized agent. Cl 10 of the thekanama distinctly provides that pattas granted to tenants without the consent and signature of the landlord would be invalid I do not think that it can be possible to treat the thekadar as an authorized agent in the face of a distinct provision preventing him from granting pattas on his own authority It is admitted in this case that no sanction was obtained from the plaintiff nor did she sign the patta relied upon by the defendant It is settled law that powers-of-attorney and other similar instruments should be construed strictly: —see Bowstead on Agency, 6th edition p. 73 and Story's Commentaries on the Law of Agency, 9th edition p 84 I think the same principle should govern the construction of document like the thekanama in the present case In Cooper v Martin (3) it was held that

" Courts of equity will never uphold an act which will defeat what the person creating the power has declared, by express or necessary implication, to be a material part of his intention."

(3) [1867] 3 Ch. 47 = 17 L. T. 587 = 16 W. R. 234.

In Farwell on Powers, 3rd edition, at p. 382, referring to a case, which I have not been able to find in the library, the learned author says.

"In Lawrnesson v. Butler (4) a tenant for life had power to lease with consent ; he agreed to grant a lease, without having obtained the consent. The Court refused to aid."

In the present case the plaintiff's intention seems to be clear that the thekadar should not have the power to grant pattas. The view taken by the lower Court defeats this intention of the landlord. I am doubtful if the view taken in the cases referred to above is in consonance with the sound principles of law. I think it is desirable that there should be an authoritative pronouncement of a Bench of two Judges on the question involved in the appeal I therefore certify the case as a fit one for being heard by a Bench of two Judges under S. 14, Oudh Courts Act

Judgment. — The decision of this second appeal has been referred by a Judge of this Court to a Bench in view of the importance of the point raised and in view of the fact that he considered that a decision of a single Judge of this Court should be examined The facts are simple Rani Krishna Devi is the owner of the village of Rukmangadpur in the Gonda District She gave a theka of this village to a certain Hafiz-ullah Khan This theka was from 30th November 1922 to 31st July 1926. On 9th December 1925 Hafiz-ullah Khan granted a lease over the holding in suit to Tirbhuwan Dat This lease was for the cultivation of the holding. It was a lease for the remainder of the agricultural year and expired on 31st July 1926. Hafiz-ullah Khan continued in possession after the expiration of his theka He was subsequently ejected by Rani Krishna Devi in July 1927 Tirbhuwan Dat continued to hold cultivating possession over the holding and refused to vacate it when required to do so by Rani Krishna Devi. She accordingly sued to eject him as a trespasser on 2nd July 1927. The main question in dispute in this appeal is whether Tribhuwan Dat is to be treated as a trespasser who can be ejected by the civil Court or whether he is to be treated as a tenant who can only be ejected by the revenue Court. The learned Munsiff found that he was a trespasser, ordered his ejectment and awarded damages against him The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal found that he was a tenant and that the civil Court had no jurisdiction. He accordingly dismissed the suit The present appeal is preferred The argument put forward on behalf of the appellant is as follows: Her case is that in the thekanama granted by her to Hafiz-ullah Khan there was a clause in which it was stated distinctly that no leases issued by the thekadar would be valid or binding unless they were approved and countersigned by her. Apart from that it is argued that as soon as Hafiz-ullah Khan's theka came to an end any rights which Tirbhuwan Dat had obtained from Hafiz-ullah Khan terminated also, and that after the conclusion of Hafiz-ullah Khan's theka Tirbhuwan Dat became a trespasser The learned counsel for Tirbhuwan Dat has replied that the lease granted by Hafiz-ullah Khan was a good lease whatever may have been stated in the thekanama inasmuch as under the provisions S 188, Contract Act (Act 9 of 1872) Hafiz-ullah Khan had necessarily authority to lease the land which he was holding in theka How far this argument would be of avail in view of the distinct assertion in the thekanama that he should not issue such leases without the authority of the lady it is not necessary to discuss as we are not concerned with the period during which Tirbhuwan Dat cultivated the land that was included in the period of Hafiz-ullah Khan's theka

The learned counsel, however, continues further that when that theka came to an end Thribuwan Dat did not cease to be a tenant but that he acquired under the provisions of S 37, Local Act 22, 1886 (the Oudh Rent Act) the position of a statutory tenant who could not be ejected for ten years His case here is mainly that civil Courts have no jurisdiction Whether the revenue Courts can eject such a tenant is another matter His case is that in no circumstances can a civil Court eject. In support of this view he has referred us to the Selected Decision of the Board of Revenue in the case of Lal v. Raja Udey Partap Udya Singh (1) In that appeal it was decided by Mr J. R Reid, S. M , and Mr. W. Kye, J M that under the provisions of S 37, Local Act, 22, 1886— that section has been since amended but not in such a manner as to affect the argument—a thekadar was a landowner within the meaning of that section and that a lease granted by a thekadar to a tenant gave a statutory right to that tenant. The members of the Board of Revenue noted at the time that their decision was in direct conflict with a decision of Mr. Young ,the then Judicial Commissioner, of Oudh which is reported in Maharaja Jagatji Singh v. Rupal Murai (5) Mr Young took the view that no thekadar could bind his landlord, and that lease executed by him were only effective during the period of the theka. The view of the Board of Revenue was accepted by Pullan, J , in Gursaran v Jagannath (2), but this finding was not absolutely essential to the decision of the appeal by Pullan, J., as in that case the landlord had accepted rent from a person whom the thekadar had put in possession We are unable to accept the view taken by the Board of Revenue We have considered that view with special care out of respect for the two distinguished members of the Board who were parties to that decision But we cannot see how it is possible to hold the view that a thekadar can create the right of statutory tenancy The decision appears to us to turn upon the provisions of another section of Local Act 22 of 1886

The rights conferred upon tenants by S 37 cannot be acquired by a person holding land as a thekadar, mortgagee or sub-tenant This right is enumerated amongst other rights in S. 67 and S. 68 says that a person holding land as a thekadar, mortgagee or sub-tenant shall not, while so holding acquire any of the rights enumerated in the last foregoing section in any of the land comprised in his theka, mortgage or sub-tenancy. What was the position of Hafizullah Khan in respect of the holding in question. He was the thekadar of that holding. In other words he was a tenant of that holding The holding had come into his possession because he had ejected the last holder. When it came into his possession it was open to him either to cultivate himself or to transfer its cultivation to another person He transferred its cultivation to Tirbhuwan Dat and Tirbhuwan Dat clearly became sub-tenant of the holding. It is true that as tenant-in-chief Hafiz-ullah Khan was landlord of the holding in reference to Tirbhuwan Dat, who was sub-tenant of the holding because Thrbhuwan Dat had to pay his rent to him as tenant-in-chief but Tirbhuwan Dat was a sub-tenant and as a sub-tenant he could acquire no rights. It is clear that when Hafiz-Ullah's theka expired Tirbhuwan Dat's sub-tenancy expired Tirbhuwan Dat then became a trespasser and as a trespasser he can be ejected by a civil Court The learned counsel for Tirbhuwan Dat has pointed out that if we decide that he is not a tenant we are deciding a question which would fall within the purview of the revenue Courts It is impossible to avoid such seeming conflict in Oudh, for if the revenue Court decided that he was not a trespasser it would be deciding a question which is within the purview of the civil Courts We consider that it is within the purview of the civil Courts to decide that he is a trespasser Of course if we had decided that he was not a trespasser but a tenant we should have dismissed the suit as not within our jurisdiction. But in order to decide whether he is or is not trespasser we are inevitably obliged to look into the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court and restore the decision of the learned Munsif Tirbhuwan Dat will pay his own costs and those of the appellant in all Courts

Judgment—The matters in dispute between the parties to this appeal have been discussed at great length both in the judgments of the trial Court and the lower appellate Court; but the actual points for decision by us can be stated very shortly. The river Ghogra flows between the village of Raunahi in the Fyzabad District and villages of Gonda District It is now accepted by both sides that in relation to alluvial accretions the midstream rule applies Thus any land which is added to Raunahi by alluvial accretion belongs to Raunahi, wherever it may come from on the Gonda side Here we are concerned with land which has so been added to Raunahi and the dispute is as to whether that land belongs to all the zemindars of Raunahi in proportion to their shares or only to certain favoured individuals, who in a previous suit many years ago asserted their rights The land to which those persons then asserted their rights has now ceased to exist It has gone back into the river but in its place other land has been since thrown up There can be no question here of res judicata or estoppel It is perfectly clear to us that every zemindar in Raunahi has a right to his share in this alluvial land according to his interest in the village and the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to their share in this manner. Many other points have been raised before us, but it is unnecessary to discuss them as upon this broad principle we can decide the appeal, Para. 4, Regn 11 of 1825 does not affect the case. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed accordingly with costs

We now come to the cross-objection The trial Court arrived at a conclusion, which we cannot accept, to the effect that a certain number known as 598, which is an area of 209 bighas odd, was the sole property of the owners of patti Raunahi. We find no reason to accept that view which is based, in our opinion, upon an incorrect conclusion as to the law. The plaintiffs-respondents have filed a cross-objection in this respect; but, in our opinion, they cannot enforce this, except against that portion of these 209 bighas as is in possession of the defendants-appellants They cannot enforce this, in our opinion, against their fellow respondents but only against the appellants. The matter is most unimportant. If they succeed in full in their objections they would obtain 11 bighas more of absolutely worthless land, but as it is we award them all to which they are entitled, that is 2 bighas of absolutely worthless land as against the defendants-appellants. The costs of the cross-objection will be borne by the parties

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit by a wife belonging to the Shia sect against her husband, who belongs to the Sunni faith, for dissolution of marriage on the ground that the husband had accused her of committing adultery and of her leading an unchaste life. The parties belong to respectable families but unfortunately their married life has been an unhappy one. They have been living separate for a long time In 1912 the defendant husband instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights The wife in her defence pleaded that she had been divorced and that the husband had been treating her very cruelly. The plea of divorce was rejected but legal cruelty was proved and the suit for restitution was dismissed on that ground. Some years later in 1920 the plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that she had been divorced and in the alternative for cancellation of the marriage on the ground of legal cruelty It was held that the plea of divorce was barred by res judicata by reason of the decision in the previous suit and that the claim for cancellation of marriage on the ground of legal cruelty was time barred On 10th October 1925 the husband filed a complaint in the criminal Court under S 498, Penal Code, against one Abdul Wahid on the allegation that the accused had been detaining his wife with criminal intent Abdul Wahid was convicted by the trying Magistrate The conviction was upheld by the Sessions Judge but was set aside by this Court on the ground that the case did not fall within S 498 of the Code The plaintiff based her claim for dissolution of marriage in the present case on the imputations which had been made by the defendant in the above-mentioned complaint in the criminal Court In the beginning a plea of legal cruelty was also raised but it was abandoned in the trial Court and, therefore, we are no longer concerned with it

As regards the ground about the husband having accused her of adultery and infidelity, we have to note that the plaintiff in her plaint does not say one word either admitting the accusations made against her or alleging that they were false The defendant in his written statement pleaded that he had made the accusation in good faith and said that he withdrew his previous statements unconditionally. As much of the arguments in this appeal have been based upon the attitude taken up by the defendant in his defence it would be useful to reproduce the relevant portions of the written statement below :

" Para 16. The defendant filed a complaint against Abdul Wahid Khan, mentioned in para. 10 of the plaint, in good faith on the basis of certain facts within his personal knowledge and of some facts which he learnt on reliable information and the defendant brought no accusation against the plaintiff knowing it to be wrong, groundless and false. "

" Para 18. If it be proved that the defendant had brought any false charge against the plaintiff in the complaint, mentioned in para. 10 of the plaintiff, or on any other occasion, the defendant withdraws such charges and expresses his regret for the same. "

" Para 19. This suit has not been brought by the plaintiff in good faith. The plaintiff has been making effort to get the marriage dissolved in any way but she remained unsuccessful up to this time. Now the plaintiff tries to do the same in another way so that the marriage be cancelled and the plaintiff may have every freedom but the defendant wishes to maintain the relationship of husband and wife between the parties and if it be held that the plaintiff is entitled to sue for cancellation of marriage even if the charge brought against her be true, the defendant withdraws those charges unconditionally. "

On the date on which the issues were framed the defendant's counsel made the following statement in explanation of the pleas contained in the written statement:

"The defendant never made any false imputation. The defendant only filed a complaint against Abdul Wahid Khan to the effect that the plaintiff was being detained by him for adultery. This imputation was not false and does not give rise to any cause of action. If true imputation can give rise to the cause of action, the defendant withdraws it. Even if the imputation was false the defendant withdraws it unconditionally."

Neither of the parties produced any oral evidence The arguments were heard by the learned Munsif on 5th and 6th December 1927 It appears that in the course of the arguments it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the imputations were false and the defendant thereupon made two applications to the trial Court one on 5th December and the other on the following day In the application made on 5th December it was stated that

"the defendant unconditionally withdrew all his words and statements made in any application or in any Court on any occasion from which it might be inferred that the defendant made any imputation about the plaintiff having committed adultery with Abdul Wahid or with any other person and expressed his regret and prayed that the plaintiff's suit might be dismissed."

Again in his application made on 6th December he stated that "he had filed the complaint in good faith believing the facts mentioned therein to be true, the defendant himself not being an eye-witness of the ocurrence . that since however it was argued for the plaintiff that the imputation was false the defendant now unconditionally withdrew the said imputation with these words that it was false and the defendant was sorry for it."

The learned Munsif in a careful and well-considered judgment decided that a true imputation of unchastity cannot annul the marriage and the plaintiff having made no attempt to show that the imputation against her was false and in any case the imputation having been withdrawn, the plaintiff could not get a decree for dissolution of marriage On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the defendant having in his application dated 6th December 1927 admitted the imputation to be false it was not necessary for the plaintiff to give any evidence to prove it to be so but agreed with the trial Court that there had been a valid retraction and, therefore, the suit had been rightly thrown out.

The plaintiff comes here in second appeal Two contentions have been urged by her learned counsel in support of the appeal. The first is that the Shia law should govern decision of the dispute and that according to that law the retraction by the husband cannot under any circumstances nullify the effect of the imputation of adultery on the dissolution of the marriage tie The second contention is that there has been no valid retraction in the present case.

In support of the first contention he has referred to Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, 8th edition, p 12, where the learned author says that a Sunni woman contracting marriage with a Shia does not thereby become subject to the Shia law and that the same proposition would hold good of a Shia woman marrying a Sunni We accept this proposition as perfectly correct but it is of no help in determining the rule of law which should govern decision of a dispute between the parties one of whom is a Shia and the other a Sunni It is not necessary for us to arrive at a definite decision on this point because, as we will show presently there is no material difference between the Shia and the Sunni law on the question of retraction as it arose in the present case However, we are inclined to think that in a case like the present the question at issue should be determined by reference to the law of the sect to which the defendant belongs

Then, as regards the alleged difference between the Shia and the Sunni law the learned counsel for the appellant has referred us to Baillie's Digest of Imamia Law, p 157 The passage referred to is as follows :

"If he should give himself the lie, or retract in the midst of the lian or refuse to take it, the liability to hudd is established against him, but none of the other consequences are established . . If he should give himself the lie, or retract after the lian the child's paternity is restored, and with it his right of inheritance but neither the father, nor any one related through him can inherit to the child, while the mother, and those related through her, retain their right of inheritance to him. Her wifehood, however, does not return, nor is there any abatement of the prohibition."

As against this he has referred to Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, Book 4, Chap. 10, p 125. The passage referred to is as follows :

"If, after imprecation, the husband should acknowledge that his accusation was false, by saying, 'I falsely laid adultery to her charge,' he becomes privileged with respect to her, that is to say, it is lawful for him to marry her as well as any other person. This is according to

Hanifa and Muhmamad. Abu Yusuf says that she is for ever prohibited to him, and that he cannot marry her, the prophet having said, "those who make imprecation can never come together, which shows the separation established between them to be perpetual; wherefore his marriage with her is illegal."

On the authority of the extracts quoted above it has been argued by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that according to the Shia law the status of a wife does not return even after retraction nor is there any abatement of the prohibition against any remarriage between the parties thereafter, whereas according to the Sunni Law, at least according to Abu Hanifa and Muhammad, they can remarry after the retraction Apart from the difference between Abu Hanifa and Muhammad on the one hand and Abu Yusuf on the other the alleged difference between the Shia and the Sunni law is of no consequence in the present case, firstly because the retraction referred to in the authorities quoted is retraction after lian and secondly because the difference, if any, is as regards remarriage with which we are not concerned in this case We must accordingly hold that the plaintiff has failed to cite any authority in support of the proposition that under the Shia law a retraction by the husband cannot under any circumstances nullify the effect of the imputation of adultery on the dissolution of the marriage tie We therefore overrule the contention

The second contention as regards the validity of the retraction makes it necessary for us to make a reference to the law and procedure relating to lian as laid down in the authoritative works on Muhammadan law. In Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, Book 4, Chap 10, p 124, the form of imprecation and the manner of making it is stated in the following terms

"The manner of imprecation is as follows—The Kazee first applies to the husband, who is to give evidence four separate times, by saying, 'I call to witness to the truth of my testimony concerning the adultery with which I charge this woman:' and again, a fifth time, 'may the curse of God fall upon me if I have spoken falsely concerning the adultery with which I charge this woman,'—after which the Kazee requires the woman to give evidence, four separate times by saying "I call God to witness that my husband's words are altogether false, respecting the adultery with which he charges me"; and again, a fifth time "may the wrath of God alight upon me if my husband is just in bringing a charge of adultery against me" . . . . . And on both making imprecation in this manner, a separation takes place between them; but not until the Kazee pronounces a decree to that effect"

In an earlier passage in the same chapter it is laid down that "It is also a condition of imprecation that the wife require her husband to produce the ground of his accusation . . . . and if he decline it, the Magistrate must imprison him until he either make an imprecation, or acknowledge the falsity of his charge by saying "I falsely attributed adultery to her" as this is a right due from him to his wife."

It is stated further on

"If a husband after imprecation, contradict himself by acknowledging that he had accused his wife falsely, let the Magistrate punish him because he then acknowledges himself liable to punishment."

The Right Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali in his work on Mahomedan Law, 4th edition at p 595 remarked as follows.

"When both the parties have taken the oath in the prescribed form and the charge has been conclusively established, the Kazi must draw up an order of separation between the parties, and in accordance with such decree, the husband must divorce his wife. If he refuse to do so, the Judge himself is to pronounce a divorce between them. The marriage, however, continues in existence with all its concomitant rights until the Judge has made the order. All the schools are agreed in the opinion that proceeding by imprecation can be validly effected only before the Kazi or Hakim, and that until he has made his order dissolving the marriage, it continues intact.

Khan Bahadur Mahomad Yusoof Khan in his Mohamedan Law (Tagore Law Lectures, 1891-92), Vol 3, p 352, explains the reason of the rule as follows:

"The husband having accused the wife of a Zina, he would have been liable to the punishment of kuzuf or slander but for this procedure, and, therefore, the punishment for slander is extinguished and lian takes its place—and so far as the woman is concerned, her evidence or testimony standing in the place of Hudd-i-zina, that is, the punishment for zina having extinguished, lian takes the place of the punishment for zina so far as the woman is concerned, because to invoke God, when giving evidence, is more destructive in its effect than punishment "

It is obvious that in the changed circumstances of the present day it cannot be possible to follow the letter of the original Islamic law We are in entire agreement with the observations of Sir Pramada Charan Banerji, J , in the case of Zafar Husain v Ummatur-Rahman (1), that

" the Mahomedan Law of evidence being no longer in force and the ordinary Courts having taken the place of Kazis, these Courts are the authorities which would make a decree for divorce on being satisfied according to the ordinary rules of evidence ; it is unnecessary to comply with the formalities of laan "

But we venture to add that the spirit of the law should be kept in view and the principles underlying it should be adhered to as far as possible

The principles which can safely be deduced from the above rules are, firstly, that mere accusation by the husband cannot affect the relationship of husband and wife between the parties. Dissolution of marriage takes place only by means of a decree for divorce passed by the Kazi for whom we should now substitute our law Courts Secondly, when such accusation is made and the wife moves the Kazi in the matter the husband can either retract the accusation or substantiate it by taking oath and making the imprecation invoking the curse of God upon him if his accusation is false If the husband retracts at this stage he is liable to punishment for slander If, on the other hand, he persists in the accusation and makes the necessary oath and imprecation the said oath and imprecation save him from punishment for slander. After this the wife can either admit the charge in which case she would be liable for punishment for adultery or she can repudiate it by taking oath and imprecation invoking the wrath of God against her if her denial is false In this case her taking the oath and making the imprecation saves her from punishment for adutery. It is only after going through this procedure that the Kazi can pronounce a decree for divorce No doubt the truth or falsity of the charge has to be determined at the present day according to the rules of evidence and procedure governing British Courts of law yet it is clear that when wife appeals to the Court o law for dissolution of marriage the husband is allowed a locus pœnitentiæ before the marriage is dissolved If he avails himself of this locus pœnitentiæ he may be liable for punishment for the slander or defamation but the marriage cannot be dissolved We are supported in this view by the following observations of Sulaiman, J , in Rahima Bibi v Fazil (2).

" The real basis of the procedure of the Mahomedan law seems to be that when the wife appeals to the Kazi and asks for the dissolution of the marriage on the ground that she has been falsely accused by her husband of adultery, it is open to the husband to admit that he had made a false accusation and thereby render himself criminally liable, or to substantiate the accusation."

Now it remains for us to see whether the retraction made in the present case is or is not valid and sufficient. In agreement with both the Courts below we are of opinion that it is valid In para. 16 of his written statement the defendant simply alleged that he acted in good faith in making his complaint against Abdul Wahid Khan which as would appear from the statement made by his pleader in the course of oral pleadings was only to the effect that the plaintiff was being detained by Abdul Wahid Khan for adultery and not that any adultery had actually been committed He justifies his making of the charge but not the charge itself The written statement was unfortunately somewhat argumentative but this much is quite clear that the defendant did not undertake to prove that the accusation was true or that the plaintiff had as a matter of fact committed adultery We think that the subsequent applications made by the defendant on 5th and 6th December 1927 were quite unnecessary However, they confirm the view which we take about the defendant making a retraction and not trying to substantiate the charge.

The learned counsel for the appellant in support of his contention about the retraction being invalid has relied on Rahima Bibi v Fazil (2). That case is quite distinguishable. In that case the defendant denied his making any defamatory statement and wished to make a retraction after evidence on both sides had been recorded. The Court held that the essential element of a retraction is the withdrawal of a statement previously made and as the defendant denied making a defamatory statement he could not make any retraction. It was further held that as the defendant sought to make a retraction at a very late stage and in the light of his conduct during the trial of the case there was no proper retraction In the present case the defandant from the first moment admitted the accusation made by him and although he tried to explain the circumstances under which he made it he made no attempt to substantiate it and on the contrary expressed regret for it.

Lastly, there remains the fact that the defendant raised a plea to the effect that a true accusation does not give rise to any cause of action, though he coupled it with the statement that if a true imputation can give rise to a cause of action the defendant withdrew it We are of opinion that this was merely a legal plea which is also well-founded. One of the conditions laid down under the Mahomedan Law in respect of laan entitling wife to a divorce is that she should be innocent. It follows from this condition that if the accusation is true the wife cannot maintain a claim for divorce on that ground. This view is supported by the decision of the Bombay High Court in Khatijabi v Umarsaheb Anserasaheb (3) This legal plea, therefore, can at best amount only to this that the plaintiff in order to claim a divorce must prove that the accusation made against her was false But in the light of the entire pleadings it cannot mean that the defendant undertook to prove that the accusation was true Under these circumstances we cannot regard the fact of the defendant raising this plea as detracting from the validity of his retraction.

For the above reasons we hold that the retraction was valid and proper and the claim of the plaintiff for dissolution of marriage had been rightly dismissed The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Execution of Decree Appeal No 15 of 1928, Decided on 14th September 1928, from order of Sub-Judge, Kheri, D/- 21st April 1928

Civil P. C., S. 47—Decree against husband —Wife impleaded as representative on his death—Property in her hands attached—Objection by her that the property did not form assets of her husband is one covered by S. 47 and not by O 21, R. 58—Summary rejection is illegal—Civil P. C , O. 21, R. 58.

A decree was passed against a judgment debtor, on whose death, the wife was impleaded as his legal representative. On certain property being attached, the wife filed an objection to the effect that the property in question did not form part of the assets of the deceased judgment-debtor, and hence it was not liable to attachment. The lower Court rejected the objection summarily.

Held . that the objection was one covered by S. 47, and not by O. 21, R 58, as the objector was a party to the execution proceedings as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor The lower Court was wrong in throwing out the objection without considering it on merits. [P 21 C 2]

Judgment —This is an execution of decree appeal by the judgment-debtor. Certain property was attached from the hands of the judgment-debtor on 4th October 1927 On 21st April 1928 the judgment-debtor filed an objection to the effect that the property in question was not liable to attachment in execution of the decree on the ground that the decree was against her husband on whose death she was impleaded as his legal representative and the property in question did not form part of the assets of the deceased judgment-debtor The application purports to have been made under S 47 and O 21, R. 58, Civil P C. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected the objections summarily without any inquiry on the very date on which they were filed on the ground that they had been filed " with the evident intention to delay the sale."

There could be justification for the lower Court to adopt this course if the objection was one under O 21, R 58 and if the Court considered that the objection had been designedly or unnecessarily delayed But it is clear that the objection in the present case was one covered by S 47, Civil P C as the objector was a party to the execution proceedings as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor This being the position, the lower Court was not justified in throwing out the objection without considering it on the merits. The order of the lower Court is clearly wrong I set it aside and remand the case under O 41, R 23, Civil P C with directions to re-admit the case under its original number and to dispose of it according to law The appellant will get her costs for the appeal from the respondent. The other costs will abide the event
